Then on Saturday, the FEO said that dealers whose allocations were cut 15 per cent below a 1972 base level could boost their price starting next month. The energy office also said teams were being sent to 20 states and the District of Columbia to review data to ensure accuracy so the FEO can decide whether to shift gasoline from possibly well-supplied states to others in short supply.

R.I. stations may strike

PROVIDENCE (AP) - A number of Rhode Island service station operators are considering a week long shutdown to protest the current gasoline situation here, according to the head of the Eastern Seaboard Dealers Association.

Irving Guyette, association, president, said a delegation of gas station operators are seeking a meeting today or Tuesday with Gov. Philip Noel concerning gas allocations and government policies.

Guyette said about 200 gas station workers from all over the state attended an impromptu meeting in Warwick Sunday and urged that the meeting with the governor be sought.

The dealers will proposed a five point program to Noel, he said, refusing to disclose the proposals.

Guyette said the dealers were more upset with federal energy policies than with state regulations.

Tourist help

PITTSFIELD (AP) — John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, says he will ask the six New England governors to approve a plan to help the tourist industry cope with the fuel shortage.

Geary said the winter ski business has already been adversely affected by the gasoline shortage, and he has come up with a plan to aid the summer tourist industry.

Motels and hotels would issue validated cards to guests checking out of facilities under the plan. The cards would be presented to gasoline station operators in order for vacationing motorists to fill up with gasoline for the return trip home.

Solzhenitsyn worries about his archives

before they are allowed out of Russia.

Solzhenitsyn's wife, Natalya, their three children, a stepson and Solzhenitsyn's mother-in-law plan to join him as soon as he finds a place to live.

"If one is to believe the statements of members of the Soviet government, my family will be let go without hindrance," he said. "But, without my presence, for two women with four children, it is not easy to liquidate an existence of many years, to pack up, to get moving, to find the moment when none of the children are ill."

Ignat, their 17-month-old son, has been sick with a cold for about a week.

As to his future home, Solzhentisyn said Switzerland had received him warmly and added he had invitations from other countries.

"I am most sincerely grateful to all those who invited me," he said. "The decision will depand on where I will be able to find, in a short time, rather spacious, calm quarters with some land, convenient for work and for health."

He said all his life, he had "lived without a house, cramped. I could not reconcile working conditions with family life. In the years to come, at least I would like to achieve that."

The German news magazine Der Spiegel said Solzhenitsyn has already rented a country home 12 miles south of Zurich. It said he wanted to remain initially in the vicinity of his lawyer.

As to the future, Solzhenitsyn, who spent 11 years in Stalinist camps and exile in Soviet central Asia, declared: "I am an optimist from birth and do not consider my exile final."

How his return to Russia would ever come about, Solzhenitsyn said was impossible to predict. But he added: "Wonders never cease in our lives."

Catholic schools no refuge for racism

BOSTON (AP) - Roman Catholic elementary schools here have been asked by the Boston Arcdiocese School Board not to accept transfer students whose parents are seeking refuge from public school integration.

Brother Bartholomew Varden, archdiocesan superintendent of schools, said he has requested administrators of 262 schools in the district to refrain from accepting such transfers and said a detailed statement would be issued this week.

Boston is under a state Supreme Judicial Court order to racially balance its schools by September.

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. Francis Lally, pastor of Sacred Heart Church, said Sacred Heart School has received about three times the normal number of transfer applications.

"The most obvious concluson one can make is that the present Boston school situation is putting pressure on the parochial schools in a manner that hasn't been felt in the past," Msgr. Lally said.

He said his school will interview parents of children requesting transfer "to see if their commitment is to a Christian education or to keep their children out of mixed schools."

EPA plans to implement Boston parking ban

BOSTON (AP) — The federal Environmental Protection Agency plans to implement a parking ban in the greater Boston area despite objections from employers who say workers need to drive their cars into the city, according to an EPA official.

John A.S. McGlennon, regional administrator, said reduction of parking facilities is needed to meet the requirements of the Clean Air Act of 1970 and to help reduce hydrocarbon emissions from motor vehicles in the 120 cities and towns that make up the Boston air pollution control district.

William J. McCarthy, counsel for the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, said the gasoline shortage has resulted in increased car pooling and use of public transportation and has eliminated the need for the parking ban.

"Motor vehicles are absolutely essential to meet the needs of both employers and workers," he said. "Public transportation is not at all available in large parts of the sprawling district."

McGlennon said the gasoline shortage is a temporary situation, and his agency is seeking more permanent solutions.

Mid-Cape may get bicycle trails

BOSTON (AP) — Arthur Brownell, state commissioner of natural resources, says his department is negotiating with the Penn Central Railroad to secure an 18-mile right-of-way on Cape Cod for a bicycle trail and bridlepath.

Brownell said the abandoned roadbed is being appraised by the state. Serious negotiations should be underway within three or four months.

It would cost between $6,000 and $8,000 per mile to convert the 60-to-80-foot wide roadbed into a trail with picnic areas and restroom facilities, Brownell said.

The proposed trail would run through Dennis, Harwich, Brewster, Orleans and Eastham.

The target date for completion of the trail is summer of 1975, Brownell said.

A Penn Central spokesman said the railroad is interested in selling the land.

Some officials have urged the state to buy the roadbed to prevent private developers from buying it and precluding the chance for rail service ever being restored to communities on the Cape.

None of the five communities affected by the proposed bike trail has expressed opposition to the plan. But Orleans Selectman Dean Howerton said his town has been negotiating privately with the railroad to buy the right-of-way for a town road.

Don Griffin, chairman of the Harwich Board of Selectmen, said no opposition has been expressed to the trail, but "there hasn't been a wholehearted endorsement of it, either."

Good news on campuses

MEDFORD, MASS. (AP) - The number of crimes reported on the Tufts University campus during 1973 dropped an average of 45.5 per cent, while the number of arrests increased 8.6 per cent over 1972, Tufts Police Chief Herbert Voye said on Thursday.

Voye attributed the decreased crime rate to an extensive campus crime prevention program that included high intensity exterior lighting, assignment of additional officers, installation of electric alarm equipment and dissemination of educational crime prevention material.

TUITION PLAN

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - A private business college, Johnson & Wales, has announced a guaranteed tuition plan for students.

Morris J. W. Gaebe, school president, said a student's tuition will remain at a constant level for the entire time he or she is continuously enrolled at the college.

The plan will allow students and parents to estimate costs over a one-to-four year period.

Literacy level prompts Bowdoins demand for writing samples

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) — Student illiteracy at Bowdoin College has prompted the prestigious liberal arts school to begain demanding writing samples from applicants.

Admissions Director Richard Moll, who announced the new admissions policy at a panel discussion Saturday, said some students, especially those from better-known secondary schools, were being cheated out of a chance to learn to write.

The writing sample will be a 45-minute supervised essay, Moll said, and the topic will be assigned on the spot by the applicants' high school English teachers.

Bowdoin took the step because the College Entrance Examination Board declined to reintroduce a writing sample in the College Board exams.

Many progressive high schools and "most prep schools, like Choate, are in the worst position of sending literate students here," Moll said. In many instances, "we are getting better prepared students from some less sophisticated Maine high schools."

"Some kids are being absolutely cheated in high school," Moll said. "One applicant called third in his class at a major Washington high school couldn't put a pen to paper."

English Prof. Herbert Coursen, another panel member, complained there were too many athletes among the "problem students."

Of 38 problem students in the freshman class," Coursen said, "we were high school athletes and 18 of them either had College Board verbal scores under 500 of a possible 800 or didn't submit scores."

In the late 1960s, Bowdoin made a highly publicized decision to allow students to withhold their College Board scores. At that time, the school explained that too much emphasis had been placed on tests.

Moll defended the admission of athletes as part of Bowdoin's "committment to unevenness in our classes and the assumption that those admitted at different levels of training can catch up after admission."

But Coursel said his department "is prepared to deal with literacy, not illiteracy, and that the range of literacy in some of his current classes was so wide he "didn't know what to do." Bowdoin has 1,150 students.

Parents feel ignored in baby's treatment

WESTBROOK, Maine (AP) - Concerned about their baby, the anguished parents of a deformed infant said yesterday the news media have distorted facts in the case.

"The newspapers have misconstrued the information," said Sgt. Robert B. T. Houle. "I don't know where they got their information from."

Houle's lawyer, Navy Lt. James Fryer, said the parents were upset because it was reported that the parents had refused to allow intravenous feeding of the baby. Fryer said it was not true.

"I would rather not go into details, not elaborate," Houle said Monday. 'My wife and I have discussed it, and we are still concerned about the baby. We more or less have decided not to say anything out of respect for the baby."

A Maine Medical Center spokesman said Monday that the deformed infant was in "poor condition." He refused to speculate on when a second operation would be performed.

A court-ordered operation last Thursday implanted a food tube in the baby's stomach. The second operation, which normally is done between 10 and 14 days after the first, would repair the throat, which does not connect with the stomach.

The baby was also born without a left eye and ear canal and several other deformities.

"We have had phone calls from all over the country, all the way from Texas, from people sympathizing with us," Houle said.

The Portland hospital took the parents to court when they would not consent to the operations. Superior Court Justice gave custody of the baby to a Portland lawyer and ordered the operation.

"I disagree with the judge's ruling," Houle said. "I feel that we as parents should be listened to."

Doctors say that if the infant survives, it could be blind, deaf, possibly mute, possibly palsied and may never be conscious, "as we know consciousness."

"Some people are calling us monsters because of this," said Houle, an Air Force recruiter. "But others are very sympathetic.

"I don't want to cause any big waves here, but apparently we're just the parents.

What kind of conduct by a public official constitutes an impeachable offense?

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee comes to grips this week with a crucial question: what kind of conduct by a public official constitutes an impeachable offense?

The decision it reaches — and it could be weeks before there is one — will go a long way toward determining whether the committee will recommend the impeachment of President Nixon.

On Wednesday the committee members are to receive a brief prepared by the staff that will examine the history of the impeachment provision in the Constitution, the way in which it has been used, and define in broad terms the nature of impeachable offenses.

The brief will represent primarily the views of John M. Doar, the head of the impeachment staff and Albert E. Jenner Jr., the chief minority counsel. As such, it will in no way be a statement of the committee's position.

Doar, a Republican who rose to prominence in the Justice Department under Democratic administrations, and Jenner, a Republican who supported a Democrat — Adlai Stevenson III of Illinois in his 1970 Senate race — have impressed committee members of both parties with their nonpartisan, professional approach to the investigation. "If Doar and Jenner agree on a definition it's going to be very persuasive with me," said Rep. William E. Hungate, D-Me.

Rep. Robert McClory, R-Ill., said "I'll probably be almost completely persuaded by the brief."

The question of what constitutes an impeachable offense has been an issue for almost 200 years. The Constitution uses the words "high crimes and misdemeanors."

The core of the question is whether the words refer to conduct punishable under criminal law, or whether they can include a broader range of misconduct dealing with the official duties of an office-holder.

From the precedents of previous House actions and from a compilation of impeachment material published earlier by the Judiciary Committee, it appears likely the forthcoming brief will support a broad definition of impeachable offenses.

Most of Nixon's congressional supporters are insisting he cannot be impeached for anything less than an indictable crime.

Researchers discover how antibodies protect Cholera

BOSTON (AP) — Researchers have discovered how intestinal antibodies protect against cholera, and they say this strongly suggests that an oral vaccine would give better protection than the injections now used.

The research conducted at Massachusetts General Hospital indicates that antibodies in the intestine can prevent the toxin released by cholera bacteria from attaching itself to the intestinal cell wall.

Stopping the attachment of this toxin, the researchers say, can therefore prevent the severe diarrhea and dehydration which can lead to death from cholera.

In a paper published yesterday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Science, the researchs say these animal reserach findings on how intestinal antibodies give protection underscore the need for an oral cholera vaccine.

The researchers argue that an oral vaccine would produce the greatest amount of antibodies in the intestine to combat the disease.

"We were able to specifically define the attachment of the toxin to the intestinal membrane and to show that antibodies combined with toxin from attaching," Dr. W. Allan Walker, the principal investigator said in an interview.

"What we are hoping to do is provide a way to produce antibodies which stay on the surface of the intestine to prevent attachment," he continued.

"It's as if the toxin has an attachment on it which hooks into a slot in the intestine. The antibodies essentially cover that attachment and prevent it from going into the slot."

Dr. Walker, chief of the pediatric gastrointestinal unit at Massachusetts General, said some experimental work on an oral vaccine is underway at several centers in the United States, but that the emphasis is on the cholera bacteria itself and not on the toxin and its reactions with antibodies.

Dr. Walker said he and his coinvestigators, Dr. Michael Field of Beth Israel Hospital and Dr. Kurt J. Isselbacher of Massachusetts General, feel that their cholera studies with rats validly applies to human beings.

The present cholera vaccine is an intramuscular shot which produced antibodies throughout the body, but does not concentrate them in the intestine where they apparently are needed, Dr. Walker said. Cholera is a local intesinal disease usually caused by drinking contaminated water and it should be treated locally in the body, he added.

Its symptoms include diarrhea, cramps, vomiting and collapse.

"The present vaccine is effective insofar as it can slow down an epidemic," Dr. Walker said, "But it is not so effective that we can eradicate the disease, as we did with polio.

"We used to think cholera was just a disease found in underdeveloped areas, but the recent outbreaks in Italy, West Germany and in small pockets of this country show that it is still with us," he said.

Successor chosen for Ford in Congress

By PIET BENNETT
Associated Press Writer

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Balloting in what the Democratic candidate billed as "a referendum on Watergate," voters chose a successor yesterday for the congressional seat vacated by Vice President Gerald R. Ford.

Republican State Sen. Robert VanderLaan, 43, was favored to win over 51-year-old Democratic attorney Richard F. VanderVeen in the special election to fill the 5th Congressional District seat.

Only about a third of the district's 260,000 voters were expected to go to the polls in 40 degree, overcast weather and political observers said a light voter turnout dimmed chances for an upset.

The two minor candidates in the race lost previous congressional bids.

Frank Girard, 47, a high school English teacher, tried for a fourth time as the Socialist Labor candidate, and Dwight Johnson, an advertising executive, ran again as the American Independent nominee after losing in 1972.

Ford endorsed VanderLaan for the seat he held for 25 years and which no Democrat has held since 1916.

Ford, who cast his absentee ballot from Washington last week, has said he did not consider his prestige to be on the line. In previous elections Ford consistently obtained more than 60 percent of the vote.

VanderLaan, the former Senate majority leader, conceded it had been "a very close race." But he maintained throughout the campaign that Watergate was not an indictment of the GOP and certainly not of himself or Ford.

VanderVeen, however, campaigned long and hard to make Watergate the central issue of the campaign. The Democrats collected at least $50,000 for the campaign, compared to $19,000 spent in 1972.

VanderVeen lost to Ford in 1958 and failed in two other tries for public office, including a recent bid to become mayor of his and Ford's home town, East Grand Rapids. The district, outside of Grand Rapids, is primarily rural.

The shortage of energy supplies in Mass. and New England is reaching disastrous proportions. "If meaningful and immediate steps are not taken, the effect on the citizens of New England and their economy will be nothing short of catastrophic," said Mass. D.P.U. Chairman Robert L. Meade in a recent letter to Federal Energy Chief Simon.

Meade compared the possible forthcoming economic disaster to 1929 and warned Simon that "camouflaging the problems will not make them disappear." The Department of Public Utilities leader also stated that New England is obviously "carrying a heavier share of the burden" caused by the oil shortage, in spite of repeated Washington statements that the burden would be carried equally. In the letter, Meade also stated that price roll backs and price-averaging alone would not bring about the level of economic relief which is "absolutely necessary to the Northeast." He suggested the Federal Gov. provide financial credits to industrial and utility companies in New England "to somehow equalize the Northeast's cost of oil" with energy costs in other parts of the nation.

> "The effects on the citizens of New England... will be nothing short of catastrophic."

"...Mass. is bearing a disproportionate share of the national gasoline shortage," said Gov. Francis Sargent in his recent letter to Simon. To support the contention, Sargent cited tax figures that show gas sales here are lower than they were a year ago, and they are down specifically because supplies are lower in Mass. The Governor again urged Simon to use his allocation powers to insure that Mass. will be fairly treated.

"I was stunned to learn that Mass. was not one of the states slated to receive an additional gasoline allotment," said Sen. Robert A. Hall (R-Third Worcester) in his recent letter to Energy Chief Simon.

"As a Republican State Senator, I assure you that the vast majority of my constituents will believe that politics are involved. I request that, if possible, you clear this situation up immediately. Your office will be unable to function if the people come to believe that your decisions are based on political pressure," stated Hall. The Senator called for the oil companies to be treated as public utilities. "They should be entitled to a fair but limited profit; their records should be public, and their operations and prices should be strictly controlled by the Federal Government."

The order by Energy Chief Simon that service stations stop giving preferred treatment to regular customers has been decried by House Majority Whip William Q. MacLean, Jr. (D-Fairhaven). Calling on Gov. Sargent to defend the service station dealer's right to operate his business freely, Rep. MacLean said, "If anyone is being discriminated against it is the service station dealer. As a result, everyone loses except the major oil companies that are reporting exorbitant profits. The forgotten dealer...is going out of business because of the Federal Energy Office's arbitrary edicts."

A statewide toll-free energy hotline has been called for a resolution filed by Sen. Irving Fishman (D-Newton-Watertown). The hotline would "coordinate governmental responses to consumer problems, handle complaints, organize conservation suggestions, and channel requests for priority allocations," according to Sen. Fishman. The resolution was adopted by the Senate on Feb. 11.

The Mass. unemployment rate rose to 7.3 per cent last December. Energy shortages accounted for one to two thousand of the 191,000 unemployed in mid-December, at which time these statistics were gathered by the Mass. Division of Employment Security.

On Jan. 22, 1973, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that abortions would be legal. Since then, a bitter struggle has arisen over that landmark decision.

Various right to life groups are conducting state and national campaigns to, in effect, reverse the Supreme Court ruling and once again make abortions illegal. In Mass., a resolution has been introduced into the General Court which would ultimately overturn the ruling. (See "For the people," Feb. 4). Nationally, right to life groups are especially working for passage of the Hogan Amendment. Presently in the U. S. House Judiciary Committee, the Hogan Amendment would prohibit all abortions by saying that the fetus is a legal person from the moment of conception.

At the same time, organizations are being formed to uphold the Supreme Court abortion ruling. In Boston, a Constitutional Defense Project (CDP) has been established, with support from family planning and womens' organizations. CDP will work to defend the abortion ruling and to defend the family planning programs and services, which are also under attack by right to life groups.

Commentary: Tragically, the abortion controversy is one that usually becomes very emotional and very personal. But, the question of an abortion should be a woman's private decision. Making abortions illegal won't stop abortions. Rather, abortions will simply become dangerous and difficult.

Perhaps right to life groups might consider dropping their anti-abortion efforts and work towards non-controversial goals. For example, perhaps right to life groups could work with other groups in helping to educate the public on preventing unwanted pregnancies. Also, prison reform and the War on Poverty are two items that most certainly could use the help of right to life groups. And, there are many other pressing, non-personal problems that desperately need attention from people willing to help. It would be a crime for organizations concerned about humanity to start spending time and money on lengthy battles to overturn legal decisions. Ultimately, no one would benefit.

A comprehensive state plan for drug abuse prevention, treatment and rehabilitation has been completed by the Governor's Drug Abuse Prevention Planning Council. The outline was produced in cooperation with the Dept. of Mental Health's Div. of Drug Rehabilitation.

Matthew P. Dumont, M.D., asst. commissioner for drug rehabilitation, said the document "is the most up-to-date and complete" statement of the needs and resources relating to drug abuse prevention in the state. He said that Mass. is ahead of many other states in terms of rehabilitation activities but that service needs and gaps still exist.

Highlights of the state plan call for —

1. A more intensive prevention effort through improved educational programs for drug dependents undergoing treatment.
2. More and better vocational rehabilitation and job training opportunities.
3. Increased facilities for the detoxification of barbituate dependency.
4. A special program for women who have drug problems.
5. Increased outreach activities to help persons through crises and aid in their referral to rehabilitation programs.

The plan, which took a year to complete, has been submitted to federal authorities in accordance with the Drug Abuse Office and Treatment Act of 1972. The action permits the state to receive an estimated $250,000 in funds to assist in reaching program objectives.

The skyrocketing costs of attending college could soon force many students to discontinue their education. In Mass., though, the dilemma of financing a college education may soon be largely corrected.

Students enrolled in any public or private college or technical institution in the state may eventually be able to receive financial aid through a Mass. Student Loan Office. Rep. Michael J. Daly (D-Boston) has filed a bill that would create such an office within the Board of Higher Education.

Repayment of loans made through such a Mass. Student Loan Office would not begin until 12 months after the student leaves or graduates from school. The repayment period for such loans would be ten years. Also, the Loan Office would give special consideration to those with financial hardship, or to any student who enters employment in a public service area. Rep. Daly explained that specifics on the principal and interest of such loans have not yet been determined. The state treasurer would float

The state treasurer would float bonds to the public to pay for the loans...Later this week, a hearing by the Committee on Education for this bill - House 2155 - will be scheduled.

Next week: Legislation affecting low-income students

Student judiciary: they're still waiting on the bench

By JAMES PAPPAS

Over the past few years there has existed on the constantly withering tree of student governance an innocuous branch called the University Judicial System. Although the system has evolved and changed over the years, its basic raison d'entre has remained somewhat intact; to provide a forum for arbitrating conflicts involving undergraduates.

Virtually any problem involving an undergraduate student or an organization controlled by undergraduates can be disputed in this judicial system. For example, a conduct problem such as being accused of shoplifting in the University Store is processed through this court. Anytime a person violates an established conduct norm, i.e. vandalizing or stealing university property, the logical place to resolve the issue is in our court system. If found guilty, a wide range of sanctions may be imposed, some of which can be quite harsh.

Leaving the area of individual misconduct for the time being, University Judiciaries also have jurisdiction over undergraduate organizations. All the activities and policies of these roups and their officials may be questioned in student court. If found to conflict with the Student Government Association established laws and procedures, these actions may be ceased and the appropriate sanction imposed.

The basic structure of this system approximates any other court. There exists a group of judges who hear the issues brought before them and rule first on the question of guilt and second on what sanction, if any, will be imposed. Secondly, a group of "advocates" prepare and pesent the issues to the court. Interestingly enough, all these people are undergraduates, working voluntarily. They put hours of training into mastering basic legal principles of due process, double jeopardy, etc. and the procedures of the system.

This training is aimed at maintaining some sense of sophistication and "professionalism". The atmosphere of the court however, is less formal than "real" courts, as an attempt is made to allow each facet of an issue to be introduced and examined. Procedural steps must be learned, but these procedures only approximate established legal procedures in an effort to minimize red tape.

Explanations of procedures are helpful to understand the system but the real purpose of this essay is not to describe the functioning of University Judiciaries, rather to impress upon the community the need for this system to be fully utilized. Up to now only a small portion of resources has been tapped. The bulk of the cases are shoplifting in the university store and whatever else an adminisistrator knowledgeable of the system chooses to bring to court. This is not, by any stretch of the imagination, representative of what the court could conceiveably do. In any instance of an alleged misconduct, an administrator, i.e. head of residence, has two options. First a head of residence may deal with the matter administratively, that is, make a personal decision on someone's guilt or innocense. Secondly, they may choose to bring the accused to Student Court. Although the latter follows democratic principles, most questions are decided administratively. Whether the reason for this is distrust of the system by administrators, or the lack of cases of sufficient soverity to be dealt with in court, the fact remains that when someone is accused of some violations, that person has the right to be brought to court and proved guilty.

On another level, administrators aren't the only people that can bring someone to court. Anyone can bring an undergraduate to court. To use only one example, if someone steals from a dorm room, or destroys something, the owner may bring that person to court. The court is empowered to instruct the defendant to make restitution. Our system therefore relies heavily on the individual whose rights have in some way been violated taking the initiative to make a complaint. There has been a glaring lack of participation of this kind. Although people violate the rights of others each day, rarely does anyone bring a complaint to court. The explanation of this which some offer is that no one wants to be the cause of someone else's criminal record. That may be valid for District Court but, there can be no sound reason for this with respect to Student Courts. Our court system is much less formal than District Court, and the records are entirely confidential. A defendant thus has no criminal record.

The tremendous possibilities of this system haven't been remotely realized. In the areas of institutional sexism and racism alone, no action has ever been initiated against any Student Organization for sexist or racist policies. The courts provide an excellent forum for such an issue to be aired. Yet through apathy and general ignorance we allow the situation to remain.

The main reason for the community is wide ignorance of the Judicial System is simply the fact that in most people's lives, court and indeed government is not something with which we have daily contact. Because of the infrequency of our encounters with courts and the government structure their workings remain a confusing mass of red tape and bureaucratic forms in triplicate. Student Government and Student Judiciaries represent just another part of this to most everyone.

However, University Judiciaries aren't as complicated and difficult to understand as it would initially seem. Working within the system requires knowledge of it; using the system only requires the initiative to write out a complaint. There are sufficient numbers of trained people to work in the courts (although anyone else is welcome), yet there is a glaring lack of personal initiative in cases being brought to court. A consciousness of the need and value of bringing cases to court must be fostered in the University community.

If we continue to ignore our court system, we can only expect it to grow weak and disband. If that happens, there will exist no effective student forum for dealing with internal undergraduate oriented problems. One consequence of this would be possible prosecution of alledged shoplifters at the Campus Center Store in District Court and the stigma of a criminal records added.

At present University Judiciaries are far from dead. On the contrary, great progress is being made in the direction of a strong Student Court. The crucial factor now is the degree to which the University Community uses the Court. To bring a complaint or find out if one would be valid, you need only come to 422c Student Union, the Attorney General's Office. If a complaint is being brought against you, then competent counsel can also be obtained there.

Leviathan spouts

To the Editor:

Johnny is bigger than Suzy. Johnny takes Suzy's lollipop. Mother reprimands Johnny and gives the lollipop to Suzy.

This rather elementary hypothetical situation reflects directly the very essence and nature of man. Endless examples throughout history could have been given re-enforcing the basic presumption: man is evil, man understands only power.

Perhaps to a great degree it is society's fault; yet, society must be viewed as a savior as well. Society, that in the United States in particular, has inbred in man a vicious competitive spirit of self-interest and preservation since youth. This is not to say the basic animal-like instincts weren't there. They were and still are.

Society has successfully channeled these energies within a framework of man-made mores and laws to help prevent chaotic mass rioting, looting, murder, and rape. For this, society is to be thanked.

That much-maligned ideal of "law" comes into play here as a safeguard supporting these so called "ethics" society has put down. Yes, it is laws that have saved the ignorant masses from their own devices. Laws daily bind two seemingly equal opposing forces; man and reason, into an unbreakable contract.

Perhaps now we can better understand why history has taken the course it has. Irrational man, with self-interest as the motivating force, finds it impossible to live in harmony with each other. One is the continual threat to the very existence of the other. So, the animal called "man" resorts to various means, no matter how unscrupulous, to achieve his ultimate ends of grandeur, wealth, and power at the expense of others. This tendency by man is continually being exhibited in a countless variety of ways: politics corporate affairs, the institution of prisons, etc.

By man's very nature, you will never see two persons who can fully know, love, or cooperate with one another. This statement is justified by looking beyond meaningless superficial, external motions of affection to an ulterior motive that consequently has self-interest behind it.

What does the future hold for man? You decide.

Rap on bum

To The Editor:

We live in a liquor oriented society. The most common coping mechanism in use today is a drink..or two..

There is nothing like a drink to cool you off-or even space you out-from time to time. Many people today prefer keeping a little glow on much of the time. That's okay too, if you like it that way, and you feel you can handle it.

Room To Move is concerned with those people who don't like it that way-who feel that there might be a better way of handling it.

Problem drinker, lush, periodic, chronic alcoholic-these are some of the labels. Definitions range from quite specific to very vague-and usually seem awfully impersonal. Volumes have been written research conducted, yet many questions arise in attempting to define alcohol abuse and alcoholism. Cause and cure is based primarily on empirical evidence.

Room To Move's thrust will be oriented toward the person, his or her relationship to alcohol and unique life style. Crisis counseling, short term and long term counseling are offered by various staff members at the drop-in center. An Alcohol Rap Session takes place in the Campus Center every Wednesday evening. Special alcohol-oriented workshops and seminars will be offered throughout the year.

If you feel that some work done in exploring your consumption of alcohol might be worthwhile, then consider Room To Move.

Et vous, Dr. Gage

To The Editor:

Last semester the members of Thatcher House asked Dr. Campion to come and live with them for a period of two or three days to experience dorm life as it now exists. He was to room in Thatcher and eat in Worcester D.C. The purpose of this was to facilitate knowledge on the part of the administration as to what dorm existence really is; what it feels like to stand in a line for a half hour for lunch and then again for dinner, or even to try to cook on the overcrowded facilities provided by the dorm.

Well, Dr. Campion never made it, so we in Crabtree House now extend this privilege to you, Dr. Gage. We do not insinuate that the administration is oblivious of what it is like down here. We only feel that first-hand impressions are better than those formed by reading a requisition sheet.

Please consider our request.

Teddy: come home

For the first time in twelve years it may be necessary for Edward Kennedy to become involved in state politics. It will be essential if he hopes to run for president in 1976.

To convince party leaders in other states that he is the most desirable candidate he must prove that he can lead the Democratic party in Massachusetts as well as the nation. He must also exhibit coattails. Coattails are the transfer of popularity from one candidate to another of the same party. This popularity transfers into votes on election day. For instance, in 1964 Lyndon Johnson swept other Democrats into office on his coattails, but in 1972 despite his tremendous victory, Richard Nixon was not able to help other Republicans. In Massachusetts Senator Kennedy has been in the same situation as President Nixon; he hasn't been able to help other candidates of his own party. In 1970 for instance he crushed his GOP adversary by 500,000 votes, yet the Democratic candidate for Governor lost by almost 300,000 ballots. In 1962 when Kennedy made his first bid for elective office his margin of victory was too small to produce any coattails. In 1964 despite his tremendous victory the GOP captured the state house.

Traditionally the Kennedy's have used Massachusetts as a power base, a home port. None of them were ever elected to serve in a local or state office. They have rarely been involved with the state Democratic party. There are two exceptions, however. In 1956 Jack Kennedy wrestled control of the state's delegation to Democratic National Convention from John McCormick, but this was to further his possible Vice-Presidential bid that year. In 1962 Ted Kennedy tried to dislodge Rep. Thompson, the Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives with the aid of Governor Peabody; this ended in a failure. The failure of the Kennedys to influence state politics has had some adverse effect on the Democratic party. Damaging primaries have assured Republicans general election victories in most gubernatorial contests. A blessing from Senator Ted to one of the candidates would not end the primary fights, but it might curtail the damage.

This year Senator Kennedy will have an opportunity to exercise some leadership skills. If a Democrat were elected governor after ten years of Republicans, it would boost his standing nationally. If he actively helped that candidate and was able to transfer some of the Kennedy magic to him, the victory would be extra special. The transfer of the Kennedy magic is difficult to master. In 1960 Jack was unable to do it and in 1966 Bobby tried but failed to use his charisma to help some fellow liberals. It may be that the Kennedy magic is so much centered around the Kennedy personality that a transfer is impossible.

The two Democratic candidates for governor, Robert Quinn and Micheal Dukakis, both have a chance to defeat Mr. Sargent. Sargent's popularity is down because of such policies as prison reform which were handled very poorly. Incidents like Park Plaza, where he was unable to convince members of his administration to approve the plan, have shown him to be a weak administrator. The Republican Party will probably help defeat the Governor by presenting a series of primary challenges. Sargent's activities on behalf of the graduated income tax have not endeared him to the business community, a traditional source of GOP support.

The Senator may not be able to endorse one of the two Democratic hopefuls before the primary, but he could put the Kennedy organization to work for him. After the primary Ted will have to work for the victor, but even before then, he must try to avoid the type of primary fight that has destroyed the Democrats in the past. Then he will be able to prove to party leaders in other states that he can help their candidates in 1976 and show he can be a forceful party leader.

Enemy of the people

Patricia Hearst is being held a "prisoner of war" by the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA). Alexander Solzhenitsyn was recently exiled from the Soviet Union. Both have something in common: The rationale behind the two acts that have affected their respective lives so drastically, hides behind the vague but tenuous phrase, "enemy of the people".

The Soviet Union used the same code of law to rid themselves of the eloquent and controversial novelist Solzhenitsyn, that they used almost fifty years ago to banish Leon Trotsky from his Russian homeland. If Lenin was the father of the revolution, Trotsky must have been at least the closest uncle. Yet in 1927, Trotsky was exiled from the Soviet Union by the Stalinist regime, using the code of law was invoked against Solzhenitsyn during his recent "trial".

...Russian roulette

Before last week, Patricia Hearst was known to a relatively small number of people; and then as newspaper tycoon Randolph A. Hearst's spunky individualistic daughter. Yet in the past week, all this has changed. Branding her father an "enemy of the people", Ms. Hearst was kidnapped as a "political prisoner" whose future depended on how her "enemy" father reacted to the SLA and their demands.

"Enemy of the People". The vague simplistic sound of it. The people have an enemy, and therefore that enemy becomes an "enemy of the people". As in other such related (but not as serious matters) we are faced with the question, "who decides?". Who decides who is an enemy of the people? When we deal with books and movies we are faced with that pressing question, "who decides what is obscene?" When we deal with the problems concerning racism, or what rights are guaranteed by the first Amendment, once again we are queried, and must ask ourselves, "who decides?"

The most chilling aspect of the concept of "enemy of the people" is this salient point: For there to be an enemy of the people, someone (or several people) must decide what factors make up an enemy. Who was Trotsky an enemy to? Probably not the Russian people, for often and over a long period of time he put his life on the line of the cause of the Revolution. Yet the product of the revolution, Stalin, after taking power upon the death of Lenin, convicted him as such. In all probability Trotsky was an enemy only to the paranoic and demented visions of Stalin, who like all self centered leaders (including our own President) went under the assumption that "what is good for me is good for the country".

Ironically the repressive bureacracy of the Soviet Union, and the terrorist minority of the SLA use the same terms to justify their actions.

As long as any group can oppress an individual, either through quasi-legality; or henchman barbarism, there can be no real hope for civilizations to progress closer to a reality of greater personal freedom, dignity, and moderate comfort in the existential sense of feeling free and secure in and with yourself and your environment. As long as a small minority of Arab terrorists can hold an airplane full of people as hostages in their war against "enemies of the people", or Nixon's plumbers can pry into the private lives of individuals because they are "enemies of the people" there can be no such hopes.

A week ago Randlph Hearst was a wealthy conservative newspaperman in California. But today he is more; much more. He is involved in a drama that could lead to setting a precedent. His daughter is being held. The SLA wants him to meet their demands. If he doesn't give in, there is a good chance that he will never see her again. If he gives in, there is a good chance that such kidnapping by small but violent "causes" will become very popular. It might be to 1974, what skyjacking was to 1971. The thought is a chilling one.

...Strange red comrades

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Leon Trotsky, and Randolph Hearst. Not the kind of names you might expect to find on any kind of list. However all three have been classified as an "enemy of the people" by someone at sometime.

Are you and enemy of the people - to anyone? If we are to live in a civilization and not a jungle we must move to wipe out such slogans and labels. For labels such as these are used by people who can never stand with honor, or strive for justice: People who hide behind the obscene generalities o polemics, and rationalize the most heinous and treacherous acts of our time.

The Collegian resumes the practice of running policy editorials in this space. Unsigned editorials represent the views of this paper.

If there is one thing that can safely be said about the UMass bus system it is this: we need it with the same intensity that a junkie needs a fix.

Without it we would fall apart; and to keep the metaphore alive..methadone by automobiles would not work.

The bus system has only one way to go. Bigger, and of course more costly.

Up the same alley in UMass society is the parking and towing system now being used. The parking system has caused its share of woes, but in all likelihood it will prevail as a fact of life along with the necessity to tow cars that are parked in such a way that they block the normal movement of emergency, service, and repair vehicles.

Amherst towing is presently contracted to do towing.

But we need them not at all.

Why?

Because we could do it ourselves. We could do it with the same efficiency. We could do it with less hassle. We could reduce the cost to violators considerably. We could eliminate an adversary relationship with Amherst Towing and its president "Tex" Jernigan who in the past has refused to give a Collegian reporter his name.

Furthermore if a profit should be made by the student operated enterprise it could be turned back into vital services needed by the commuters of the university such as the bus service, parking lot maintenance, or the towing service itself.

There are other benefits to a student operated towing service. A few more precious student jobs would be created. The Campus Center Garage, a perennial loser could increase its revenue by segregating an area for towed cars and charging violators their normal rate. A towed vehicle wouldn't have to be chased to North Amherst. Fees could be paid for by check.

In total the proposed idea is an infinitely better situation than exists now.

The Collegian looks to the Administration and Student Government to pursue this idea with vigor. Saving money and hassles for UMass students and personnel is a small portion of cure needed to remedy the low morale that is inherently characteristic of a large institution.

The tenants' share

To The Editor:

Every tenent in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts who has paid a security deposit on his apartment should have received from his landlord 5 per cent interest on this security deposit at the first of this year. You do not have to request it, you do not have to wait until you move out in June or August to receive it. Legally, your apartment management should voluntarily send you this money. However, if you have received the same run around that I have, according to the state Attorney General's office in Springfield, you can and should do the following things to get your money.

First, send your apartment management a letter requesting your interest. Keep a copy of the letter for your records. If you do not receive your money within a reasonable period, send a letter of complaint to the Attorney General's office in Springfield at 235 Chestnut Street, and state your complaint. The Attorney General's office will then attempt to obtain this money for you. The $20 you receive on your deposit of $400 might not seem like much. However, if every person in a large complex does not collect his interest, your management can easily make thousands of extra dollars on your money. So request your security deposit, and have a nice dinner or party on the money.

White male-washed

To The Editor:

I am writing in regard to the article of Jan. 31 -- "Two Hurt in Bluewall Fracas" on the front page of the Collegian. Since then I have searched the pages of the Collegian in vain for a follow-up story which would fill the missing details. The article distorts the situation by (1) referring to only one side of the incident and (2) by what it does not say.

Only the men involved and the injuries they sustained are mentioned. Only men are quoted. The women, referred to as "girls," are not specified by name, not quoted, and so, apparently were not asked their version of the story.

What it does not say is that one of the women was also badly hurt; that the women were black and men white; and that the incident started by the men hurling racist and sexist remarks at the women who retaliated in their own defense.

What is wrong with the whole situation is that women can't go into a place unescorted by men without being subjected to harassment. The fact that the women were black and the men white was an additional factor. It is a case of sexist-racist backlash.

Such incidents are occurring more and more frequently on this campus. The Collegian, as a newspaper of all the students, has the responsibility to search out and report all the factors in a story.

We don't need any more white-male-washed reporting.

U hungry? Forte Forget it!

To The Editor:

Being a weekend night and having no car, we decided to order dinner from the "Hungry U", who advertised free and quick delivery. Upon calling, we were told there would be a 30-minute wait.

Understanding that the weekends are normally busier, we called again after 1½ hours to trace our order. We were assured that it had gone out, and would be delivered in "just a few minutes." Thirty minutes later, when it still hadn't arrived, we called again to cancel it. Instead of apologizing and providing an explanation, as is normal business procedure, the man curtly told us that there was nothing that he could do. Our plans for the evening were ruined, and we had to find another place to eat. The order finally did arrive, we were told by a girl in the dorm, 3 hours after we had first called.

Now we know how the restaurant got its name. If everyone at UMass waited for their quick delivery, it would indeed by a "Hungry U". Please remember this the next time you order dinner. The Amherst Area has too few restaurants that deliver-let's not allow this unreliable and unbusinesslike establishment to capitalize - by ripping US off.

Mistrust the masses

To the Editor:

The "Great Deception" editorial column by A. Glace on 11 February makes me wonder: (1) about the curious mental processes of certain editorial writers, and (2) about the remarkable persistence of myths.

Viewing the energy problem as a sinister corporate conspiracy, Mr. Glace curiously concludes that the remedy is to usurp the Robber Barons and the government in favor of "working people who can make decisions in their own interest."

I wonder how Mr. Glace sanctifies the worker. The worker, after all, is in the minority: about 80 million of 205 million Americans work. Further, once this noble proletariat ceases working and begins to make policy decisions, they cease to be workers and become bureaucrats. And bureaucrats have their own interests, e.g., self-perpetuation, power, and comfort.

Mr. Glace seems to confide that the workers' government would bask in a communal flood of magnanimity and brotherhood. But recall that working communities vote most heavily for George Wallace, that working folk form lynch mobs, that working folk, in short, are capable of as much surliness, villainy, and mischief as the rest of us. We are never shown a causal connection between doing manual labor and exercising sound judgment.

Those who hold to the old Marxist myth of the noble worker will always be sadly disappointed if their hallowed dictatorship of the proletariat should ever gain positions of authority. The reason is that motivations are found in more complex things than income or "class." The pursuit of self-interest respects no boundaries of economic group. Greed, lust, chauvinism, bigotry, folly, and such are no less to be found among working folk than among the allegedly satanic directors of commerce and industry. This is no obscure metaphysical fact, but may be observed in ordinary experience.

The American Constitutional Convention had the best idea. Rather than entrust our destinies to the presumed good intentions of any class or personal dictatorship, we had best devise a system whereby the natural self-interests of each governing branch will tend to check the excesses of the others. Mr. Glace and like-thinking people assume that the problem is to put the "right" people in power. The real problem, however, has always been to guard against the arbitrary exercise of power and the inrestrained pursuit of self-interest. Unless such safeguards are upheld, we have every bit as much to fear from a government by the United Auto Workers as by "the Rockefellers and the Mellons" (to cite Mr. Glace's arch-devils).

No doubt those sunk as deeply as Mr. Glace in the bogs of self-deception and wishful thinking are beyond hope of recall by argument. But for the rest of us, it were best to cast a skeptic eye upon any such "remedy" to our problems as simply looking for different masters.

Student Senate

Discontent in senate publicity group says

Discontent and dissent are very much a part of the Student Senate this year, according to a senate group formed to publicize the legislative body's activities.

The group, called the Student Senate Communications Committee (SSCC) is a resource and public information arm of the Senate "set-up to guage the effectiveness of and the response to the Student Senate," according to a statement released by the group last week.

With an office on the balcony of the Student Union the group includes four student senators as coordinators, Dennis Perry, John O'Keefe, Barbara Bagley and Steve Kenney.

"Initially an internal agency, the committee has now expanded its operations to include a continuous system of feedback and information exchange, assistance to all components of the university community, orientation and other services to student senators, methods for presenting Student Senate priorities directly to the student community and building support of an commitment to their programs," the group statement said.

Spokesmen for the SSCC and for the Collegian said last week the group will regularly contribute columns and information on Senate activities to the newspaper for publication.

Living in the past, the Senate has failed to recognize the crippling effect of its own powerlessness — reduced by infighting and fierce competition, it was inevitable that this debating society should come to a end. The vigor was there, but the determination was not.

"The rebellious spirit, however, continues in earnest along with a sense of concern, commitment and involvement, all the more lending credibility to the Student Senate of the Student Government Association as a champion of student causes. The resolute Senators have raised such volatile issues as reorganization, student rights, decentralization, food services, rents and fees, student-faculty-administration relationships, housing, admissions, financial aid, tuition, women's and minority's rights.

The School of Education is currently operating under a curriculum process called Fexible Curriculum whereby learning experiences do not necessarily conform to the three hour a week semester long University standard. Consequently, throughout the semester various learning experiences become available that may or may not have been communicated at the time of registration.

Many learning experiences will be starting in the next two weeks which still have space available for additional enrollment. These learning experiences will be offered in the areas of Humanistic Applications, Transdisciplinary Education, Education Planning and Management, and Education Policy Studies. Students desiring information on the specific courses to be offered should contact the School of Education Registration and Advising Offices on the first floor of Hills House South.

Dance theatre

The Alwin Nikolais Dance Theatre will be in residence here Thursday through Saturday.

The Nikolais Dance Theatre, which had its beginnings in the Henry Street Playhouse on the lower East Side of New York City, has reached international fame, and the Company regularly performs in theaters throughout the world.

Precinct III - 3 vacancies for three-year terms.

Precinct IV - 16 vacancies for three-year terms; 1 for two yrs.; 1 for one yr.

Arica weekend

Last year "Psychology Today" called the Arica Institute "the nearest thing we now have to a university for altered states of consciousness." Early this month Arica set up shop in Amherst with a two-day training at the Lord Jeffery Inn. The Institute reported a good response, and is offering their "Open Path Weekend" again this Saturday and Sunday at the Lord Jeff.

The Amherst branch of the Arica Institute will soon be moving into new quarters at No. 1 Cook Place in downtown Amherst. Until then they can be reached at 634-5504 or at Box 174, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

The Stop & Shop Companies
Commitment to the Consumer

How? Since our mini-pricing* specials are all-week specials, you can food shop any day that's convenient without missing really important savings.

You don't have to come early in the week to take advantage of a few specials—then shop again the weekend for the rest of the specials, as in a lot of other supermarkets. You'll find all the great values, all week long, at your Stop & Shop.

Try these other energy-saving tips, too: Plan your shopping trip during hours when traffic is lightest. If you have other errands in the vicinity of Stop & Shop, do them when you do food shopping. Plan more family shopping trips with everyone piling into the car to do their errands. It saves extra trips, saves extra fuel . . . and it can be more fun!

More families spending more time at home . . . doing more things together — that can save a lot of energy! And what a heart-warming thought!

Student runs for Selectman

Kenneth Garfield, a third year student at Hampshire College has announced his candidacy for the Amherst Board of Selectmen. The 20-year old candidate issued the following statement:

"I am running for this office because, today, the town of Amherst is split in two. The townspeople and their government ignore the students, as evidenced by the fact that no student presently serves on the Board of selectmen. The students at the 3 colleges ignore the townspeople, and town government. The mutual ignorance is fast becoming a mutual distrust.

"This is an unfortunate situation. Amherst is a truly great town, in terms of physical beauty, and the talents and resources of its citizens. It could be even greater if townspeople and students came together for the common good of our community. In that sense, my candidacy is a real attempt to create such a coalition."

In his statement, released to The Collegian last week, Garfield said his candidacy will deal with the crucial issues of town growth, police policies, liberalized drug laws, and the issues involved in construction of a nuclear power plant ten miles north of Amherst in Montague.

"With townspeople and students representing our community, I know that Amherst can become a symbol for the rest of the country of how local government should and could be run. This is the purpose of my candidacy, and the eventual goal, if elected of my service to Amherst," Garfield said.

Garfield is majoring in journalism and political science at Hampshire College. He was born and raised in the New York metropolitan area.

Lots of drugs MMS says

Statistics released by the Massachusetts Medical Society (MMS) reveal that in Massachusetts alone, there are 250,000 alcoholics, 110,000 barbituate addicts, 95,000 amphetamine users and 27,500 heroin addicts. Cigarette smoking is the greatest cause of preventable death, and over 60,000 Americans will die of lung cancer this year. The MMS points out that the public needs to be reminded of the harmful effects of these pollutants and that the damage they cause cannot be over estimated.

The MMS urges the public to stop drinking, smoking, drug abuse, fad dieting, reckless driving, and eating junk foods. In fact, any individual can prevent up to 50 per cent of his "normal" health problems by taking care of his health.

As Bentley P. Colcoek, M.D., President of the Massachusetts Medical Society explained, "Many people believe that doctors can cure anything these days with all their modern equipment and methods.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio is feared and revered—natives of this sign have secret appeal—they also have hypnotic eyes and, in many instances, loud voices.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Friends may be well-meaning and promises could flow like water. However, it is best to be discriminating. Sweet nothings in your ear amount to zero. Key is to know what it is you need—to go after what is substantial, not a mere whim.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Results follow sincere, dedicated efforts—you will hit the mark. Know it and accept responsibility. Don't run away from task, assignment or opportunity. Say "yes" to challenge. Professional superior is ready to accept you as equal.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with journey, study, ability to perceive future trend. Broaden horizons. Get rid of burden which is not your own. Finish task. Deal with Aries, Libra individuals. Highlight personal philosophy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concern may be evident in connection with savings, joint accounts. Direct approach serves your best interests. Get to source. Don't beat about bush; say what you mean—especially about money. Mate, partner is involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent public relations. Win your way. Avoid forcing, chiding, making demands. Wait and see; being patient now serves your basic purpose. Gather information. Analyze material. Refine techniques. Pisces plays key role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentrate on basic issues. Leave frivolity to others. Social contacts are fine, but those who waste your time should not be given free rein. Hold yourself high and value your assets. Then others will follow suit. Sagittarius, Gemini individuals figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Check details. Obtain valid hint from Virgo message. Accent is on creativity, change, dealings with opposite six. Strive to understand your own emotions. Then you will be better equipped to deal with responses of young persons.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Discussions could revolve around ultimate goal, residence, property. Gemini, Virgo persons seem to be involved. Reach agreement about escrow, investment, payments and collections. Clever associate may be "too smart" for present project. Means seek simplicity, not complicated procedures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent is on how you develop ideas. Those who flatter you may have ulterior motives. Avoid trying to be too many persons to too many people. Means be what you are—if you are yourself you cannot go wrong.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Emphasis is on income, money, possessions, debts and payments. Avoid self-deception. Deal with Pisces, Virgo persons. Insist on facts, not rumors. People who are free-and-easy want to be that way with your resources.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Cycle is high; take initiative. Be confident. Assert yourself. Insist on your own ways, style. Lead rather than follow. Emphasize your views, opinions. Your judgment, intuition now are on target. Act like you know it. Authority figure is in your corner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be discreet. Don't tell all. Hold something in reserve. Aries, Libra persons are in picture. Some, who are definite, insistent, are trying to cause you to throw caution to winds. Be mature. Maintain your own peace. One behind the scenes is working in your behalf.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, intuitive, not always easy to get along with, somewhat of an egotist and due to make important family adjustments. In September, domestic lifestyle is changed. If single, you could marry this year. Married or single, there culd be change of residence. You draw to you many born under Leo and Aquarius.

The man behind the mask-Chick Rheault

By RICH SEVIERI

The only time you see his face is when he makes a perfunctory skate around the rink before assuming his position. Chick Rheault then occupies himself with the housework around the cage that is part of his craft and dons the mask. He's ready now for another night of action in the position which is perhaps the most responsible and dangerous in all sport, the hockey goalie.

"When I was 10," recalled Chick, "a friend called and asked me to take his place as goalie in a South Boston Youth Hockey game. The coach told me all I had to do was stand in there and let the shots hit me. That's how I got started as a goalie and I really liked it."

What followed Chick's first encounter with net-minding were long afternoons and street lighted Southie nights preventing a tennis ball from hitting the front steps of a three decker. Chick also rink ratted at the numerous rinks around Boston hoping for a team to show up without a goalie.

Rheault was recruited by UMass hockey coach Jack Caniff after 3 standout years at Christopher Columbus High in Boston. Kevin Walsh who's now publicity director for the New England Whalers helped Chick considerably while coach at Columbus.

Chick's first 2 years at UMass were spent playing behind his next door neighbor from Southie, P.J. Flaherty.

P.J. and I never got along when we were growing up in Southie," said Chick. "We were always arch rivals. While he was here we got along great. He was the one who turned me on to my major, Elementary Ed. and helped straighten out some rifts between myself and Coach Caniff. P.J.'s loaded with class and poise, right now he's doing well with Dayton in he International Hockey League."

Chick enjoys working with kids and has spent 2 semesters student teaching fourth graders in Chester. He hopes one day to teach in the inner city. It was on his way back to UMass from Chester last February 23 that Chick's hockey career almost came to a rapid end.

My motorcycle went out from under me," explained Chick. "I ended up with a separated right shoulder, a dislocated left shoulder, and a hole in my knee the size of a golf ball."

Chick spent the summer working himself back into shape. He played handball at the L street Bath House to strengthen his injured shoulders and ran along Pleasure Bay for his legs. An October operation seems to have brought the left shoulder almost back to normal.

"I'm basically a stand up goaltender," says Rheault. "Because of my size (6' 2", 195) once I'm down I'm slow to get up. I rely more on reflexes and positioning than anything else. After a goal is scored on me I try to run an instant replay of where everybody was so we can try to rectify it. Deflections like the 2 in the Yale game off on my own men are the most frustrating part of the job."

AN UNCHARACTERISTIC BREATHER -- Defensive lapses by his teammates sometimes force Rheault into uncompromising positions.

Chick feels the intersession layoff and the fact UMass has no rink of its own accounted for the Minutemen's mid-season slump.

"We were peaking after the trip to Norwich and Middlebury," said Chick. We'd won 5 straight and came back here and had 10 days without any ice at all. It's not Coach Caniffs fault, he's been fighting for a rink since before I came here. We're down to our last dozen sticks right now and he'll have to fight to get money for them."

"This team is young," says Rheault who is one of the 3 seniors, "but it has the resiliency to bounce back and get a good playoff spot." Tim Howes and Mike Merchant have had outstanding freshmen years. And there's alot of spirit left in this team yet. Guys like John Binkoski, our short relief ace, are what make this game worth playing. "He's a 3 year JV, always a backup goalie, but you can count on him when times are bad."

Playing goal is an emotional and nerve wracking business. It usually takes Chick awhile to unwind after a game. "I can never get to sleep before 1:30 or 2," admitted Chick, "but I'm lucky because the girl I live with doesn't give a damn about hockey." "All she cares about is if I'm in one piece. From her perspective I've realized that there's more to life than just hockey."

Rheault is on the negotiating list of the New York Islanders. "Their scouts were at the Providence and Yale games," said Chick, as he rubbed his hand along a prematurely reclining hairline he added, "two of my worst."

"We haven't talked money and they may just offer me a chance at their tryout camp in September. If it comes to a conflict between the tryouts and a teaching position, I'd rather teach. The '76 Olympic Team is another option I'd like to keep open. Teaching would be better than working on the docks in Southie telling everybody how close I came to making it."

UCLA making excuses

By JACK STEVENSON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cut down on the Oregon Trail, the UCLA basketball Bruins face a tough job battling back to defend their National Collegiate title.

Coach John Wooden's Bruins, beaten by both Oregon State and Oregon over the weekend, are now in the rather unfamiliar position of sharing first place in the Pacific-8 conference.

Both UCLA and arch-rival Southern California have 7-2 records — the Trojans of USC having lost to Washington State and UCLA but winners against Oregon and Oregon State in their invasion of the Northwest this past weekend.

Wooden and his players disagreed on the troubles. Some players felt changes made by Wooden during the week preceding the Oregon trip had helped lead to the downfall.

On the flight home, the coach and All-American center Bill Walton were in private conversation for an hour at Walton's request.

Then Wooden called a practice for Monday, usually a day off for his Bruins, and it was noted that not since 1966 had UCLA lost back-to-back games. That also was the only year since 1963 when the Bruins didn't win the NCAA championship.

"In my opinion, it was the turnovers that were directly responsible for our defeats this weekend," said the coach and many television fans could agree — still wondering about the unbeatable team that dropped the ball and threw it away with carelessness not expected from a UCLA club.

After all, the Bruins had won seven straight collegiate titles, nine of the last 10, and the current outfit had 88 victories in a row before being beaten at Notre Dame 71-70. They avenged that loss.

But no one expected both Oregon State, a .500 club, and Oregon, which was 5-3 in the conference, to turn in the solid victories. Oregon State started the scalping 56-51 and Oregon finished it off 61-57.

Wooden, nicknamed the Wizard of Westwood after his phenominal successes, pointed out UCLa still has an 18-3 record with five games remaining — the finale against USC.

European hoop struggling

By JOHN VINCOUR

BRUSSELS (AP) — A European professional basketball league extending from Paris to Tel Aviv, to be stocked largely with American players, is struggling for life.

An organizational meeting March 8 is expected to produce an official announcement of its formation and the names of its first franchises. The American Basketball Association and its president, Mike Storen, are involved in the initiative, providing the organization and know-how.

"Basketball is at a critical point in Europe now," said Guy Van Den Broeck, coach of the Belgian Olympic team and Storen's representative on the continent. "It has become a very popular sport that could be a major sport like soccer or cycling. But it's reached a certain level where the spectacle itself must improve or the interest is not going to keep growing.

Van Den Broeck says the league would run from October to April with teams playing an average of two games a week. The ideal number of teams would be eight, he said, but the league might limit litself to six teams during its first year.

Wilkes whomps matmen

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Staff Wrestling Writer

It was a disappointing evening for the Wilkes College wrestling team. They handled UMass to a tune of 37-9, but they did something they aren't used to doing — wrestling in an empty gym.

"Man, do you people need some fans," said Wilke's Co-Captain and 150 pounder Mike Lee. "It's like we traveled six hours and were really expecting a lot of kids because this is about the biggest school we wrestle and there was nobody out there."

Mr. Lee observed the first rule of New England wrestling — it is not a good draw, no matter who you have as an opponent. In all fairness to girl friends, parents and a few visiting Rhode Islanders there were a few in Boyden Auxilary gym, but nothing close to the five thousand the Colonels are used to wrestling in front of.

If it bothered them, one would never have guessed it watching them wrestle. Except for UMass victories at 167 and heavyweight, the Colonels controlled the outcome of the match with three pins, a default and a superior decision out of ten bouts.

If they were weak at any aspect of wrestling, that too was a mystery as they dominated on their feet and on the mat. Rick Mahanski started them off with a big 19-3 win over Joe Phillips at 118. Phillips got the first takedown and an escape but that was it as Mahonski used a Turk ride to good advantage and racked up the points. UMass' Larry Reynolds jumped out to a four point lead over Wilkes super-frosh, Lon Balum, but saw that falter and collapse as Balum edged him 6-4. At 134 Minuteman Doug LeMire found John Chakmakas devastating with a single leg takedown and dropped an 8-2 decision to him.

Al Elmont found that it takes a little animal to be an All-American as Wilkes other Co-Captain Arty Trovei was all over Elmont to finally put him away in the second period. UMass Steve Jabaut looked pretty good against Lee at 150, despite losing a 9-4 decision to him. Lee used his knee pull to a good advantage but found that Jabaut was tough at a single leg.

It looked like UMass would finally get on the score board in th 158 pound bout as Cliff Blom was ahead of Gene Ashley. They were locked up on the mat fighting for control when Ashley pushed forward quickly and Blom dislocated his knee. It isn't bad enough to keep him out too long but did give Wilkes six points for the default. Captain Steve Benson wrestled his finest bout in a UMass uniform as he ponnelled Wilkes 167 pounder 19-3, before pining him with forty seconds left in the bout.

The Minutemen host W.P.I. tonight at 7:30. The only lineup changes will be at 134 as Dick Muri goes in, 150 where Don Rice will fill in as Jabaut goes up to 158, and 142 where Russell Chateauneuf rejoing the lineup.

Wildcat swimmers drown, Minutemen go to town

The UMass swimming team continued its reversal of last years 1-10 misfortunes by beating New Hampshire in their own pool at Durham, disregarding a long bus trip and the brackish condition of the water. They grounded UNH 75-35, garnering ten firsts and six seconds in thirteen events, upping their record to 5-4, putting it above .500 for the first time of the season.

Good performances were turned in Ben Crooker, Kuncan Lamas, Joe Hebert, George Kwiecen and Dave Boucher. Taken as a whole the team's times have been better. Crooker, for example, probably found it hard to push himself when he beat his nearest opponent by six laps with a 11:16.7 in the 1000 yd. freestyle. Scott McNabb, Dave Bouccher, Joe Herbert and Spencer Sullivan easily won the 400 medley relay in 4:07.4. George Kwiecen turned in a solid performance, 2:19.8 to win the two hundred yd. backstroke. Freshman Dave Boucher continued his undefeated skein in the 200 yd. breaststroke clocking 2:25.7. His time was above his best but again he easily won his event as did Dick Blaisdell in the 100 yd. freestyle at 53.5. Blaisdell also took second in the 50 yd. freestyle.

Ron Boucher, Scott McNabb and Carl Zulick took second places in the 500 freestyle, 200 backstroke and 200 individual respectively.

Right now Coach Malemed is anxious to get ready for today's tri-meet against Central Connecticut and Amherst which he feels will give him a better idea of what his charges can do.

Swimwomen 'dash' to 6th

By MDC STAFF

Led by a record breaking performance by Mary Ellen Dash, the UMass "swimmin women" amassed 182 points to nail down a solid sixth place out of twenty-two colleges and universities competing this weekend in the New England Intercollegiate Swimming and Diving Championships in Orono, Maine. Bowing only to powerful Springfield, Southern Connecticut, Yale, Maine, and UVM, the UMass women splashed to their highest finish ever in championship competition.

"Melon" Dash became the first individual New England Champion for Umass as she powered her way to a victory and New England record in the 200 yard individual medley with a time of 2:21.1. Dash also took second in the 100 yard butterfly and sixth in the 400 yard freestyle.

Other high scorers for UMass included freshman Cindy Whiting who placed sixth in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle events. Also turning in a solid performance was diver Carol Canterbury, as she took the sixth spot in the one meter diving competition. Junior Laurie Seluk, showing her usual versatility, swam to an 11th place finish in the 200 I.M., 14th in the 50 butterfly, and 10th in the 100 free.

Backstroker Jean Franchebois sprinted to an 11th place berth in the 50 and 100 yard events, while middle distance specialist Kathe German earned 16th place in both the 200 and 400 yard freestyle events.

UMass relays also grabbed points as the 200 yard medley relay team of Jean Franchebois, Diane Perry, karen Johnson, and Roxanne Balducci took 13th position. The 400 yard freestyle relay team of Laurie Seluk, Carol Griffiths, Cindy Whiting, and Melon Dash copped the third place medal losing only to strong Springfield and Yale.

Coach Pat Griffin said of the team's performance: "We've only just begun. UMass women's swimming is finally on the map in New England and considering that we have dual meets this year with four of the top five schools in New England, I think the team can be very proud of its performance this season."

The team travels to UNH on Thursday and to Southern Connecticut on Monday to conclude the dual meet season. On March 1 and 2, UMass will compete in the Eastern Regional Collegiate Swimming and Diving Championship at Springfield College.

Gymnmen 'ring out' victory over Navy

By WALT POWERS
MDC Staff

Bill Brouillet likes to practice a routine before he throws it in a meet. Take the double-back somersault off the parallel bars. He started practicing this difficult routine over a year ago, but it was not until Saturday afternoon's meet against Navy that he actually used it in league competition. For UMass, it couldn't have come at a better time.

Up until the parallel bars, neither team performed like it wanted to win the meet. After battling the three best teams in the East in three successive weeks, The Minutemen had trouble getting excited about a crew of Midshipmen in the midst of a disappointing season, and this lethargy, coupled with nagging injuries to Gene Whelan and Steve Scuderi, nearly led to a Navy upset.. It was emblematic of the quality of play that the meet turned on by both team's weakest event.

That event was the still ring competition. After Navy had built up a surprising .35 lead on the floor and pommel horse, UMass rode solid ring routines from Bill Brouillet, Pete Lusk, and Gene Whelan to a 1.05 lead at the halfway point. A .15 win on long horse vaulting increased the margin, but that was the final UMass victory of the afternoon.

Bruce Griffin and Plebe Pete Wdowiarz led the Middies back on the parallel bars, and a big margin would have positioned them perfectly for a meet-winning domination of the high bar. But Bill Brouillet, the junior all-around, wanted nothing to do with that.

The double back somersault is an all-or-nothing trick. If landed, it is spectacular; if missed, it is a humiliating face-flop resulting in a certain low score. Brouillet began to practice the trick a year ago, but it was not until last week that he felt confident enough to use it in a meet.

Steve Scuderi's quick jumps of the bars garnered him an 8.75, then Gene Whelan, who alternated between mediocre and spectacular throughout the afternoon, threw a surprisingly low 7.6. Brouillet then calmed the capacity Boyden crowd with his somersaulting 9.25, and other than Gene Whelan's flawless 9.5 on the high bar, the meet was over.

The 157.95—157.10 victory over last year's Eastern League runnerups was the most important win of the season for the Minutemen, and only their fourth ever against the Midshipmen. In their biggest seasonal rivalry UMass takes on the Springfield Chiefs in Springfield Wednesday night in a battle that will decide fourth place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League.

JV's devastate URI

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

It was like the Atom Bomb vs. Hiorshima, or God vs. Sodom and Gomorrah. A complete wipe-out.

The UMass JV's annihilated Rhode Island Saturday night during a thirteen-minute first half barrage in which they scored 21 (yes, twenty-one) straight points and 29 out of the 33 points tallied in that stretch.

It was 10-10 at the start of the destruction. When the smoke cleared, the scoreboard read 39-14. The Rams limped the rest of the way to a 78-57 loss.

The phenomenal streak was much the work of Gary Kapinos, a consistent Minuteman forward all year, who went totally bananas in the first two-thirds of the game. He burned the cords for 19 points.

Glenn Cooper matched the point total of the bespectacled Kapinos. These two led the UMass charge usually fronted by Billy Santos and Arnold Johnson.

Johnson wasn't far behind the leaders, however, as the 6'6" center went to the basket like General Sherman going to Atlanta, and wound up with 16. And he received some applause when he left the game from fans appreciative of his tiger-like board work.

For the shell-shocked URI survivors, Tom Altschuler and Don Duarte reached double figures, with 11 and 10 respectively. Dick Lamp turned in some tenacious defensive play on Billy Santos, and held the sophomore guard to a mere 5 points.

Strangely, the Rams played better than UMass after the deluge. However, no one noticed the URI 43-39 trash time advantage, as fidgety fans took more notice of P.A. announcements for cars with lights on (Massachusetts registration, K54-054) than what was happening on the court.

The JV's now face a home and home series against Dartmouth, with the first game at the Cage tonight. Game time: 6:00 p.m.

Netwomen press stifles Vermont

By LINDA MACKLER

The UMass women's basketball team edged the University of Vermont 49-47 Sunday night with a hard-earned victory.

Both offensive teams started slow; the score in the first quarter being only 9-8. With 4:05 left in the game, UMass took the lead and never lost it.

Center Pat Glispin returned to the line-up after a two game absence, and stated, "The key to the game was UVM's inability to break our press."

Joanne Smith's performance stimulated the team. She played most of the game and never slowed down. She was hustling, was all vver the floor, and made the press work.

Jenny Edminster was the leading rebounder with nine. She also was the leading scorer, sinking 13 points. The team, however, is going to have to work harder in their next two games. They face Worcester State College Tuesday and the University of New Hampshire Thursday.

"Talent alone" lifts netmen by URI, 75-66

"They defeated us on talent alone, nothing else," said URI coach Jack Kraft. "I would agree," concluded Jack Leaman. "Statistically we didn't look that good, but as a team we did get the job done."

By EARLE BARROLL

That was Saturday night at Curry Hicks Cage in a nutshell. The Minutemen DID shoot a paltry 39 per cent from the field. John Murphy was all of six for 22. Al Skinner was uncharacteristically four of nine. But in the end they did have the quality and they did get the job done, 75-66, over Rhode Island.

Jack Leaman: "We did get the job done."

Which means that UMass is now 17-4, 8-1 in the Yankee conference and nearing that title with three league encounters to play. The Minutemen have won three of three in their current home stand. And with the recent stumblings of Syracuse the third at-large slot in the NCAA is still open. "I honestly think we still have a shot at that spot," demanded Leaman.

"UMass has to be considered for the NIT," said Kraft, who went to 11 post season tournaments as a coach at Villenova. "Right now I don't think UMass is as good as Boston College and I'll hold judgement until we play UConn this week."

This was a vastly improved Rhode Island team the Minutemen defeated. Nothing in the realm of trial-horse stuff. They had beaten an "alphabetical other" in Marshall by 20, stopped UConn by ten in triple overtime and nearly upset Quaker City Champ Temple (56-52) at the Palestra in recent weeks.

"Jack Kraft has done a good job at Rhody," said Leaman. "My players are finally finding out what it's like to play together," noted Kraft. And in fact, his Rams outexecuted Leaman's cagers for six more field goals on Saturday night, but apropensity for fouling sent the Minutemen to the line 27 times — for 23 points — while the Rams themselves had a free toss a mere six times — for two points.

Ultimately it was a five minute period that spanned the final couple of minutes of the first half and the first three in the second half that decided this game. Here's what happened:

It was tied at 28. Billy Endicott hit from the corner, Peter Trow connected on a short baseline turnaround and Skinner got a layup on an offensive rebound. That made it 34-28 at the half. Then in the first two and a half minutes following intermission Murphy, then Trow, then Skinner combined for three unanswered hoops — 40-28.

"That was about as well as we have played at anytime this year," said Leaman. "Twelve's an awful lot to make up," added Kraft. "Against some teams you can do it, not UMass."

Kraft's bunch did slice that deficit in half on four occasions thereafter, mainly on some outside ICBMing. A Randy Hughes bomb was the last time, 52-46, because his teammate Joe Charles blew his cool after fouling Rick Pitino.

Charles' anger was hypered with a refusal to raise his hand honoring the infraction leading to a technical. Rick sank all three, but this sequence meant more than the on-paper three point play. From then on it was just a matter of what the margin of difference between the two teams would be.

Charles' resorting to words was in effect a testimony to Pitino's denying him his rights to action on the court. Rick's performance was accented with a neat numerical progression. We'll take it in reverse — seven points, six assists, five, yes five rebounds and more importantly the four points he limited Charles (a8 ppg) to.

"I'd say that his play and that of Endicott (16), Skinner (16), Murphy (16) and Trow (12) as well as our defense were very instrumental in us winning," noted Leaman. Murphy ? 6 for 22? Three fouls in the first five minutes? "He more than made up for a seemingly off night for him with his rebounding and just his presence under the basker," said Leaman. Murphy had 16 bounds and the Minutemen as a 'team' dominated Rhody 53-36. Which, conceptually, was the point of this game.

Hockey playoff hopes in doubt...

UMass skaters suffer split vs. Colby, Bowdoin

By DAVE EIBEL
MDC Sports Staff

The UMass hockey team concluded its '73-'74 Division. Two schedule at Orr Rink in disappointing fashion. Although the Minutemen will probably make the playoffs their weekend split with Colby and Bowdoin has just about erased their chances for playing on "home" ice in the Division Two quarter-finals.

Friday afternoon, before a sparse crowd which dwindled to less than a hundred by the game's end, UMass prevailed over Colby College by a score of 6-3.

Although the Minutemen were outshot 37-32, the game was never in doubt after three second-period goals - by Tim Howes, Billy Harris, and Jim Lynch-gave the Minutemen a 5-2 cushion.

Harris was a going concern for Coach Jack Canniff's skaters scoring twice, assisting on three others, and killing penalties brilliantly. His second goal of the game came at 13:08 of the second period when he stopped a Colby clearing attempt, wheeled in front, and slid a 12-foot wristshot past goalie Gary Ryerse.

Other UMass goals came off the sticks of Kevin Conners and Harris in the first, Tim Howes and Jim Lynch in the second, and Brian Mulcahy at 15:33 of the third period.

Howes' goal at 5:58 of the middle stanza was the prettiest effort of the game. He carried the puck out of his own end, escaped a Colby defender's clutches at the Colby blueline and beat Ryerse with a short flip shot as he came in off the right wing.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, things were to be quite different a night later as they battled the Polar Bears of Bowdoin College. For one thing they held the upper hand in shots 41-31, but their defensive corps which had been ragged in spots vs. Colby, became incredibly charitable and it cost UMass the game, 5-2.

After only 48 seconds of play Fred Ahern stunned the UMass fans when he picked up a loose puck in front of the UMass goal which had lain there for a virtual eternity and fired it past Chick Rheault in a situation similar to Showdown in the NHL. From then on Bowdoin as never headed.

Timmy Howes, three weekend goals.

The first period ended with UMass beginning to come on and the score tied 1-1 on a Timmy Howes goal on a rebound off a Carl Burns shot at 19:17.

Bowdoin made it 2-1 on a power play marker at 3:56 of the second when Bill Shanahan got the puck at the left point, moved in to the edge of the face-off circle, and let go with a twenty-foot slap shot that seemed to go in off Rheault's pads through his legs.

Tim Howes' second of the night, and third of the weekend, came on a UMass powerplay at 6:03 when he picked up a pass from John Muse at the point, moved in to the slot, and backhanded a shot past goalie Fred Green's glove side making it 2-2.

At 14:15 of the 2nd period, only 8 seconds after UMass' Mark Sullivan had been sent off for a questionable elbowing infraction, Dana Laliberte was credited with a goal as a shot from the left point by Robert Quirk hit Sean Hanley, then a UMass defenseman, and then Laliberte before caroming off both posts and falling behind a mesmerized Rheault. A goalie's not expected to stop pool shots.

Third period markers by Scott Blackburn on a steal in front of Rheault at 4:14 and Fred Ahern's second goal on a breakaway at 12:18 salted away the win. Except for Steve Nims' "goalposter" at the seven-minute mark, the Minutemen had really no sustained threats in the third period, although they did manage 17 shots.

Bowdoin outskated the Minutemen from start to finish and again UMass lacked the ability to finish off their plays in ront of the net. They seemed content to throw the puck in and take shots from long-distance rather than moving right in.

Wednesday night UMass takes the part of David vs. the Goliaths of the University of New Hampshire at 8:30 at Orr Rink. Slingshots won't be sufficient to stop the second-ranked college hockey team in the country.

UMass carpooling by computer saves waiting

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

At least one group on campus is doing something about the gas crunch besides getting in service station waiting lines.

The UMass commuter assembly, a legislative organization representing more than 13,000 non-resident UMies, and the Dean of Students office have cooperated over intersession to begin a basic carpooling system.

The system will have the effect of reducing the number of cars commuters bring to campus each day by allowing them to get together based on the distance they travel and where they are coming from, according to Randall W. Dahl, of the dean of students office.

The system was initiated in December, when the commuter assembly voted $1,000 to fund the details of a computer-controlled car pooling system, according to Dahl.

The system is now in operation with only $200 of the original appropriation spent, he said.

Under the system, students fill our computer cards which identify the geographic area they are commuting from. Then the computer matches groups of students from the same areas, and identifies each as a potential commuting partner.

"We worked pretty hard over intersession devising a way to divide the commuters up geographically," Dahl said, adding, "it was our assumption that only by making it convenient would people do the thing."

About 1,200 students and 75 staff members from UMass filled out computer geographic area cards during the spring registrations in late January, amounting to 10 per cent of the total commuting population.

Now those that signed, and others who live in the same areas, have to come to central points on campus to see who their commuting partners are.

"We're trying this to see if people will pursue the system," Dahl said.

Computer geographic matching lists are available at ten locations on campus, for the convenience of commuters. They are: 105 Hampshire, 229 Whitmore, E-22 Machmer, 359 SBA, 201 Engineering East, 110 Stockbridge, Campus Center info desk, 416 Student Union, 243 Graduate Research and the commuter lounge in the basement of the student union.

Student senate and commuter assembly elections have been postponed to Thursday and Friday of next week, a senate spokesman said yesterday.

"We've postponed the elections from the end of this week to allow more persons to apply for nominations for the vacancies," John O'Keefe of the Student Senate Communications Committee said.

Of a total of about 40 positions open on the senate and assembly, nominations for 15 have not yet been received, O'Keefe said, adding "they have about twenty-five nominations in now."

"People should stop bitching about the senate, the dorms and faculty hiring and get involved," he said. "They should either put up or shut up."

The student senate runs the bus system, sets student fees and allocates more than $600,000 in student fees for budgets of student organizations on campus — like The Collegian, WMUA and Peoples' Market and the Outing Club.

The commuter assembly has five vacancies. That body meets Wednesday afternoons to allocate the fees paid by the 6,000 UMass commuting students.

Any UMass student is eligible to run for a position in the Student Senate. Nomination papers are available at the Student Senate office on the second floor (balcony level) of the Student Union building.

Nomination papers for commuter assembly elections are available at the same location.

Honors heads quit

By AVIS YUNI
MDC Staff

The two top administrators of the academic "honors program" on campus have resigned effective the end of the semester, The Collegian learned in separate interviews yesterday.

Cynthia G. Wolff, an assistant professor of English and director of the 800-student program since spring 1972, will continue as director until May, she said in an interview yesterday.

W. Brian O'Connor, the assistant director of the program and former director from January 1970 to March 1971, has also resigned. O'Connor, an assistant professor of zoology since 1967, was the second of four directors of tthe program, begun as part of the College of Arts and Sciences that year.

The Honors program allows a select group of more able UMass students to take special courses, sometimes with special small enrollment, that are more demanding academically than standardized department offerings.

Although the program has existed for over five years, problems of funding, campus-wide recognition, and departmental cooperation have plagued four directors. Some campus administrators have also felt the program is "elitist" because it allows special privileges and programs for a core of students while most UMass students must take the standard program, fulfulling all course requirements.

Ms. Wolff announced her resignation in a letter to the Provost the first day of this semester. It will take affect on the last day of the term.

In this, her second year as Director, Ms. Wolff wants to return to return to more teaching and research. "anyone who takes the job should be actively interested in working in his field and doing research," she said.

"The job takes a lot of time and one must cut back on teaching and research because of administrative duties," she said.

Ms. Wolff said that two or three years is a fairly common length of time to hold an administrative position if that is not one's usual job.

For example, she said that members of administrative committees can only hold those positions for two years.

The Honors Program comes under the Provost's Office, thus allowing the Provost to appoint the Director.

Ms. Wolff said she didn't know who her successor would be or how he-she would be chosen. A search committee made up of students and faculty had recommended Ms. Wolff for the position. She said she hoped her resignation and the change in Director will have no effect on the Honors Program.

"The program changed very dramatically when I came in. The Honors Program became more open. It was made available to students from minority backgrounds. It strove to become coherent with four year department honors programs," she said.

"I hope whoever takes my place will continue to expand the program to tie it in with the departments and make it available to as many students who can do the work," she said.

The Honors Program was revised last year allowing for more students to join the program, and for more and diversified Honors courses within the various majors.

Ms. Wolff explained that the programs has grown now from about 400 to 600 students. She said,"I would expect it to continue to expand in the next year and level off."

This new program allows for honors sections of regularly given courses rather than specific honors courses. A student need not be an Honors student (Commonwealth Scholar) to take an honors course which grants four rather than three credits because of the extra work load.

Concerning the new program, Ms. Wolff said it is in the state of still being implemented. However, she said, "I have gotten quite a bit of positive feedback from students and professors.

"Students find it exciting, All of the feedback is terrifically good. There really seems to be a group of students looking for more challenging work," she said.

Energy help on the way

18 states get more gas

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Energy Office yesterday ordered an emergency injection of some 1.6 million barrels of gasoline into 18 shortage-stricken states.

Eight states were assigned an additional five per cent of their original allocations of gasoline for the one remaining week in February; two states got an additional three per cent, and eight states were assigned an additional two per cent.

The additional gasoline was added to the general three per cent set-asides under the control of state governors, who can decide exactly where it is to go, to relieve long gasoline station lines and other impacts of the gasoline shortage.

Last Feb. 9 the FEO shifted two per cent of their gasoline supplies for February from 10 states with relatively good supplies, into 12 short-supply states and the District of Columbia whose supplies were

Senate votes rollback

By DAVID C. MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ignoring the threat of a presidential veto, the Senate Tuesday passed and sent to the House emergency energy legislation providing for an oil price rollback.

The bill that would give President Nixon power to order gasoline rationing passed by a two-to-one margin after the Senate had rejected an administration-backed attempt to send the bill back to conference with the House.

Shortly before the vote, federal energy chief William E. Simon sent a letter to Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott warning that the President would veto the bill in its present form.

Vice President Gerald R. Ford presided over the Senate for the crucial vote on the motion to recommit offered by Sen. Paul J. Fannin, R-Ariz. However, Ford never got a chance to cast his tie-breaking vote as the motion was defeated by a surprisingly com-

More gas for Massachusetts

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent reported yesterday that Massachusetts will receive a 2 per cent increase in February gasoline allotment to carry the state's service station operators through to the end of the month.

The increase represents 3.2 million gallons of gasoline to be distributed in Massachusetts for February, the governor said.

"It's clear that we've won a victory, but we haven't won the war," Sargent said, referring to his complaint to federal energy officials that Massachusetts was being shortchanged in gasoline allocations.

"Today's decision is a breakthrough in our fight to gain fair and equal treatment for our state. Today's decision will also set the precedent for special allocations in the months ahead," Sargent said.

The governor said it was too early to tell the exact effect and extent of the increased allocation.

Hitching: good, bad and ugly too

By BILL MURPHY

Hitching for many of us is a way of life, a mode of transportation which is often enjoyable because we meet new people. It's often necessary if we don't own a car ourselves. Hitching however, is also against the law in many parts of Massachusetts and always a potential danger.

Here at UMass., with the convenience of our bus system and in view of dangers involved, one might expect that few people would need to thumb, but this is not the case. To try to find the reason for this , the MDC interviewed a few people in the Hatch and Campus Center Coffee Shop.

Tom Currie lives in Belchertown Center. He has a 10:10 class every day but the bus leaves the Center at 7:20 and 9:55 AM. Neither time is very convenient.

"I wouldn't hitch if I didn't have to," he said, "but the bus scheduling is inadequate. I guess I really don't mind hitching myself, but my girlfriend is forced to also. As it turns out, if she has an early class I get up and thumb with her. It's too dangerous for a girl to thumb alone."

"I've had a few strange experiences myself while hitching to Florida but nothing around here...most of the people who pick you up are coming to U. Mass. so the inconveniences and dangers are lessened in this area," he said.

"I do take the bus whenever I can, but its a real drag catching a bus at 8:00 for a 9:05 class," says Steve Szwczky a resident of South Hadley. "Also, the buses are so crowded on the way here that I'd rather hitch...I feel one bus should be run every half hour during the busiest times rather than two on the hour as they often do on this route. If its a nice day I like to hitch, but if its dark or rainy it can be dangerous and monotonous."

One girl in the Campus Center preferred to remain anonymous. "I used to hitch from Northhampton to UMass a lot because the buses don't run that often until one day I was hitching and was picked up by a guy in an electrician's truck. During the ride he exposed himself but told me he wouldn't hurt me; that he wasn't a "pervert." He didn't harm me but I learned my lesson."

"I take the bus whenever possible and when I do thumb I'm very picky about rides. If I don't like the looks of the car or the people driving I won't put my thumb out. I don't thumb alone, or at night...a girlfriend of mine memorizes the license plate before she gets in the car. I like to thumb with her," she said.

"I hitch to buy food" says Cathy Hershcopf," and most of the hitching done around Amherst is done by people like me who are just going to Stop and Shop, Mountain Farms Mall, or Amherst Center. The People's Market and stores on Campus are a plus, but an extension of the bus system to these other areas is essential."

The thumb can get you where you're going... sometimes.

"I never hitch alone, and think anyone who does is crazy...I'm careful about rides and would rather be picked up by a woman than a man. Good drivers should pickup hitchhikers so they don't get picked by nuts.People hitching are trying to get someplace quickly and safely," hse said.

In the Hatch, the MDC spoke to three girls. Two lived in Brittany Manor and did not thumb because they had no trouble getting the bus, but wouldn't hitch under any circumstances in view of the risks involved. The third girl, however, hitched quite regularly and did not feel it was risky.

"I live in a dorm but eat at my sorority...its quite a walk and the buses are always late so I hitch. I probably would be more cautious if I had to hitch a long way. We're lucky to have the buses but I wish they'd run on time," she said.

It soon becme obvious that there were a lot of people unhappy with the bus situation around here. More information was available at the Bus Garage.

There was a report there dated February 14, 1974. Its purpose "is to present information on potential bus service options for the Amherst area long with associated economic data on operating and capital costs." It points out that with the gasoline shortage, potential and actual ridership has increased, thus many buses are overloaded creating a need for expanded services.

The proposed expansion and improvement of routes in order of probable acceptance are increase the capacity for existing University Transit Service, create a South Pleasant St. to East Hadley Road route, Mountain Farms MallCommuter Park "N" Ride Shopper Shuttle, Intercollege Transit Service, Echo Hill - Pelham Road route, South Amherst to Orchard Valley, East Pleasant St. route, Cushman and North Amherst route, East Hadley - Amity to Rocky Hill Road, Huntington and surrounding residential area, East - West Route 9,Belechertown Center route, South Deerfield Montague-Mt. Toby, Leverett, South Amherst to Bay Road Pelham, and Shutesbury route.

If any expansion is possible, it will be carried out in one of four ways: Administration of a Transportation System without a Regional Transportation Authority, which means the University can decide whether to let a private authority take over the running of the buses or to hold onto the control of the buses with financial support of the various towns and institutions, or with a Regional Transportation Authority which could either contract with UMass or a private bus operator for expansion; also state support could be possible.

Another plan involves the capital grant from the Urban Massachusetts Transportation Administration for the federal share of the thirteen transit coaches acquired under the Research and Demonstrations Grant. Additional vehicles might also be acquired for limited expansion but the possibility of obtaining vehicles for large expansion is remote.

The same Grant application with a Regional Transportation Authority whereby the Authority could join UMass in a Capital Grant Application or take over and-or initiate all such applications. Interestingly, at a meeting of the Amherst Committee on Public Transportation, the Capital Grant Application with a Regional Transportation Authority was overwhelmingly approved.

However to deal with the immediate hitching and overcrowing problem, pickup stations are being formed where people can wait for rides instead of "illegally" hitching. Two have been set up, one near Hampshire College and another on SouthPleasant Street, but two more have been rejected. In addition, no pickup stations can be initiated on State property, so this program is obviously limited.

The only feasible solution to the inconvenience and dangers students experience while hitching is for further expansion of bus services. Until this expansion hitching will remain a way of life for many of us at UMass.

Concert com. needs revival

by BERNARD CONNAUGHTON

For Mary Paulson, being chairman of the UMass Concert Committee is a big job .. to say the least.

With miniscule appropriation, a waning of general student interest, and three cancellations so far this year, Mary believes that "big changes are needed in the next few months."

Last year the Concert Committee was subsidized by the Student Senate, which aided in the funding of five productions. "Then we were a viable committee with real prospects for growth and development, but the concerts just didn't draw the crowd we needed, and money was lost," she said.

The most recent let down for the committee came when Bonnie Raitt was forced to cancel her appearance at the Winter Carnival. Mary said, "the 2400 tickets were all sold by 2:30 on the first day, and for two hours everything seemed perfect. At 4:30 Bonnie's manager called and cancelled."

When asked of the feasibility of attracting other top performers to UMass, Ms. Paulson replied, "There's always the possibility, but a good name requires $15,000-$20,000. This would mean a substantial hike in ticket price since seating capacity is limited. We tried really hard to bring Van Morrison here, but it was impossible. We'll keep trying, and I'm very optimistic about future shows."

The committee, which consists of 30 people, is a non-profit, student run organization.

Stockbridge sees sucession of owners

By FRITS GUERTSEN

(Second in a three-part series dealing with the history of Stockbridge House.)

Stockbridge House, the oldest house in Amherst, was sold to the Trustees of Massachusetts Agricultural College in 1864. The house was constructed 246 years ago.

The house's first residents, under its new owners, were Henry Flagg Franch and his family. French was the first president of the College.

French's son, Daniel Chester French, achieved fame as a prominent American sculptor. He cast both the Minute Man statue in Concord and the bronze Lincoln in the Memorial at Washington.

President French laid out the initial plans for the college, which was to open its doors for the first students in 1867. He turned over the reins in 1866 to Paul Chadbourne, who became the second president.

Levi Stockbridge moved into the house then which was later to bear his name. He was a Hadley farmer who was named the first farm superintendant and agricultural advisor under Chadbourne. Stockbridge lived in the house for fifteen years, during which period he served under three presidents both as an instructor and an administrator.

Stockbridge's daughter, Anna Stockbridge Tuttle, described the house as it appeared then.

"Surrounded by big trees and an apple orchard with an iron fence and hemlock hedge in front. There were three attics in which the children played, a big milk pantry, and the enormous chimney with its fireplaces, brick oven, and smoke hole for curing hams and bacon."

Stockbridge became the fifth president of the college, though he retained that position for only a year. After his retirement, the house was occupied by Sumner Dickinson and his family for 22 years.

Dickinson was in charge of the Horticultural Barn. His son, Lawrence Dickinson, later taught at the College and founded what has become the Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) office.

From 1914 until 1934, the house fell into steady disrepair and was occupied sporadically by various campus employees.

In 1934, President Hugh Potter Baker had the house restored and established it as the Faculty Club.

Herter hums Tuesday morning

By SHERMAN BOYSON

If you're hanging around doing nothing on a Tuesday morning; and you get tired of that AM rock bopping through your head, you might try some of the good music that's been coming out of Herter Hall.

The TUESDAY MORNING STUDENT RECITAL SERIES is a weekly concert of high quality music performed by students in the UMass Music Department. Dr. Charles J. Lehrer, director of the series, described it is "about the best thing the Music Dept. has to offer the students of this university." The programs are held at 11:15 every Tuesday morning in Herter 227. The fifty minute concerts give the students a chance to perform in front of an audience, and gives the general population of UMass a chance to hear some real fine music performed by their fellow students.

"In the future", Dr. Lehrer explained, "these students will be conducting bands and orchestras, as well as performing. This program gives them the chance to perform in front of an audience; to give them the experience they need."

The concert provided a chance for the music student to perform in front of his peers. For many, it is their first solo performance. Each student in the department is taking lessons in some instrument. When the student and the teacher think the student is ready, he may request a spot on the program schedule. It is totally optional, whether a student wants to perform or not, but most students take advantage of the opportunity.

Dr. Lehrer, who describes himself as a co-ordinator rather than a director, organizes the concerts each week. As few as one or as many as six pieces could be performed at one concert, depending on the length of the pieces played.

The assortment of instruments played is as varied as the number of instruments that exists. Cello, tuba, trumpet, violin, — all are played; as well as vocal selections. Usually the instrument or singer will be accompanied by piano.

Tuesday's concert was a feature event. It was Chopin's birthday, and the majority of pieces played were his compositions. To review the music takes one word: flawless. Throughout almost an hour of very difficult music, not one mistake could be detected. The music ranged from solo pianists to chamber music to a soprano singing in perfect polish.

The music is all classical, but don't let that turn you off. This music is not like the concerts your high school orchestra used to play during assembly period. This is high quality, very professional sound coming from persons no older than yourself. "The kids won't play unless they are really ready" Lehrer points out. "This means a lot to them and they don't settle for less than perfection."

The work behind the pieces is tremendous. John McCann, a trumpet player in his third year at the university, estimated that he spent "three weeks of hard work" to prepare his five minute piece. Lehrer pointed out how complicated pieces, like chamber music, can take as much as two months to prepare.

When the student performs, he usually has the music in front of him, but none of them really need it. By then it is almost memorized.

Most of the performers are nervous and tense before they play. Cyrille Doutherd is a grad student who plays piano and sings soprano. She has performed in front of an audience about 25 times, but she is still nervous before each performance. "You never know how it is going to go" she explained. "Only someone who doesn't care about their performance isn't nervous beforehand."

If the program has any room for improvement, it is in the size of the audience. Herter 227 can hold about 160 persons. Yet the concerts, which are totally free, usually attract only 60 persons. The concerts are not long, they are very inexpensive, and are very enjoyable.

At each concert, there is a stack of programs as you enter the auditorium. There always seems to be a lot more programs than people. Maybe the music department is hoping that someday there will be as many persons as programs.

That's not a bad idea.

SWRC: where they care

By B.J. ROCHE

Got problems? Who hasn't? But if you live in Southwest, consider the fact that there is a place where people care. The Southwest Resource Center, located in Hamden Dining Commons, is a human resource center set up to help members of the community with any problems regarding academics, counseling, or Southwest in general.

Started last January, the center came about as a result of a SWIP conference which cited the need for a general "help center" for Southwest residents. It is set up to handle just about everything, but its main work so far has been cutting academic "red tape" for students, and counseling.

The Resource Center has various programs, among them a 390 course in Human Relations, which is a practicum in one-to-one counseling. Other programs include counselor training for six dorms, Head of Residents Skill Workshops, and special requests, where individualized programs are developed.

Third World Students are served by the Center as well; three Third World students are employed as counselors. The basic goal of Third World counseling, as pointed out by Counselor Melvyn Baulkman is "to show Third World people that everything is available to them and to make the services respond to Third World students." Mr. Baulkman also summed up the main idea of the center by saying that UMass is an "unreal environment where real people are needed to make the situation a little better."

An additional service of the center is that it serves as the meeting place of the University Ombudsman every Monday night.

One of the problems of the center is that it is not very well known, though it has been in existence for a year. One worker stated that this may be due to the fact that it does not have a "political stand". Where the Center for Racial Understanding and the Women's Center have causes they are fighting for, the Resource Center is a general help center, fighting for the student.

Supervisor Irene Carew hopes that the center will help the entire University in that general improvements will be made for everyone rather than just the individual being helped by the center.

Many people will never need the services of this center. If you do, however, you are welcome 9-5 Monday through Friday for any assistance you may need.

Hadley lake makes 3 Umies sick

By JAN ALEXANDER

Three male residents of Kennedy Tower were recovering this weekend after contracting an intestinal disease as a result of drinking polluted water from Lake Warner in Hadley.

The students, Richard Dacey, a sophomore from Milton, Paul Stypulkowski and Michael Kryzstofik a sophomore and senior respectively both of Chicopee, were playing hockey on the lake early last Sunday afternoon. All three drank water from beneath the ice before leaving, "Because we were thristy" said Stypulkowski. "I've done it a hundred times before."

Late Sunday evening the three became ill and Dacey and Stypulkowski were admitted to the infirmary on Monday. Kryzstofik entered the infirmary on Tuesday.

"The lake has been considered to be polluted because Amherst's sewage treatment plant often overflows into the Mill River which then flows into Lake Warner," said Karol Wisnieski, Chairman of the Amherst Board of Health.

"Pollution tests in the past have been high", Wisnieski stated, "Tests are being conducted now on fish caught in the lake. Of course if the fish is cooked, the organisms will be killed. But there is a possibility that storing the fish near other food will cause contamination, and handling of the fish could spread disease."

Tests concerning the specific disease causing the illness of the three men are still being carried out. "I guess we're all right," said Stypulkowski. "We haven't heard anything more about it."

Health authorities in Hadley plan to close the pond on April 1. "I just don't want anybody around that area at all," stated Chairman of the Hadley Board of Health, Daniel Omasta.

Omasta added that it would take until April to close the lake because of problems in obtaining the signs necessary for posting the area. The closing will prohibit fishing, boating, swimming, and all other recreational activities.

Sonny & Cher breaking up

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sonny Bono has filed suit for legal separation from his wife and singing partner, Cher, a spokesman said Tuesday.

The spokesman for the entertainer said the petition cited irreconcilable differences.

Bono, 37, and Cher, 27, were married Oct. 27, 1974, and have a daughter, Chastity, born in 1969.

Rumors of a marital rift between the two popular entertainers had been circulating for months in Hollywood and Las Vegas.

Mitchell, Stans take the stand

By ARTHUR EVERETT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Despite their renewed protest, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and ex-Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans went on trial Tuesday, accused of exerting corrupt influence in exchange for a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Mitchell, 60, and Stans, 65, are charged with accepting the under-the-table cash donation from fugitive financier Robert Vesco with the understanding they would try to sidetrack a Securities and Exchange Commission probe of his financial empire.

Fequently in pretrial motions, the defense had argued before Judge Lee P. Gagliardi that a fair trial was impossible in New York. They cited the widespread publicity engendered not only by the Vesco case but also by the Watergate scandal in Washington, where both Mitchell and Stans have been interrogated.

"The prejudicial and massive publicity in this case has continued right up to the present time," a Stans attorney, John Diuguid, argued, in renewing a motion to dismiss the case, move the trial out of New York or delay the proceedings indefinitely.

Gagliardi told Duiguid that he would handle this motion as he had its predecessors - putting to test whether a fair jury could be selected by examining prospective members of the panel.

The first 80 prospective jurors subsequently were brought in to Gagliardi's federal courtroom for questioning.

Thus the first case of its kind in half a century of American history came to trial.

Not since the Teapot Dome scandal of 1923 have any former Cabinet officers faced a criminal indictment.

Vesco, 37, is a defendant in the case, but fled the country and never answered the indictment. Attempts to extradite him proved fruitless.

Nixon asks state control over federal poverty funds

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon proposed to Congress Tuesday that states decide where to spend federal money designed to assist economically depressed areas.

His plan would phase out the present Economic Development Administration and regional planning commissions which Nixon has said have acted too late, have been too dispersed and have had too little coordination.

He proposed a $330-million program for the coming budget year compared with $283 million for such aid in the current year.

Nixon offered a similar plan last year but ultimately agreed with Congress to continue existing programs while they were studied. Nixon's plan would channel money in block grants to states who in turn would decide, consulting with local officials, how the money should best be spent. The federal government would set broad use of the money.

Principal targets are the more than 400 areas in the country with chronic unemployment and low income levels.

The money could be used for such diverse purposes as providing public utilities, constructing public buildings, funding economic planning studies or providing tax rebates to encourage business development.

Eighty per cent of the block grants would go to states on a formula whose single strongest factor is the enemployment rate.

The Commerce Department, location of the present Economic Development Administration, would supervise the program. Seven regional action planning commissions would be eliminated. Their regions cover: Coastal Plains, Four Corners, New England, Old West, Ozarks, Pacific Northwest and Upper Great Lakes.

Kissinger to separate Golan forces

By ENDRE MARTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will begin Monday a second round of shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East, this time seeking a formula to separate Israeli and Syrian forces on the Golan Heights.

President Nixon made the announcement Tuesday of Kissinger's new mission, appearing in the White House Rose Garden, flanked by the foreign ministers of Egypt and Saudi Arabia. The purpose of the mission, Nixon said, is "to get the talks started."

Nixon conferred for 90 minutes with Ismail Fahmy of Egypt and Omar Sakkaf of Saudi Arabia. Their meeting, with Kissinger participating, marked the end of a three-day visit of the two Arab ministers to Washington.

Fahmy and Sakkaf brought a message to Nixon from the heads of state of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Algeria who met in Algiers Feb. 14. What the message was neither the two ministers nor American officials disclosed. Both Fahmy and Sakkaf repeatedly termed it as "good news."

"We brought good news. Who is going to release it I don't know," Sakkaf told a news conference after the White House meeting.

There was, however, no doubt that the news meant an Arab proposal worked out at the Algiers minisummit, and aimed at ending the deadlock between Syria and Israel.

The meeting here focused on the Syrian-Israeli disengagement issue, but the question of lifting the oil embarge also came up.

When asked if the disengagement talks and the lifting of the embargo, are connected, Kissinger replied: "Not necessarily the way you think they are connected."

"Once we see that intentions are good, if the embargo might be lifted ... Who knows, it might be lifted in one or two months," Sakkaf said.

But then, pressed repeatedly on this point, and asked whether the Syrians hold the key to the embargo, the Saudi minister said: "In a way, yes." Neither Nixon nor the two Arab ministers mentioned the oil question when they made brief remarks in the Rose Garden, but Sakkaf said: "We believe something will happen soon for the benefit of the United States and the world."

Nixon stressed that he is seeking a permanent settlement in the Middle East, but added that the immediate problem is disengagement of Syrian and Israeli forces.

Watergate committee votes to end hearings

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Watergate committee voted Tuesday to finish its investigation without further public hearings.

In announcing the 6-1 vote, chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., said members of the panel felt they "should be careful not to interfere unduly with the ongoing impeachment process of the House Judiciary committee or the criminal cases which will soon be prosecuted by the special prosecutor...."

In a related development Tuesday, a federal judge also moved to squelch continued public speculation about the work of the technical experts examining the subpoenaed Watergate tapes.

U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica imposed the rule after a closed-door meeting with attorneys from the White House, the special prosecutor's office and counsel for Rose Mary Woods, President Nixon's personal secretary.

Ervin said the Watergate committee voted to ask the Senate to extend its life to May 28, three months beyond its current Feb. 28 deadline for completion of its report.

The chairman said the committee will pursue in executive sessions evidence relating to the CIA's involvement in Watergate, dairy industry contributions to the President's re-election campaign, and a secret cash contribution given to presidential friend C. G. Roboze by an employee of billionaire Howard Hughes.

"The passage of time and the development of new events have persuaded the committee that further hearings at this time are not necessary for completion of its work," Ervin said.

A month ago Sirica had referred questions about the gap in one tape and the claim that two other conversations were never recorded to special prosecutor Leon Jaworski with a recommendation he turn it over to a grand jury.

After Tuesday's meeting Sirica issued a brief statement saying, "All participants in the meeting have agreed that continued public comment on the grand jury's work by those who have any association with the investigation is inappropriate."

Lollobrigida snaps 'fascinating men'

MOSCOW (AP) - Gina Lollobrigida is in the Soviet Union this week to photograph one of the world's most interesting men. But the Italian movie actress-turned-photojournalist isn't saying who.

"We're keeping that a secret," she said in an interview Tuesday.

Miss Lollobrigida is traveling around the world on assignment from the Ladies' Home Journal to take pictures of men she and the magazine consider the most fascinating.

"I'm somewhat spoiled as a photographer, with a decided advantage in trying to photograph important men," she said. "They would prefer to see me rather than a normal papparazzi."

Hearst makes new appeal

Charity part of family tradition

By MALCOLM N. CARTER
Associated Press WRiter

NEW YORK (AP) — Their wealth rooted in California's gold rush, the Hearst family gave to the needy in the decades that followed and championed working men's causes through a communications empire then unmatched in size and influence.

Now, the family's two non-profit philanthropic foundations annually give away nearly $3 million to charities, schools, museums and such organizations as the Los Angeles Orphanage Guild, the Anti-Defamation League and the American Indian Movement of Milwaukee, Wis.

George Hearst, late great-grandfather of kidnaped Patricia Hearst, accumulated that wealth and through it, brought the family into journalism.

He assumed ownership of the San Francisco Examiner in payment of a bad debt in 1880. William Randolph Hearst, his son and builder of the vast press kingdom, took over the Examiner seven years later at the age of 24. And one of William's five sons, Randolph, who is Patricia's father, is now president and editor of the paper.

At William Randolph Hearst's death in 1951, the family fortune, diminished by the Depression, was $57 million. Hearst set aside $43.7 for a charitable foundation and left the rest to his widow and sons.

There are two foundations now. One of them — the William Randolph Hearst Foundation — is to provide 75 per cent of a $2-million fund to feed the needy and, hopefully, bring on the release of Patricia Hearst. The 19-year-old coed was abducted Feb. 4 by the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army, which demanded such a "good faith gesture" from her father.

The William Randolph Hearst Foundation declared on its 1972 income tax return, the latest one available, that it had given $1.94 million in donations from assets of about $44 million.

It said it had committed $440,000 in the previous two years to the National Urban League and had appropriated $190,000 for 1973.

The money was for development of bilingual, bicultural early education materials for Spanish-speaking American children.

Other recipients that year were the Harlem Preparatory School, here, the Negro Educational Emergency Drive in Pittsburgh, Pa.; and Boys' Clubs and the City of Hope in Los Angeles.

The same year, the smaller Hearst Foundation declared 717,500 total donations to various Hearst said the $2 million would go to a "tax-exempt charitable organization" approved by the California attorney general as a first step to negotiating his daughter's freedom.

Cites food donations

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) — Patricia Hearst's parents asked her kidnapers Tuesday to make the ultimate "gesture of sincerity" in return for their $2-million pledge to feed the poor; free their daughter on Wednesday, her 20th birthday.

Newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst appeared in front of his Hillsborough mansion to say again that the $2 million "is not ransom," but an indication of his good faith to the Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims to have kidnaped his daughter.

"I expect them to make a gesture of sincerity themselves and naturally in my position and Mrs. Hearst's position, the gesture they could make would be the release of our daughter," said the newspaper executive.

"But this $2 million is not ransom."

Hearst said he would offer details of his food distribution plan soon.

California Atty. Gen. Evelle J. Younger said Tuesday he would not prosecute anyone who accepted the food. He also suggested the Red Cross and Salvation Army as possible charitable organizations that might handle the distribution.

Hearst had said over the weekend there were legal problems to be worked out in connection with the food distribution plan. He said, for example, that persons accepting the food might be violating the laws by taking part in extortion activities.

Hearst said he was convinced his daughter, kidnaped Feb. 4, is alive and expressed hope she eventually would be freed by the Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims to be holding her as a "prisoner of war."

The money was available Tuesday — the deadline set by the kidnapers for a response to their demands — but Hearst continued searching for a suitable organization to handle the food distribution program.

Food industry officials said $2 million would provide enough food to stock 34 supermarkets.

WILL ACT IN HEARST CASE -- Rev. Cecil William (left) of Glide Memorial Methodist Church in San Francisco and Dennis Banks, executive director of the American Indian Movement are spokesmen for a coalition of groups named by the Symbionese Liberation Army to distribute food as part of the ransom for kidnapped Patricia Hearst. Rev. Williams, who received a tape made by Miss Hearst, hopes to act as a liason between the SLA and the Hearst family.

More gas going to 18 states increased 2 per cent.

That shift remained unchanged.

But it was done through normal oil company distribution and two of the states given 2 per cent increases last Feb. 9 have had those increases placed under the control of their governors, instead of the companies, the FEO announced Tuesday.

The FEO made no announcement on the allocations due to other states, which had been announced previously but which were subject to possible error because they did not include data from six companies including Gulf Oil Corp. and Amerada-Hess.

Here is a summary of all of the increases now announced in the February gas allocation:

—New Jersey and Virginia, previously increased 2 per cent last Feb. 9, were assigned an additional 3 per cent on Tuesday, increasing their governors' set-aside by a total of 5 per cent.

Rollback could drop prices fortable margin of 60 to 38.

Senate Interior Committee Chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., claims the rollback could result in a five cent per gallon drop in the pump price of gasoline and could save the consumer $20 million a day.

Opponents say the rollback would destroy the oil companies' incentives to expand production.

The emergency bill, which was first introduced by Jackson in October, has failed in two previous attempts to gain Senate passage. Last month the Senate voted to send the measure back to conference to remove a controversial provision designed to limit oil company profits.

N.E. states get more gas for Feb.

BOSTON (AP) - Five New England states will get increased allocations of gasoline during the last eight days of February, the Federal Energy Office said yesterday.

Vermont and New Hampshire will get a 5 per cent increase over what they used during February of last year. Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut will get a 2 per cent increase.

Two weeks ago, Maine's allocation was increased by 2 per cent.

The additional gasoline should have a quick effect on lines at the gasoline pumps, said Lawrence Rogers, regional administrator of the energy office.

"I would hope to see them dwindle down by the end of this week and certainly next week," he said.

The five New England states are among 20 that will get more gasoline.

Under the new plan, Massachusetts will get an increase of 3.2 million gallons; Connecticut, 1.6 million; Rhode Island, 586,000; New Hampshire, 980,000, and Vermont, 675,000.

Although the new allocations represent a percentage boost for the month, the gasoline can be burned during the remaining eight days and will not affect March allocations.

"It constitutes quite an injection for such a short period of time," Rogers said. "The impact should be considerable in alleviating the shortage."

It will be up to the governors of the individual states to decide which towns get more fuel, Rogers said.

"It gives governors of the states a chance to use gas right now in block grant method in areas where there are problems," he said.

The decision on which states would get more fuel was not based solely on statistics, Rogers said.

"It's a judgment decision," he said. "It's not a formula. It's an emergency decision based on a lot of information-car registration, the number of gallons available, lots of things."

The governors of the New England states that were granted increases reacted favorably to the energy office announcement.

"Today's decision is a breakthrough in our fight to gain fair and equal treatment for our state," said Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

"Today's decision will also set the precedent for special allocations in the months ahead," he said.

Sargent indicated that he would review state policies, such as adhering to the federal request for service stations to shut down on Sundays and the Oregon voluntary distribution program, and might announce changes in those policies later this week.

Gov. Thomas Salmon of Vermont said the energy office decision yesterday confirmed his contention that a mistake had been made in overlooking the state when increased allocations were announced two weeks ago.

Salmon said the 5 per cent increase for Vermont was good news, but would not solve the state's fuel problems. He said Vermont will still fall about 3 million gallons short.

Salmon also said he would ask the federal energy office to reconsider regulations banning dealers from giving preferential treatment to regular customers. Salmon, who announced Monday that he was suspending the Oregon plan scheduled to go into effect in Vermont today, said he has asked 30 retailers to work with his office to come up with a voluntary distribution plan acceptable to both operators and customers.

State energy chief Eckardt Beck said the 2 per cent increase slated for Connecticut "will go a little ways to help improve the situation."

He said the state would allocate supplies where shortages were most critical. If the increased allocation were distributed equally to Connecticut's 3,200 service stations, it would represent about 500 gallons per station or three-quarters of a tank for each of the 2 million motor vehicles in the state, he said.

Gov Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire said he was "gratified" at the federal decision to increase his state's allocation by 5 per cent.

"Since it was announced on Feb. 9 that of the six New England states only Maine would receive additional gasoline supplies, I have been in continuous contact with both the Federal Energy Office and the White House in an effort to secure an equitable adjustment for New Hampshire to that decision," Thomson said.

Of the increased allocation, he said: "Because there are only nine :days remaining in the month, it is imperative that emergency and hardship applications be filed immediately with my energy office at Concord. Those in need of this emergency allocation of gasoline are requested to telephone the energy office toll free hot line at 1-800-562-1115," he said.

A survey conducted by the ALA Auto and Travel Club indicated that only 33 per cent of New Hampshire's service station operators were participating in the Oregon plan of gasoline distribution that went into effect on a voluntary basis Monday.

Of that percentage, two-thirds reported shorter lines at their gasoline pumps since the alternate day sales plan began.

Only two of 50 dealers surveyed said they planned to remain open on Sundays, and only one said he would comply with Thomson's request for uniform operating hours, the ALA said.

Nearly half the dealers contacted said the voluntary distribution plan would not alleviate the fuel shortage; 33 per cent said it would, and the remainder had no comment, according to the club.

An American Automobile Association survey of New England gasoline stations indicated the supply outlook for the next few days was low in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut and fair in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Areas reporting lowest supplies to AAA were Cape Cod, Worcester, Springfield, Holyoke and Lawrence in Massachusetts; Providence, R. I., and Bennington, Vt.

Most New England stations were imposing a $2 to $3 limit on sales and most were staggering operating hours, AAA said.

The energy crisis

Mass. gas pains lessened

when the additional supplies would be available, but indicated that a directive from Federal Energy Chief William Simon was the only thing necessary to release supplies already in storage in the state.

Teams of federal investigators were sent into the state last week by Simon to determine if service station operators were entitled to more gasoline.

In Washington on Tuesday, Simon announced increased February allocations for 20 states.

Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia will receive an additional 5 per cent. Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island will join Massachusetts in receiving a 2 per cent increase.

Simon said the energy office will equalize gasoline supplies among all 50 states in another move next month.

Dealer sessions scheduled locally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail gas and oil dealers in western Massachusetts will have an opportunity to discuss energy regulations and procedures with state and federal officials in two workshop sessions next week, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., said yesterday.

Conte said dealers are invited to attend meetings scheduled for 7 p.m. Monday at Holyoke City Hall and 7:30 p.m. yesterday at Taconic High School in Pittsfield.

Proposals to beat crunch

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Two proposals to help tourists and the tourist industry beat the energy crunch have been endorsed by a deputy commissioner of the state Department of Commerce and Industry.

Ernest A. Lucci said in an interview published here yesterday he approves of proposals put forward by the Berkshire Hills Conference and will urge Gov. Francis W. Sargent to lend state support to the plans.

Under one proposal, all six New England states would participate in a plan under which motels and other tourist facilities would provide customers with voucher cards to guarantee a fillup at a gas station. Dealers would turn the cards over to state officials for extra gas allocations.

Lucci said he would recommend that Sargent pledge Massachusetts' support for the program.

The second proposal would set up a toll-free information service to enable callers within a 150-mile radius to obtain up-dated information on the availability of gas and accommodations in the Berkshires.

Lucci said he woud recommend the idea to Sargent for possible state financial assistance and said he would urge other promotion groups in Massachusetts to consider similar programs.

Both ideas were suggested by John V. Geary, director of the conference, a county tourism promotion agency.

Conn. shortage relieved

HARTFORD (AP) - Connecticut will receive 1.6 million gallons of gasoline for February under a "one shot deal" announced yesterday by the Federal Energy Office.

The new allocation, two percent of the 80 million February allotment, will be added to an emergency supply distributed by the governor and the state energy office.

If distributed to each of the state's 3,200 gasoline stations it could mean another 500 gallons per station for the remaining eight days of the month. The method of distribution has not been determined but FEO chief William Simon earmarked the gasoline to shorten long lines at service stations. Connecticut was one of 20 stations to receive extra gas.

In Greenwich, the 46 gasoline dealers began a shutdown of pumps to protest FEO regulations against preferential treatment for regular customers. Some stations closed early. Others pumped normal hours and then closed, vowing to stay shut until the regulation was rescinded.

Attorney R. Richard Roina met with the dealers late in the afternoon to explain the latest "clarification" of the FEO rule.

"I drove up and down the Post Road and the guys said as far as they're concerned their doors are closed.

"I can't say whether the stations will stay open. The indications I have are they are not happy with it."

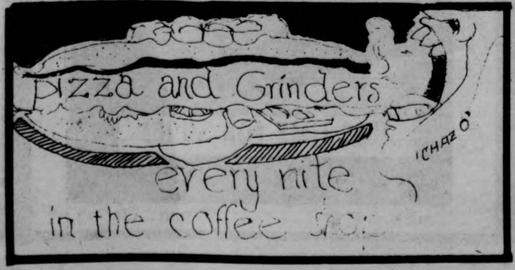
Ed Koorbush, an Exxon dealer on the Post Road said: "We just want to stay open for people who need the gasoline, like doctors, ambulances, fire, police and regular customers. We'd like to put aside 20 per cent for the regulars."

U.S. Rep. Robert H. Steele, R-Conn., said that under the new FEO allocations the major oil companies would be ordered to make additional gasoline available immediately to Connecticut.

He said FEO would announce future emergency allocations month-by month and that he "expected that figure to increase" in March.

"I don't think it's going to solve the problem but it will help alleviate the situation. At least we're now moving, taking it from other states."

Until now the state energy office has used its emergency supply, called a 3 per cent "set aside," for emergencies.



Nobody goes to France just to ride the railroads.

But when the wise ones get there, and want to get from one place to the next, the way they get around is by train.

The fact is, French trains give you more than comfort and convenience, more than speed and a window on the world. They give you value. For even in a day when almost everything is going up except the dollar, French trains are still one of the greatest transportation buys in the world.

Because distances from Paris are short, French trains go everywhere. To the medieval mysteries of Vezelay (163 miles, $13.50) and Carcassonne (503 miles, $41.00). To the Provence of Gaughin and van Gogh (486 miles, $39.50). To the vineyards of the Cote d'Or (220 miles, $18.50) and the sparkling sun of the Cote d'Azur (660 miles, $53.50). To castles and cathedrals. To Alps and oceans. To monuments of the Romanesque and Renaissance. To all the hidden corners of a country haunted by history and enriched by centuries of civilization.

Paris, of course, is Paris. But France is more. And it's all connected by 25,000 miles of track, more than 4,000 stations, and many hundreds of sleek, swift trains that will pamper you, feed you, even bed you down. While they whisk you from here to anywhere in no more than a few relaxing hours.

So if you really want to see France, see France by train. And see how economical great travel can be. While you're at it, ask about our other travel bargains—a 1st Class Eurailpass, or the 2nd Class Student-Railpass. For tickets and reservations, get in touch with your travel agent, or nearest French National Railroads office, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York 10020; 11 East Adams Street, Chicago 60603; 9465 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills 90212; 323 Geary St., San Francisco 94102; 2121 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Coral Gables 33134. Lobbyists — they're back

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Despite the slow start and expected early close of this year's legislative session, there are nearly as many lobbyists as legislators signing up to do business on Beacon Hill.

In all, about 225 lobbyists have registered, according to the state secretary's public Records Division. That compares to 145 lobbyists who registered by the end of February last year.

Most prevalent are lobbyists for the utilities and insurance companies.

Boston Edison Co. alone has signed up nine lobbyists, according to registration recods in the Public Records Division. Boston Gas Co. has six.

As of last weekend, the records show utilities had signed up about 30 lobbyists to protect their interest during the 1974 legislative session.

The insurance industry had signed up about 25, with five of them supplied by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.

The state's lobbying laws were changed considerably during the last legislative session, and the increased registration probably is attributable to these changes.

One change requires company employes who appear at hearings before regulatory agencies to register. Previously, they didn't have to.

The new law also transfers registration from the sargeant at arms to the Public Records Division. Procedures now being used make it easier to identify all lobbyists with their employers.

Even groups which identify their cause with the public interest, as opposed to special interests, seem to be fairly well represented.

Americans for Democratic Action has one lobbyist; Common Cause of Massachusetts has several, and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group has one.

The whole range of medical care is represented, with lobbyists for doctors, dentists, nurses and chiropractors, as well as Blue Cross, Blue Shield, Massachusetts General Hospital, The Massachusetts Hospital Association, and nursing homes and the Massachusetts Funeral Directors Association, with an interest in "anything affecting the care and disposition of the dead."

Two state agencies, the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority and the Massachusetts Port Authority, hire lobbyists to influence the legislature. And while the Massachusetts Mayors Association and the Massachusetts League of Cities and Towns have their lobbyists, Cambridge is the only community so far with a registered lobbyist. Harvard University also has its own lobbyist, according to the registration records.

Chrysler Corp. is the only automobile manufacturer with a registered lobbyist.

Other lobbyists represent diverse groups and interests, including teachers, labor groups, theater owners, contractors and subcontractors, newspaper publishers, sportsmen, grocers, liquor and racing interests, milk dealers, candy and tobacco distributors, hotel and motel owners, farmers, lawyers, automobile and motorcycle dealers, savings banks, realtors, advertisers and manufacturers.

Solzhenitsyn shops, talks to family

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press Writer

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Alexander Solzhenitsyn, a week after his arrest and exile, spent a quiet Tuesday shopping and considering plans for a place to live in a Western country.

On Monday he granted his first interview since his expulsion, telling The Associated Press he would carry on with his work and try to put down roots in a new place.

It is only a week since Soviet security agents and police knocked on the door of his apartment and dragged him off to prison. The next day they read him an edict stripping him of citizenship and put him aboard a plane for West Germany.

Solzhenitsyn, who has taken refuge in the quiet Zurich apartment of his Swiss lawyer, has been considering residence offers from several countries and keeping in touch with his family in Moscow by telephone.

Solzhenitsyn left the apartment late in the morning and asked newsmen not to follow him on a shopping tour. When he returned with some packages that looked like clothing boxes, the author was relaxed and smiling.

Solzhenitsyn crossed the street to thank newsmen for leaving him alone. "It was very nice," he said.

In Monday's interview, Solzhenitsyn indicated his family would not be joining him soon. He said it was difficult for the two women and four children in his family to "liquidate an existence of many years, to pack up, to get moving, to find a moment when none of the children are ill."

In Moscow, friends of the family said Solzhenitsyn's wife Natalya was making plans to take the family out of Russia, but it was still not certain when they would leave or where they would go.

Solzhenitsyn angered the Soviet authorities with his new book on Stalinist labor camps, "Gulag Archipelago." He was expelled from Russia after weeks of official attacks on him and his work.

Cape - it's leaving

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (AP) — The 15-town Barnstable County Selectmen's Association has voted to study a proposal for Cape Cod to secede from Massachusetts to form the 51st state in the union.

The proposal, submitted by Harwich Selectman Donn Griffin, maintains that the administration of Gov. Francis Sargent has failed to pay state money owed to the Cape communities.

The town of Brewster is suing the state for about $200,000 it says the state owes for Nickerson State Park. Rep. Richard Kendall, D-Falmouth, says the state owes the towns of Bourne and Sandwich nearly $2 million.

Griffin said an economic study of the Cape by the Cape Cod Planning and Economic Development Commission might show that the area would be better off keeping the taxes it generates on meals, gasoline, lodging and alcoholic beverages.

"After all, we've been philosophically and geographically separated from the rest of Massachusetts for years," Griffin said, "and the way things are going I think a lot of people down here would rather run their own affairs."

opinion-editorial

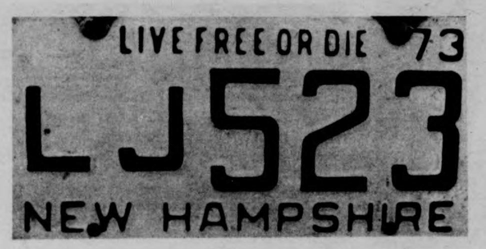
Well, if the ballet slipper fits Meldrim...

By KAREN A. MONACO

This is the biography of a latent, or rather I mean blatant, heterosexual, fictional character by the name of Meldrim Thompsin who is the governor of the mythical state of New Hampster.

It all started out quite a while back, when dear Meldrim was born of a heterosexual union, but actually that part of our story isn't nearly as exciting, in my estimation, as the present portion of his life is. It is only of late that the once young Meldrim has begun to attract public attention. You see, Meldrim has an unusual career and it isn't his governorship either. Meldrim is a heterosexual, which isn't all that startling a revelation to most and some might think that it is merely a sexuality. But with Meldrim it has become much more. It is an obsession. Indeed, a real life-driving force. It has transformed Meldrim's rather humdrum term as governor of New Hampster into one of splendour and gaiety for himself and the people of this mythical state.

Our story really begins at the local state university called, surprisingly enough, The University of New Hampster, where a group of homosexuals who were students there decided to be terribly outrageous and actually form a group designed to act as a social-political base of support for the Gay student population (yes — even New Hampster has homosexuals it would seem. Who would have thought it?) Meldrim doesn't actually always refer to them by either of the two names I have used. He has many other choice epithets which mine don't even approach in degree of creativity. "Faggot": that's a nice one and "queer", that kind of has a nice quality to it too.



Good gosh! Will the gracious governor grant gaiety to the Granite State gays, or is this license a forgery?

After a Gay students' dance held last semester, he and the Board of Trustees issued a statement prohibiting any further such social functions at the university. So it would appear that Meldrim doesn't care too much for the University of New Hampster's queerfolk or even for queerfolk in general. He thinks that homos proselytize and of course, we are all cognizant of the fact that "hets" don't. Well, just because the guy is governor doesn't mean that he can't suffer from brief (50 years) periods of delusional thinking, I suppose. But I imagine that such are the inevitable trials and tribulations to be endured by your basic heterosexual martyr. But why does Meldrim Thompsin choose martyrdom over a life of blissful nihility? For the answer to this puzzling question, it is necessary to delve once again into Thompsin's past.

His family was a poor one. His father was a traveling salesman and mother an average New Hampster housewife. Meldrim was very attached to his mother and also to his grandmother Gertrude, who had been living with the Thompsins ever since her alcoholic husband left her. His family became a little unnerved when, at the age of eight Meldrim asked for a pair of ballet slippers for Christmas. The problem was quickly solved, though, with the purchase of a miniature Mack truck by Mr. Thompsin for his son's playtime enjoyment. From that time on it appeared that Meldrim had acquiesced into his proper male role. In high school he dated (women) often, and was a member of the football team and the Debate Club. It was in college that he met his sweetheart (also a woman) whom he later married. One can easily see that his heterosexual chauvinism is the result of a classic case of the "ballet slipper deprivation syndrome," as it is commonly known in professional circles.

——Just this moment, I have received a bulletin from the wires of the Associated Press. It reads, "The governor of the state of New Hampster has just been arrested by vice squad agents on twelve counts of sodomy, lewdness, indecent exposure, and illegal hitchhiking. He was arrested by agents today as he and a male companion were leaving a highway motel. This action comes as a complete surprise to the entire state, whose population was assured of their governor's sexuality in light of numerous anti-homosexual statements made by him regarding the Gay Student Organization on the University of New Hampster campus. At the police station, bystanders witnessed the arrival of the Governor and his companion, who was the driver of the Mack truck which allegedly picked up the Governor whose car had run out of gas. When questioned by hoards of reporters on how this arrest might affect his political career, the Governor released a statement which reads, "I see this as no hindrance to it. I have made two decisions today. First, I intend to run for President of the United States on the gay ticket with Ms. Elaine Noble of Boston and second, I have enrolled in ballet classes at the University of New Hampster."

Letters To The Editor

"Gypsy" gyped?

To The Editor:

Many people have asked me lately, "Who is Gypsy?" Gypsy is an American citizen, incarcerated in Mexican jails serving a seven year sentence for transporting drugs across international borders, Columbia to Mexico. This is his story as told by him in a letter to a friend in the Amherst area.

"While in Columbia seeking land for my two daughters, I met two men who offered connections for land and work plus money if I would transport some emeralds from Columbia to Mexico — I was led to believe that all was legal — I agreed and was given airplane tickets, a suitcase with a sealed double bottom and instructions for delivering the suitcase in Alcapulco. When I arrived in Mexico City, drugs were found in the suitcase."

Mexican law states that a non-Mexican citizen in their jails serving up to a six year sentence can post a bond and be deported. Money is being raised to finance Gypsy's appeal to get his sentence lowered and to pay the bond. The Mexican judicial system deals fairly openly with a system of payoffs. This is an appeal to buy the freedom of a man who shouldn't be in jail.

The UMass Committee for a Sane Drug Policy feels that saving Gypsy is a worthwile endeavor. In that spirit, we, as an organization, are donating $20 to the "Save Gypsy Folks".

We are urging others, anyone who cares about another human beings' life, to contribute what they can. You can help by buying a "Save Gypsy" bumper sticker. If you would like to do more, get in touch with me and I will connect you with the right people. Please consider it. Your decision will help decide whether or not a man has to spend six more years in a foreign land, in a foreign jail. Thank you.

Mackay called on prison reform

To The Editor:

Just one month ago I was employed as a correction officer at Walpole State Prison. In reading Bob Mackay's article of February 11, 1974, I noticed that many facts were misrepresented. I don't know where he got his information from, but I suggest that he change his source because this type of propaganda can only serve to confuse the issue. I have severed all ties with Walpole, so I wish to put to rest any thoughts that this letter is or may be politically motivated: I have no reason to lie.

First I challenge your contention that prisoners have not had a hot meal for months. They are served hot breakfast at least four times a week; on the others days they receive cereal, fresh milk, fresh fruit, and hot coffee. In most cases they can eat as much as they like. They also eat hot lunches every day. In fact, the officers eat the same food as the inmates. The inmates do not have to work or pay for their food, the taxpayers pay.

Only during lockups are the inmates prevented from eating their meals in the dining hall. They do not eat suppers in there.

You noted that the inmates haven't been paid since last July, well there are officers that haven't been paid their overtime in over a year.

The minimum security blocks A1, A2 and A3, all have windows which have recently been repaired. Many times the inmates themselves smash out their windows and then complain of the cold. There is no effective means by which to control the inmates at Walpole. The disciplinary board is doing a lousy job. Many times officers look the other way rather than write reports on an inmate because he knows that it will only draw heat on him yet be ripped up by the board.

Inmates constantly harass the officers. They throw their food, their feces, and their urine at the officers. They assault and are continually abusing the privileges granted them. There are some who take it upon themselves to make as much trouble as possible.

Hence Mister Mackay, I hope this letter throws some light on the other side of the issue concerning Walpole. I am not contending that reform is not for the good, I just feel that it should be sensibly implemented. This is not being done at Walpole.

Vets slate candidates

To The Editor:

Next Wednesday and next Thursday of this week UMass commuters will elect representatives to the Commuter Assembly Executive Council. The Executive Council is the governing body for the Commuter Assembly which is composed of all undergraduate commuters at UMass; as such, the Commuter Assembly Executive Council has the influence and financial ability to institute many programs needed by commuters. For reasons unknown to us, the Executive Council has been unable to institute programs most required by commuters. Therefore, a group of concerned UMass undergraduate Veteran commuters have united to seek election to the Commuter Assembly Executive Council.

Some of the programs they will support when elected are:

So smile!

To The Editor:

I sit here alone and unhappy, wondering why I'm alone. THOUSANDS of people my age live around here and I'm sure that many of them live alone, too. But what do I see on campus? People with blank looks, people having nothing on their minds but the weight of a university day. . . ...

The university day is a maddling substitute for a normal one. But what has happened to interpersonal feelings; maybe they never existed, maybe they don't live anywhere. Then I will go on being alone. Fuck that shit! Smile

SLA grabs Tweety

Doubtless by now you have heard of the bizarre and tragic kidnapping that has taken place on this campus but a few days ago. A criminal action without parallel since someone castrated the statue of Metawampee and blew up a German House bathroom several years ago, is taking place. Yes, a dastardly act which only an incomparable crime fighting force such as the University Metermaid Patrol can solve. A fanatic group known as the Siamese Liberation Army, a multiracial, multilingual, bisexual organization has seized the valuable pet canary named Tweety belonging to Dr. Otto von Pauerhouse, Vice Chancellor of Student Confessions here at Whitmore. Tweety, a six foot 290 lb. bird is quite valuable to Dr. Pauerhouse and Whitmore. Tweety can recite the home mailing address of every student and employee of the University, which it has memorized, not to mention being the defending champion of the U.S.I.A. Pigeon Dunking Contest in Horsehair, Mississippi last year. Dr. Pauerhouse is very anxious to get Tweety back, as you can well imagine.

In a terse call made to a payphone outside the Hatch late yesterday afternoon, a spokesman identifying himself as part of the S.L.A. made a list of demands. He also let Tweety speak to Pauerhouse for one minute to guarantee its safety. The following is a verbatim transcript of what Tweety said: "Tweet! Twee-tweet! Tweetie Twietie, Tweet!" referring of course to Joe Frank of the English Department. Here is a list of the S.L.A. demands:

1. Poptarts in all assorted flavors — including peach cinnamon and watermelon, be given out free at all Dining Commons breakfast lines.
2. A five gallon jar of Dining Commons coffee, known in Goessman Hall as Nitric Acid, be poured into the Input Slot of Oscar, the Whitmore Computer.
3. Complimentary "Bill Baird Condoms" be passed out at key checkpoints around campus including the Newman Center, Everywoman's Center and Sigma Kappa.
4. Mandatory Literacy Tests be given out to all Rhetoric Instructors before they be renewed for another semester.
5. Ninety Modular School of Ed credits be given us for pulling of the kidnapping and fifty more if the demands are met.
6. All nonfunctional units in the University be dismantled and deported to Poland including Library elevators and ex Vice-Chancellors.
7. Amherst Towing distribute $70 worth of free food to all the poor and infirm in the Town of Amherst (including students).

The S.L.A. has warned that unless these demands are met within a week, that they would roast Tweety over an open flame and have the bird for supper. Dr. Pauerhouse has issued a statement to the effect that although the demands are "absurd", he would do everything in his power to see that they are carried out. He continued saying: "I can only hope that I'm dealing with Canary nappers of good faith, that if the demands are met, they'll release poor Tweety unharmed."

I talked with several Metermaids who are on the case and they said that they have several leads as to where Tweety was taken. It seems that one of them alertly noticed a thick trail of bird crap running into John Adams Tower in Southwest. When I asked the Metermaids what significance this might be toward the case, one of them shrugged and said that "Southwest was for the birds anyway." "Indeed," I replied. OH! THE PAIN OF IT ALL!

Goddamn it's cold

Two years ago I was sitting in a Venezuelan hospital waiting room, sweating my ass off, wishing for some nice cool air.

A year ago I was sitting in a gutter in Tijuana, fanning my traveling companions, wishing it wasn't so hot.

This year I'm sitting in my living room with two sweaters and a blanket wishing I was back in the warm countries.

But given the choice, I'd rather sweat.

Goddamn it's cold.

Granted this is the mildest winter we've had in years. The mildest winter if you're used to living in the woods. But it's the coldest winter that I can remember in a long time.

But how do you keep warm? What do you do? Buy sweaters? Sleep with your roommates? Escape to the warm climate? Even if you wanted to escape to the south, I don't think you could. By the time you waited through the lines at the gas station, you've probably allowed enough fuel to get you through the next line.

My eighth grade history teacher told me that the best time that this country has ever seen was that time during the Depression. Not economically, but socially. Socially meaning that people were together.

People were together in that they weren't selfish. Selfish being: knowing of a gas station that's open when the others aren't and not telling anyone else about it.

Times are getting hard and instead of hoarding we should be sharing. We should be sharing our food. We should be sharing our oil. And we should be sharing our gas.

During the Depression the expression, "Hey buddy can you spare a dime?" was heard. During the Crisis it should be, "Hey buddy would you share that dime?" Or even, "Hey buddy want to share a dime?"

During the Depression people were aware that other people had nothing. During the crisis people don't care what other people have. As long as they, themselves, have enough.

During the Depression, people saw movies that made them forget about their troubles. People during the Crisis refuse to recognize that there is a crisis and continue their day to day existence as though things will "be over in a while."

It is this selfishness that is causing a crisis. People never started carpools when the environmentalists explained what air-pollution or depleting our natural resources meant. People waited until they couldn't escape to their winter retreat any longer, or got bored waiting in line.

This country is driving itself into a depression. Maybe by having another depression, people will get together. I don't think that a depression will solve our problems, but maybe a little togetherness will.

Sometimes I am frightened

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Taking a look at the laws and legal system in this country can be a frightening and confusing experience.

One day last semester I sat in Hampshire District Court and watched as a 24-year old UMass student was sentenced to 12 years in a state prison for the possession and sale of certain controlled drugs including cocaine and amphetamines.

Twelve years in prison.

This student testified that he had not been dealing but when repeatedly approached by a disguised state narcotics agent looking for drugs he found what the narc wanted. Any of us could do the same.

The law prohibits us from possessing it, the law prohibits us from dealing it. But if some dope is stolen from us it seems the law is willing to step in.

A late January issue of the Amherst Record reported that a 24-year old UMass-Boston student had been arraigned in Hampshire District Court for an armed robbery committed in a Southwest dormitory last October. He was charged with armed robbery, assault with a dangerous weapon and assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon. Bail was set at $2,500.

What had this man stolen? Reportedly, an unspecified amount of marijuana.

I remember spending a night in a jail cell for disturbing the peace. I had been asleep in my beach house when the police woke me while attempting to break my door down. It was Labor Day weekend and apparently some others who lived on my street had been making a ruckus. I was awakened to be brought to jail.

Many of my friends who were picked up for drunkenness or loitering or disturbing the peace or whatever, were beaten by the police. They could never figure out why and they could never find a way to take action against the police.

I am sure that each one of you could tell me at least one similar story.

Perhaps I am naive, but I can simply not understand why these things have happened and why, each day, they continue to happen. A lot of the time I can not understand police actions and almost all of the time I can not understand court actions. I especially cannot understand why they are accepted by the people of this country who seem resigned to accept almost anything.

Sometimes I am frightened.

Tower...fat from UM

By MIKE ALLAIN

Amherst Towing dragged 1653 vehicles off the UMass campus last semester, according to figures released last week by Allan L. Lawson of the University Department of Public Safety.

Charging a minimum of $15 per tow, Amherst Towing grossed no less than $24,795 for the period beginning on October 1 and running through the end of December.

Oct. 1 - Dec. $24,795 gross

These figures do not include the month of September, when autos were neither ticketed now towed while the University's new parking system was implemented.

Amherst Towing was the lone bidder for the University Towing contract when bids opened on December 12, 1973, said Jake E. Bishop of the Procurement Office in Goodell.

Nine companies were contacted by the office, and three replied. But Amherst Towing's bid of $14, plus a dollar a day for storage, was the only bid received by the Procurement Office, said Bishop.

Amherst towing only bidder. Monopoly?

The contract is normally awarded to the lowest bidder who satisfies both the University, which demands adequate insurance, and the Department of Public Utility, which checks on the company's license, according to Bishop.

DPU regulates Amherst Towings operation

The current 15 dollar fee was approved by the DPU, which regulates Amherst Towing's operation.

The University receives no part of the $15 tow fee, Bishop added. Parking ticket receipts, however, which for the same three month period last semester numbered 13,875, are deposited into the University Scholarship Fund.

A student Senate sub-committee is currently working on plans for a non-profit towing service, which would be run by students in conjunction with the Security Department.

Director of Security David Johnston has indicated to the committee that he will accept the proposal, said Student Senator Rick Savini. But Savini is unsure whether Vice Chancellor Robert Gage will approve of the plan.

Amherst Towing's contract expires on December 31 of this year.

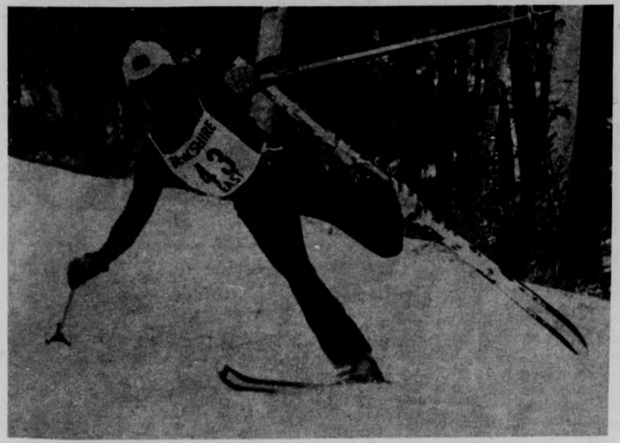
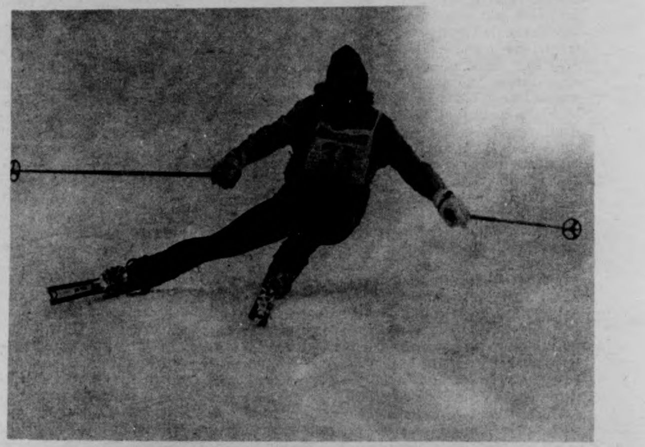
HOT DOGGING AT BERKSHIRE EAST

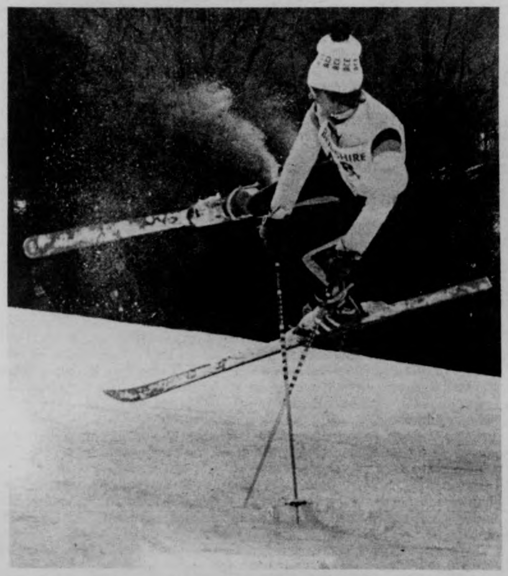
BALLET ON SKIS



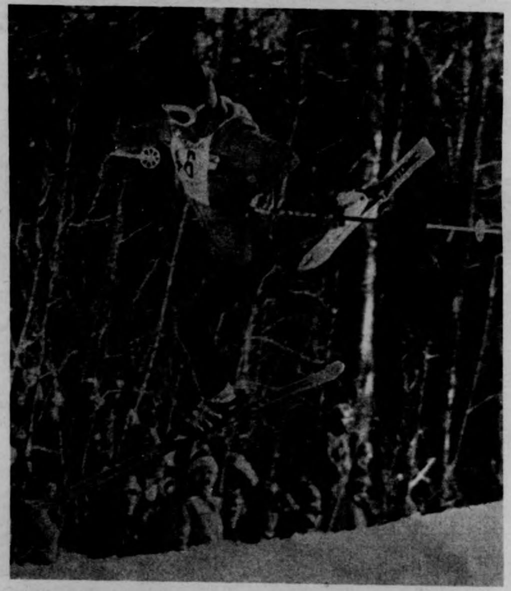
A beautiful royal christie executed by Dave Gilfoil of UMass.



A perfectly executed outrigger.



Taking off on your poles and rolling around on the tips of your skis is what the tip-roll is all about.



Going one step above the royal christie into a flying royal christie. It looks more and more like the Bolshoi.

The epitome of skiing used to be either flowing down a mountain like honey in perfect form and in perfect control — or crasing through a slalom gate trying to have precious seconds shaved off the clock.

In recent years, the experts who were bored with looking good or who never cared much about time started a new style of skiing -- hot dogging. In the early days, hot dogging was simply fast skiing down a slope spending as much time as possible in the air.

But as with all things that become popular, some kind of order has now come to hot-dogging. There are now three divisions of hot-dogging. Freestyle — the old go like hell routine; ballet — closely resembling figure skating except that the skates are replaced by short-skis; and the most spectacular of all hot-dogging — aerial acrobatics.

Last weekend Berkshire East ski area in Charlemont was the scene for the second annual professional hot-dog contest. Some of the top pros in the nation were there competing for $3,000 in prize money. A Collegian photographer captured the action for these two pages.

SVS offers chance for volunteering

By JOAN WRIGHT

A need for change, a need for social rehabilitation, and a need for each other is what Student Volunteer Services (SVS) is all about. Part of the Outreach Program, SVS has had resounding success aiding students concerned in fulfilling their own and others' needs.

Doug Scott, placement coordinator for S.V.S, outlined the opportunities of the UMass student in this organization. "We act as a referral service. Students come in who have some interest and a little bit of free time who want to volunteer."

S.V.S. feels that the volunteer system is designed for the masses to work for the welfare of a few. programs that have led people to believe otherwise haven't and don't help the system. Doug pointed out that "social service or change is in working for it not just getting together to debate about it."

S.V.S. lists several agencies dealing with various problems in such areas as: Community Organizing, Tutoring, Physically Handicapped, Drug Treatment, Child Care, Elderly, Corrections Institutions, Poverty Programs, Juvenile Delinquency, Mental Retardation, Youth Development, Alternative Schools, Women's and Men's Centers, Recreational Services and many more. Such agencies affiliated with the above include: American Friends Service Committee, Belchertown Volunteers, Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Hampshire Correctional Services, Mass. Association for the Blind and Westfield Detention Center.

The gist of S.V.S. is to act as a resource center open to concerned students and to assist them in locating an agency best affiliated with his interests. Several colloquia courses are also offered in the residence areas to enable the student in expanding the volunteer work experience.

Most agencies associated with S.V.S. are looking for an unlimited number of volunteers. The amount of time spent is up to the student.

Many students have developed specific ideas and have helped to initiate programs. There is a display in the Campus Center listing most everything offered at S.V.S. Further information may be obtained at 408 Goodell Building on campus.

Training academy class ends

Twenty-two corrections officers from eight Massachusetts counties graduated Friday, from the first of five special training academies at UMass.

The 22 graduates of this first academy represented the counties of Berkshire, Bristol, Franklin, Hampden, Hampshire, Middlesex, Suffolk, and Worcester.

The Massachusetts County Correctional Officers Training Academy, which lasted three weeks, was designed to present corrections officers with information on changing trends in the field of corrections, and to instill in them "the need to continue their educations at institutions of higher education," according to Academy Director John Anderson of the UMass School of Education.

In-service training programs will also be offered county corrections officers. Instructors are chosen from UMass, the Massachusetts County Correctional System, and other segments of the criminal justice system. All counties will be included in this semester's programs.

144,000 (golf) balls stolen in Rhody

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Thieves escaped with 144,000 golf balls valued at nearly $200,000 on the retail market from the Uniroyal, Inc., plant, police said Tuesday.

The balls were the most expensive made by Uniroyal — the U.S. Royal Plus Six, retailing at $1.35 each, police said.

Police said the operation apparently required a considerable amount of time as the thieves carted the balls from a caged area, lowered them on a freight elevator and loaded them on a truck. The theft occurred sometime late Sunday night or Monday morning.

This guy's for the birds

By BOB GREENE
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — "I would like to get a job working with birds and possibly help the rarer species from going extinct," wrote Mike Robey. His interest in birds and their survival may turn into a prosperous career.

Robey, a 17-year-old high school senior, wrote to American Cage-Bird magazine. He noted that college did not particularly appeal to him nor was essential to his goal.

"I find raising canaries both a fascinating and profitable hobby," he said.

The lanky-6-foot student received an answer from Bill Hanning of Silverton, Ore., one of the largest parakeet breeders in the nation. Hanning offered the teenager a job with the prospect of eventually taking over the business.

Hanning, 58, raises 20,000 parakeets and sells nearly 1,000 a week at $3 and up apiece.

This week, at Hanning's expense, Mike is vacationing in Oregon, looking at the business that may one day be his.

"I received a number of responses to my letter," Mike said. "Most said I was crazy not going to get a college education."

There was a San Francisco widow who has her own private collection of rare birds. She offered to move near a college of Mike's choice so that he could attend school while he worked.

Soft-spoken, Mike has had birds for as long as anyone in his family can remember.

"Every spring, he would be treating a robin with a busted wing, or a sparrow that had fallen from its nest," said Mike's father, Bill Robey, a field technician.

Mike's been breeding birds for the past three years, and now has 30 canaries, along with button quail, finches and ringneck doves. His canaries sell for $18 each for males and $10 apiece for females.

Film course offered

A 3-credit film course entitled Film Ensemble Workshop (Education 386-686) will be introduced this semester through continuing education. The group will develop through discussion, inspiration, rehearsal, characters and special environment, several short, silent films to be cinemagraphed by the director. Participants will be chosen from a wide variety of theater experience and will be involved in all stages of the film's development.

The course will meet on Mondays from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. beginning March 18th with productions scheduled for some weekends. Registration began this week in 203 Hills House North. The course will cost students $81.

"Gaybreak"

The Student Homophile League, in conjunction with WMUA, is currently producing a radio program entitled "Gaybreak". The show consists of gay music, poetry, and discusses various other aspects of being gay. On Wednesday, Feb. 20, a special show is planned, which is the result of nearly two months of work. The program will include a gay soap opera, poetry, a gay sing along, and a few surprises. The show will be aired at 8:00 Wednesday night, on WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Would you hire you?

Of course you would.
You work hard. And you're good at it. Like most Americans.
But, if all of us did just a little better, we'd wind up with better products, better services and even more pride in the work we do.

America. It only works as well as we do.

It is offered until March 22. Any student can come to the Student Development and Career Planning Center and begin the project. He can work at his own pace and in his free time. It usually takes about 2-4 hours to complete the project.

The Center is located in Berkshire House. Interested persons should contact Sharon Zanowiak in room 212 from 9-5 on weekdays. Coordinators of the project will make every effort to accomodate all interested students.

EARLY CLASSES ARE LATER at St. Bonaventure U., where the Administration is trying to entice students into morning classes by scheduling them a half-hour later.

According to a page one dispatch in The Bonaventure, first classes now begin at 8:30 a.m. and at each successive hour thereafter on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Only 8:30 and 10:00 o'clock classes meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

WAR ON TWO OPPOSING FRONTS has been declared at Denver University. Headline over a page one story indicated that "Student Health Services To Fight Strep Throat and VD."

Which takes care of things at both ends.

ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING, again...a history prof at Arizona State, where some faculty are plumping for unionization, describes the appeal as "largely to people who are mediocre" and "unionization created a vested interest in forms of behavior which are now on the way out."

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK- comes from the Clemson U. Tiger, over a story about the local petrol problem: "Local station owners feel gas pains."

Irving - he's out

BOSTON (AP(— Serving time in a federal prison leaves him humiliated and bitter, says paroled author Clifford Irving, jailed for 17 months at the Danbury, Conn., correctional facility for his part in the Howard Hughes autobiography hoax.

Irving is now living in a New York halfway house and was quoted by The Boston Globe, which took the Federal Bureau of Prisons to court in an attempt to gain an interview with the author while he was still in the Danbury institution.

A federal court judge eventually ruled that The Globe or any other newspaper should not be denied interviews with prisoners in federal institutions.

"Incarceration of men who are not violent and, therefore, are in jail to be punished is not only kind of barbaric and pointless, but as far as I can see leads to the hardening of the criminal mentality and to further crime," Irving told The Globe.

"The longer you stay in prison, the more bitter you get. It is my own personal experience and the experience of every man I know," he said.

Irving was held in the Allenwood, Pa., Federal Prison Camp and the Lewisburgh Penitentiary before he was transferred to Danbury.

"That's kind of the gamut of the federal system," he said, "and I've done time with men who have been in practically every prison in the United States."

He said most prisoners believe no aspect of the penal system is working except the halfway house plan known as the Community Treatment Center programs.

"I've suffered the shock of incarceration. I've learned a lesson of being taken away, of being humiliated. Now what more can I learn?" he said.

Second in YanCons

Weights sink trackmen

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Sports Staff

Just when UMass' cross country runners were making a habit of winning championship meets, the University of Connecticut stepped in and won the Yankee Conference indoor track crown, by scoring in every event except the two-mile run.

The harriers captured the Yankee Conference and New England championships during the cross country season, and were looking for their third title in just five months, this time as a part of the indoor track team.

A strong UConn squad spoiled the Minutemen's trip to Burlington on Saturday and captured its second straight Conference crown. The Huskies finished 12 points ahead of UMass, 81-69. Homestanding Vermont finished a distant third with 19 points while Maine, Boston University, Rhode Island and New Hampshire followed in that order.

The Minutemen enjoyed a great day in the distance events, long jump and triple jump. By dominating these events, UMass softened the blow of the defeat and picked up 59 points. In the two mile, Randy Thomas led teammates John McGrail, Tom Wilson, and Tom Maguire to the top four places, as all four broke 9:12.5 Equally impressive was a 1-2 finish in the 1,000 by Jack Maloney and Devin Croft, with freshman Jim Hunt taking fifth. Bill Gillin and Chris Farmer combined with Harry Kelley and Peter Byron for a runaway win in the two-mile relay. Gillin and Farmer competed in the relay after having finished second and third respectively, in the mile.

Mike Geraghty continued his excellent season with a Conference win over teammate Ken Adamson in the long jump. Geraghty and Adamson then finished behind Connecticut's double winner, Herman Bigelow, in the triple jump, with Peter Ryan and Bob Adamson fourth and fifth. Bigelow later captured the high jump to go with his Conference record of 47'9½" in the triple jump.

UMass suffered a scoring lapse, totaling 10 points in the remaining eight events, while the Huskies scored 68. A Connecticut win in the weight throw with two other places and a sweep of the top three spots in the shot put enabled the Huskies to take a lead they never relinquished. UMass freshman Scott Herman was fifth in the shot put with his best throw of the season, 46'7½".

A UMass school record in the pole vault went almost unnoticed. Dan Grigus cleared 14' on his first attempt, only to see three vaulters clear 15' and two others clear 14'6". With his jump, however, Grigus became the first UMass vaulter ever to clear 14' either in indoor or outdoor competition.

Barron Littlefield ran his fastest 600 of the season in 1:13.6 to finish third, but UMass had to take a back seat to UConn as Steve Hulme equaled the Conference record with teammate Daryl King taking second. Littlefield later combined with Steve Crimmins, Larry Whitfield and Curt Stegerwald to take second in the mile relay.

Jim Hennessy was the final UMass scorer as he finished fourth in the 50-yard high hurdles behind record setting Paul Tyler of BU, who added a Conference title to the Greater Boston crown he captured a week earlier.

Puck leagues settle case, no merger seen

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The 57-year-old National Hockey League and the two-year-old World Hockey Association settled their $50-million case out of court Tuesday, but the older league said there was no merger agreement in sight.

"It would be wholly misleading to describe the settlement of this legal dispute as a merger," NHL President Clarence Campbell said Tuesday after both leagues signed the agreement before U.S. Dist. Court Judge Leon A. Higginbotham.

Despite Campbell's firm negative stand on the possibilities of a merger, the agreement seemed to point in that direction. The two leagues agreed to respect each other's player contracts, compete in a limited number of exhibition games and drop all court claims and counterclaims. They also promised future negotiations for more exhibitions and possibly interleague games.

Under the agreement, the WHA will be reimbursed by the NHL for legal expenses of $1.75 million. The money is to be paid before Aug. 1, 1974, plus interest at the prime rate prevailing Jan. 15, 1974, through the date of payment.

In still another gain by the fledgling WHA, the NHL agreed not to oppose use of NHL arenas by the WHA teams.

The consent decree signed by Judge Higginbotham said specifically that on or before Jan. 1, 1975, committees of owners from both leagues would negotiate in good faith for scheduling of other exhibitions or interleague games, including an All-Star game.

Once in Pat Keenans shadow Harris looks for the light

By KATIE KING
MDC Sports Staff

"I had a good season last year, but this season I just can't seem to get things together, and I really don't know why I'm not doing as well. I thought that this season would be easier, but it hasn't been."

After having witnessed Minuteman starting center Billy Harris' sparkling performance in last Friday's bout against Colby in which he figured in five of the six UMass scores with two goals and three assists one would never imagine the above words to be his. Unfortunately they are, and he's telling it like it is.

BILLY HARRIS

Last season flashy number eighteen was a confident, proud, positive, rather cocky centerman on the Pat Keenan line. Playing on that line in his rookie year of Minuteman hockey, the 5'10" center proved that he has what it takes in becoming the squad's third highest scorer, finishing the season with 12 goals and 22 assists. Yet this year has turned out to be an entirely different story, and a bit of a letdown.

It's true that when one plays on a line with Pat Keenan, he is bound to have himself a pretty decent season. It's true that Billy is playing on a much younger, less experienced club this year, with only three seniors and a lot of new faces. Yet the sophomore Poli-Sci major looked promising in preseason practices, and it seemed that he was out for another impressive campaign — maybe even more so than last year — but something went wrong. About midway through the season things didn't look as hopeful. Something was lacking, and even Billy couldn't pinpoint just what it was.

Last year he worked really hard to get the center position on the Keenan line. This year he's working hard too, but getting different results. Keenan was the main man last season. In his absence it would only make sense that Harris would be called upon to fill his spot. It would be Billy's turn to get the puck more often, and set up all the pretty plays, but he hasn't been able to do ti, and he knows it. "Take breakaways, for example," Billy said. "I've had at least ten clean breakaways this season, and I think I've scored on about two of them. There's no excuse for that! Sometimes I just lie in bed after a game and ask myself, 'why did you do this and why did you do that?'"

Despite Billy's obvious frustration, he works to maintain a good attitude towards the game itself. He won't let a bad game or the fact that he hasn't lived up to his rookie image get the best of him, because he feels that an athelete's success is based primarily on a positive attitude and a willingness to seek out the problem and solve it, even though it may take time. Right now Billy is sorting out his game in his mind. He has the talent to overcome whatever it is that is holding him back — he's proven that. He's a strong skater and much of his style is reflective of Keenan's.

Billy loves hockey and he knows that he has the potential. All the reactants are there but the product is lacking. Through the process of elimination, about the only other thing could be affecting Harris' game could be his attitude, but again, it couldn't be the answer. Billy feels that his attitude hasn't changed one bit. "I have concentration and finesse, and I try to get myself up for the games as best I can. I keep a good attitude, but for some reason it just isn't the same as last season."

Records fall, so do swimmers

CenConn, Amherst take tri-meet

By DAVE EIBEL
MDC Sports Staff

Before yesterday afternoon's swim meet between UMass, Amherst and Central Connecticut, Bey Melamed, the coach of the Minutemen, gave the meet all the coloring of an inter-city grudge match. "We won't beat Central Connecticut, we just want to beat Amherst."

Unfortunately for the men swimmers their coach proved to be wrong. They not only did not beat Central Connecticut but they were also edged out by Amherst on the last event of the meet, the 400-yard freestyle relay, and in the process finished third in yesterday's tri-meet. The final tally had it 83 for Central Connecticut, 60 for the Lord Jeffs, and 57 for the Minutemen.

UMass, led by Ben Crooker's first in the 1000-yard freestyle and a two-three finish from Joe Hebert and Duncan Lomas in the 200-yard freestyle was actually tied for the lead after three events. However Central Connecticut won three events in-a-row, the 50-yard freestyle, the 200-yard individual medley, and the required diving competition to break the meet wide open.

In fact, UMass outscored the eventual winners 31-27 in the last five events but the margin of CenConn's lead was too large for the Minutemen to overcome.

The individual story from the UMass standpoint centered on the performances of Ben "Ironman" Crooker. Crooker, bespectacled out of the pool, a handy dolphin in it won both his events, the 1000 and 500 yard freestyles leaving the other five competitors in his wake. Ben won the 1000-yard freestyle by an incredible 38 seconds over an Amherst swimmer and came back later on to win the 500-yard freestyle by ten seconds over another Lord Jeff swimmer.

The only other UMass win was that of Dave Boucher in the 200 yard breaststroke. The freshman came back later to swim the third leg of the 400-yard freestyle relay which UMass led until the fourth and last leg only to lose to Amherst and "the fastest swimmer in New England" according to UMass' George Kwiecien, Steve de la Rama.

Coach Bey Melamed was upset with the loss but thrilled with his team's performances. "All our swimmers swam their best times ever and we broke two school records." (Boucher and Lomas) It's just too bad we couldn't win."

The swimmers now 5-5 on the season take to the water this Saturday afternoon at 2?00 taking on a powerful Coneecticut team.

Jo Jo White pushes Celtics past Pistons

BOSTON (AP) — JoJo White's hot hand revived the sagging Boston Celtics in the third period Tuesday afternoon and sent them on to a 107-97 victory over the Detroit Pistons.

White pitched in 15 points in the crucial period as the Celtics moved from a 66-59 deficit to a 77-70 lead over a four-minute span.

White's scoring spree came after Detroit's Dave Bing had hustled the Pistons out to their most substantial lead, popping in six points and setting up Willie Norwood's basket.

John Havlicek and Don Nelson steered the Celtics to a 54-52 lead at halftime. Havlicek had 15 points and Nelson 13 as Boston was in front by as much as eight points in the second period.

Havlicek lead all the scorers with 31 points, White had 23 and Nelson 17 for Boston. Bing had 21 and Bob Lanier had 18 for the Pistons.

Injuries hurt gymnasts at Springfield

By CANDY GROSS

A very real problem in any sport are the injuries which occur. In reply to questions concerning injuries on the women's gymnastics team and its possible effect on their defeat by Springfield, Coach Virginia Evans had this to say.

"There are other injuries than those which happen during a meet. These either cause the women to limit their workouts or completely remove themselves from the line-up."

Giving some insight into the problems of coaching, Ms. Evans explains that one can have a team which looks good in October and as the season progresses, often will lose some of its top athletes to injury. But these are unforeseen circumstances and Coach Evans doesn't like the idea of using team injuries to explain a loss. Her philosophy is to believe in the team members and work with what she has.

As she expresses it, "We have a good team and there's no reason we can't beat Springfield." In her opinion, Springfield didn't show they were the better team, only that they had a slight advantage in consistency and depth of performance for this meet. This was particularly noticeable on balance beam. She states that on the whole, UMass' routine composition and originality is much better than Springfield's, although she does feel their composition has improved since last year. Summing it up she says, "You don't lose with a score of 105 points and be considered a lousy team!"

Asked about specific highlights for UMass in the meet, the following gymnasts earned particular mention.

"Anne (Vexler) and Jeannine (Burger) are pushing each other for top All Around honors. (Jeannine won at SC with 35.2, and Anne tied with Katherine Kolemainen of SC for third with 34.9). Both are extremely strong competitors. Jodi (Hitt) definitely helped the team with solid beam and floor routines and continues to improve. Heidi's (Armstrong) fine beam routine will perhaps earn a higher score with a position further along in the line-up. Bars, somewhat weak Thursday night, will improve with the addition of a superior move in both Gail McCarthy's and Linda Nelligan's otherwise clean routines."

Tonight's home meet at 7:00 against Boston State will see competition from the top UMass line-up. UMass needs one more intercollegiate score to earn seeding in the last round at Easterns. This meet should give it to them with no problems whatsoever.

Women skiiers slalom to second

By GALEN GOOD

The UMass Women's Ski Team maintained their high standards by finishing second and third in slalom and giant slalom events at Tenny Mt. in New Hampshire this past Saturday. Despite icy snow conditions the W.I.S.C. (Women's Intercollegiate Skiing Conference) saw sixty-two racers competing for individual standings and combined team totals.

The traditionally strong Radcliffe and UConn teams edged UMass in the slalom that morning. However, top individual honors went to UMass skier Betsy Hussey who bested the rest of the field by more than two seconds in winning both runs. She was followed by Rachel Courtney in fifth place. The third time to count for UMass team standings was a fine performance by French skier, Marie Spiegel.

The feature event of the day was the longer and faster giant slalom in which UMass was a close second behind Radcliffe. UMass was more consistent due to its highly supportive B-team: Becky Folta, Eloise Gattso, Theresa Huttin, and Debbie Mellet. For the A-team Betsy Hussey was well on her way to win the second event but caught her tip at the top of the rooted course. Rachel Courtney was fourth, Galen Good was seventh closely followed by Jean Hayden in eighth place.

Next weekend the women's team will again return to Tenny with hopes of upsetting their rival, Radcliffe.

Leaman's lions play games with 'caged' Catamounts, 89-61

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

It was a night for fun.

On the way to a 89-61 shellacking of the University of Vermont, the UMass Minutemen wowed another under-par Cage crowd with playground improvisations that nearly reached sideshow proportions.

Rick Pitino unvieled his Whirling-Dervish pass, Al Skinner moved to flick a fly off his ear, and in so doing notched a neat assist, Joe Semder hit a flying hook, and Mike Stokes knocked down a 6'7" center.

"We beat them with our quickness," said Coach Jack Leaman, and anyone seeing the aforementioned antics had to agree.

"It was just a case of us performing as a team, outhustling, outdefensing, and outshooting Vermont", added the UMass coach.

UMass led from the start, and behind the solid first half play of Al Skinner, rolled to a 44-20 halftime advantage.

From then on, it was sit back and watch the show, as Cage fans (only 2400) thrilled to the exploits of the trash time troupe.

Mike Stokes, who in one fantastic stretch grabbed a rebound, scored, scored again, got an offensive for toppling UVM's Ron Gottschalk (nine inches his senior), got another rebound, made an assist, forced a turnover, assisted again, and finally grabbed another rebound, was the crowd's delight.

"He and Semder have the ability," remarked Leaman of the two sparky subs, "and all they needed was the chance to play".

Semder sent fans scurrying to their programs in search of No. 40, as he hit all six of his shots from the floor for 12 points.

Everyone had a solid game for UMass, it seemed. Leaman also praised John Murphy (16 pts), Billy Endicott (14 pts), and Pitino (9 assists).

No one could stop Al Skinner, again. The artful forward led everyone in both points and rebounds, with 21 and 10.

Vermont turned in a frail game. Their leading scorer, Charlie Trapani (15), hit only 33 per cent from the floor.

Even that was above the team's average for the night — the Catamounts hit an anemic 29 per cent, and that was up from a halftime mark of 16 per cent.

CAGE CAROUSING — The NCAA selection committee was represented at the Cage last night. The Minutemen still have an outside shot at an at-large bid, and the show they put on last night couldn't have hurt...A suddenly apathetic basketball community is starting to form...last night was the third small turnout in the last four games...

....The final home game of the year is next Saturday night, vs. Maine...it will be the last home game for the Minuteman seniors, Al Skinner, Rick Pitino, and John Olson, and if the current trend continues, it could be played before many grey seats...The team record is now 18-4, and UMass has just about clinched the YanCon title, with only one conference loss.

UMass hopeful for miracles vs. UNH

By DAVE EIBEL
MDC Sports Staff

It's time to look back in history, as the Minutemen skaters prepare to take on the second-ranked University of New Hampshire Wildcats tonight at 8:30, in the friendly confines of intimate Orr Rink.

Think back to some of the more incredible events in history and you'll be able to gauge what a victory tonight would mean for UMass.

In 1967, the tiny State of Israel demolished the armed forces of five Arab nations bucking everyone's odds. In 1940 tiny England singlehandedly repelled the forces of Nazi Germany. A UMass victory would be almost as unbelievable tonorrow night as those two events were when they occured. A UMass upset would be akin to the California Golden Seals upending the Bruins three games in-a-row.

Although the Minutemen are not in a "do-or-die" situation, their chances of victory hinge on two things, the miraculous and the impossible.

UNH is ranked second in the national rankings to Michigan Tech. They have a record of 19 wins and 6 losses and lead the ECAC Division One teams.

Although past records are supposed to be meaningless, a comparison of past performances by the two teams shows the qualitative difference between the clubs. UMass dropped 11-2 decision to Colgate during intersession while UNH beat Colgate twice by scores of 6-2 and 8-7 in overtime. The Minutemen lost to Bowdoin by a 5-2 score over the weekend while the Wildcats dropped Bowdoin 7-1. New Hampshire dropped Yale 6-1 while the UMies lost to the Ivies by the same count. According to past records the UMies should be shellacked tonight BUT...

The Wildcats come to Orr Rink tonight after a tough match against Cornell at Ithaca, New York, last night. They could be tired and ready for the taking. The Minutemen have shown that they can be good — at times very good. They played Vermont nip and tuck in Burlington and came out of it on the short end of a 4-2 count. With any luck they could have won that one, and more of the same type of play tonight against UNH: airtight Chick Rheault goaltending, crisp checking by the forwards, and alert defensive play by the blueline corps — could produce, if not an upset, at least a respectable performance.

JV's out-defensed by Dartmouth, 51-45

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

It didn't have a Hollywood ending.

But the rest of the game was strictly high drama as Dartmouth out-defensed the UMass JV squad, 51-45, in an unusually interesting contest last night at the Cage.

As it turned out, the game was decided by three key flips by Dartmouth's John Lisowski. The first two important shots by the guard came as foul shots with 1:07 left, and his team ahead by two. He hit both of them.

Then, after UMass missed a hurried shot, he iced the game with a break-away lay-up.

Leading the UMass attack were the two old reliables Bill Santos and Arnold Johnson. Santos came back from some recent sub-par games to score 18 points. Johnson, playing opposite a bigger, but slower, center counted for 15 with a five for 11 mark from both the floor and the line.

Dave Strader, coming on strong of late, turned in a houndish effort on defense, and though he scored no points, he led everyone in assists with five.

The UMass JV's are now 8-4 on the year and meet the same Dartmouth team Friday night on the road, before playing their final game of the year Saturday night at home versus Thames Valley Technical College.

WMUA

Tonight the Minutemen play host to UNH, the second-ranked college hockey team in the nation. Game time is 8:30, and WMUA will join the game in progress at 9:00 with Russ Small, Bill Ballou, and Paul Allen calling the action.

Div. II playoff picture

9-6 in Division Two isn't that bad for a team that figured to be more or less a .500 club. Still, considering the opportunities for something like 10-5 or 11-4, it must rank as somewhat of a disappointment.

From this vantage point, with the season almost over, it appears as though the Minutemen will make the playoffs for the fourth season in a row.

The only other team that can say that is Vermont, so it ranks as an accomplishment for the young UMies. But if they do indeed make the post-season tournament, they face an uphill struggle for the championship. Uphill may be too kind a word. Something like "vertical" would be more accurate.

Anyway, it's prediction time, when I traditionally pick the teams who, until the time I make my predictions, seem sure bets to qualify for the playoffs.

In order of seed:

1) Vermont. There's no debate that the Cats are the class of Division Two, but there is a good chance they could qualify for the Division One playoffs. Their coach, Jim Cross, has said, though, that they won't play Division One unless they get one of the four top seeds. I doubt that they will, ergo...

2) Merrimack. It's really a toss-up between them and Salem State, but the Warriors hold the only divisional win over Vermont and that should help. They also play a better schedule than Salem.

3) Salem State. State started off the season with a 9-0 binge that they haven't been able to duplicate. Definitely the surprise of the season, their early season heroics will probably carry them to this high seed.

4) Norwich. The Cadets have been one of the strongest teams in the division over the last two months. They lost earlier to UMass but since have outplayed the Minutemen in comparative outings. They've done especially well on the road.

5) Boston State. Another team that started strong but has faded a bit in recent weeks. They've split two games with UMass even though they were outplayed in both. They suffered an embarrassing 7-2 loss to Colby in Boston, but are another team that somehow traditionally makes the playoffs.

6) UMass. The Minutemen have been streaky throughout the season and were on a relatively good streak until they suffered their traditional loss to Bowdoin Saturday. Their five-game winning streak in late December is the main reason they did as well as they did.

7) Williams. Have had a good, steady, if unspectacular season. They lost early in the season to UMass but are quite evenly matched with the UMies. They've played well lately and might be the darkhorse pick to be seeded higher than this.

8) St. Anselm's. Really a shot in the dark. The "team of the future" of two years ago still hasn't lived up to expectations and has suffered through an extremely mediocre season (including a 7-2 loss to UMass). They might sneak in.

Dark horses include: Army (good record but they say they aren't interested in post-season play); Bowdoin (a good team having a bad season); Hamilton (off-and-on, mostly off); and Connecticut (they've been playing poorly lately).

Seeds mean a lot in the playoffs. Very rarely are games won on the road, and UMass is almost certain to play any of their playoff games on the road.

Obviously Vermont is the favorite. I don't think either Merrimack or Salem State will win it. The team to watch after Vermont, is Norwich, while the Minutemen stand an outside chance.

There is the possibility they'll get a seed in the top four. After all, they were seeded second last year with a relatively unimpressive record. But there are just too many good teams in the division this year.

In a series of one-game eliminations, anything can happen. A streak of luck can bring a team a long way. UMass had better have more than their share, because just about everything else is against them.

Healy cleared for baseball

By MIKE BROPHY
MDC Baseball Writer

AMHERST — John Healy, catcher for the UMass baseball team, has had his waiver honored by the administration, which will enable him to play baseball for the UMass Minutemen this spring.

Healy, 21, and his parents had drawn up a waiver releasing the University of any responsibility for injury suffered by Healy while playing the sport of baseball.

Healy underwent abdominal surgery last summer for an intestinal disorder and it was at that time the doctors discovered Healy had been born with one kidney.

Up until the discovery, Healy had been a top-rated defensive free safety for the 1972 Boardwalk Bowl champion UMass football team in addition to manning the catchers' box behind home plate. He opted to give up football in hopes of pursuing his baseball career.

At one point during football season the University doctors informed Healy that they could not clear him to play baseball on the basis that the lack of a paired organ could be deadly should the athlete suffer injury to the other.

JOHN HEALY

Healy, an excellent athlete who wants nothing but to play, started searching for the answer immediately. His search took him to his family physician as well as to kidney experts around his hometown area.

"When I first went into the meeting I didn't think they could possibly turn down my request but then as the meeting progressed I began to have my doubts," said Healy. "But as the meeting drew to a close I was not only surprised at their decision but elated. You don't know how happy a man I am today," he continued.

With the administrative paperwork now out of the way, he will report for a formal physical on Thursday and report to practice either that afternoon or Friday, according to Coach Dick Bergquist.

"They were most sensitive to my desires as I did not really expect they would be," said Healy. "But then again, I guess they are really here to do what is best for the student. They realize that I am 21 and responsible enough to decide what is best for me so they cleared me. My prents and I are just so happy it's hard to put into words," said Healy.

David Graham Dubois

D. Dubois concerned with the oppressed

By JOAN FASSNACHT

David Graham DuBois, step-son of the late Pan-Africanist leader and UMass' first visiting W.E.B. DuBois scholar, said last night, "The problem of the 20th century is the problem of the color line."

Mr. DuBois spoke before a capacity audience in Mahar Auditorium as part of a program here in the celebration of Black History Week.

Speaking on "DuBois from a Son's Perspective", Mr. DuBois said, "I have taken on the commitment to my father's ideals from the time I became an adult." He said that he, like his stepfather, tries to address the issues of primary concern to Black and all oppressed peoples of the world.

DuBois' primary concern now is the liberation of the Black people in Africa and America, and the destruction of capitalism, colonialism, and racism towards the building of socialism and communism.

While Black leaders and people in Africa work toward a united socialist African states, DuBois said that Blacks in America have recently discovered among their own people, "groups everywhere totally committed for radical change in America."

He added, "I have found them to be honest, dedicated, serious young people, devoted to the search for freedom."

DuBois believes that American Blacks will lead the United States to a revolution involving the rejection of capitalism with the replacement of socialism.

"These new Black revolutionaries know all about W.E.B. DuBois' belief in socialism and his struggle for Black freedom," he said. "They welcomed me like a long-lost brother because I held his banner to carry forth his ideals. Among these people I have found a home, a family, a goal."

Essential to the success of the revolution of Blacks and other oppressed peoples DuBois said, is the belief that racism can be routed out of America. He said, "We are all victims of racism by the power elite to keep the people divided. A divided people cannot succeed in rebellion."

Institutional racism must be wiped out, said DuBois. This can be achieved only through the efforts of the Black people and their leaders, although it is essential that white people carry the destruction into the white community.

DuBois also suggested that Black studies on campuses be made required courses for all students to educate them to Black awareness.

DuBois concluded, "It is a grave responsibility. History has chosen us, the Black people, to liberate the oppressed, and we must accept."

DuBois' speech was sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program in conjunction with the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

A symposium will be held tonight in SBA 120 at 7:30 as a part of the DuBois Series. David DuBois, Julius Lester, Carolyn Gipson, and Judith Kerr will debate "The Many Legacies of W.E.B. DuBois."

Senate proposes new spending policy

By MICHAEL HENAULT

The Student Senate last night placed a major new spending policy on the agenda for next week's session, and with elections a week away extended till noon Friday the deadline for filing nomination papers.

It was the third such postponement.

Working with a skeleton 39 per cent of their total membership, the Senate decided to take up the new spending policy at next week's meeting.

The new monies policy would be, according to Treasurer Paul Hamel, "an attempt at consistancy in spending and no increase in student taxes".

More specifically, the bill would limit spending "across the board" according to its sponsors. Some expenditures would have permanent ceilings. Others could receive per centage increases. New activities would have to prove their viability and usefulness within their first year of existence. No new organization will be funded for more than $2000.

Exempt from this category of new activities are the Area Governments, Student Government Association Service Operations (transit), and the Student Organizing Committee. The latter is a committee of the Senate whose main purpose is presently ad hoc. Other exemptions may be obtained by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

In another major action the Senate approved a bill which would create an Office of Affirmative Action. The chief function of the post is to channel complaints concerning racial and sexual discrimination through the Student Judiciary. Senate approbation was won by the bill's sponsor, Marshall Spriggs, after two amendments were added. The latter demonstrated a civil liberties concern among some members of the Senate by adding the words "non-elected officers" to the Action Officer's jurisdiction.

The Senate also OK'd a measure which will allow Area Government to impose an $8.25 tax on students. The measure must now be approved by the Board of Trustees. The Senate is maintaining its level of subsidy to Area Government at $6.75.

In other moves the Senate:

—Gave their nod to a $530. appropriation to International Women's Day.

—Increased to eleven the number of members of the Food Services Governance Board.

—Created a Personnel Subcommittee to the Finance Committee.

The new gas situation-questions and answers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest Federal Energy Office effort to smooth out February's gasoline distribution has given 20 states more gasoline, but its effect on service station lines is unclear.

Ten states were given five per cent more gasoline and 10 states got another two per cent. The increases announced Tuesday overlapped previous increases announced last Feb. 9, creating some confusion.

Here, in question and answer form, is the latest — if not necessarily final — word as explained by FEO officials:

Q. You've lost me already. What was supposed to happen in February in the first place?

A. February was supposed to be the first month in which gasoline, and some other petroleum products, were distributed from refineries to suppliers, to dealers and sometimes to customers according to a new set of federal regulations.

The purpose was to provide a fair distribution during the present shortage.

Farming, on which the nation depends for food, was to get all of the gasoline it required, before anyone else was served.

Certain essential services which purchase gasoline in bulk quantities were also to get all they need, while others including service stations were to get as much gasoline as in February 1972; but those allocations would be reduced, if necessary, in proportion to the shortage.

Q. Yes, I remember now, but I sort of forgot all that while I was waiting in line an hour at the service station yesterday.

A. Well, you see, there was one little hitch in the program. The regulation was not designed for getting equal amounts of gasoline to all of the dealers or areas or anything like that.

The allocations were to be carried out by each individual oil company, based on its own supply of gasoline.

Some companies were in better shape than others; some served certain areas more heavily than others. The Federal Energy Office says the February allocation would have reflected historical distribution patterns, with some imbalances resulting from area to area.

Q. But I thought that energy office told all the states exactly how much they would get in February. I read it someplace.

A. That's right. Last Feb. 6, the energy office gave newsmen a 55-page computer printout listing the gasoline going to each state. They represented it, at first, as the official allocation.

Governor's staff to challenge FBI

By CHERYL PYLE

Members of the governor's staff and the Massachusetts Citizen Commission on Privacy have announced their intentions to begin a statewide drive to broaden support for a possible court battle with the U.S. Justice Department.

Governor Sargent and the Mass. chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union will file suit before the end of the month citing The Justice Department's Data BAnk system unless certain regulatory adjustments are made according to Andrew Klein, Special Assistant to the governor.

It was announced at the Amherst meeting that petitions would be circulated in the area in the near future to establish written support for the Massachusetts position.

"The rational is that we have a better chance of being heard (in court) with a wide based support," said Mr. Klein. The petition will ask the court to "require the officials of the Justice Department to adhere to constitutional guarantees to protect individual privacy and other rights and civil liberties in the operation and control of the National Criminal History Computer and files of the FBI."

The FBI National Crime Information Center (NCIC), the home of the Computer Data Bank, was established under the direction of former Attorney General John Mitchell. By 1975, the FBI predicts that their Computerized Data Bank will receive information on citizens from over 40,000 different agencies.

This information will then be distributed through an incredible network of 45,000 separate NCIC computer terminal across the country. According to Governor Sargent these figures reflect the new possibilities inherent in computer technology and the ever greater need for control.

At present, information is being gathered from local police departments throughout the country (except Massachusetts), the FBI, the Justice Department, the Bureau of Customs, and the combined Intelligence Services of the Navy, Army, Air Force and the Marines, as well as the Secret Service and the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Each agency sets its own criteria for the introduction of information into the system. "This," as Klein said, "has created a situation in which there is no discrimination between arrests and convictions or even felonies, misdemeanors, and civil offenses." An example of the problems arising from this was cited in the following letter to the Governor:

> A scary thing happened to me last spring.
> A relative of mine got a job as a deputy sheriff. One bored night on dispatcher duty, he ran his family through the National Crime Information Center. Ten out of eleven of us were listed!
> His mother was listed because when she was eighteen, neighbors complained of a noisy sorority party. (No arrests)
> His stepfather, a respected businessman, was listed because he had complained to the police that he had received a bad check.
> Ten out of eleven of us! No criminal record. But we are on the files of the NCIC.
> P.S.: I'll probably be listed for writing this letter."

Since then, the FBI has sent agents to his house in effort to force him to withdraw the story.

"It is important to preserve the rights of the individual in these cases because past evidence has shown that it is often used to discriminate against people in the areas of employment, housing and credit. Texas law enforcement agencies, by selling NCIC lists to anyone who will buy them, have been particularly abusive in this matter," said Klein.

"We are asking the Justice Department to preserve the privacy rights of these individuals by setting standards by which they can police their own files."

Stockbridge history: few drastic changes

..Below is the final article of a three-part series dealing with Stockbridge House.

By FRITS GUERTSEN

Stockbridge House, the oldest house in Amherst, was not recognized as such until Hugh Potter Baker undertook its restoration in 1934. Baker was a president of the university, then known as Massachusetts State College.

(Staff photo—Joe Martins)

Stockbridge House as we UMies see it today.

Lathing and plaster had been applied to the original paneling, the old fireplaces had been closed in, and the wooden floor painted over. Baker had all these "improvements" stripped away to reveal the true interior of the 246 year old house.

Very few drastic changes were necessary however. According to historian Charles Hiram Thayer, "A southwest ell was added for the accomodation of the caretaker. The woodshed was converted into a cardroom. A few partitions were removed, fireplaces and some of the woodwork rebuilt and rooms appropriately furnished."

Baker made the house available to the faculty club and it has been used by them since that time. The various rooms of Stockbridge House are used as dining rooms for the club.

Someone touring the house today can still get an accurate idea of what the house was like in its prime.

Most of the woodwork is original with the exception of the floorboards which had to be replaced for safety reasons. The fireplaces have been restored and are used from time to time.

Throughout the house, one can find antiques, some connected with the house's history, some donated by friends. The walls are adorned with old photographs, maps and letters.

Many of the windows still have the original blown-glass panes, and the windows facing out onto the street have Indian shutters, used for defense during Indian attacks.

Stockbridge House was one of the waystations along the Underground Railroad, that slaves followed to Canada and freedom. Adjoining the fireplaces are hidden closets where the runaway slaves were secreted during the Civil War.

In four years Stockbridge House celebrates 250 years of existence.

Gloucester marine station to continue its functions

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, has announced that the Marine Science Station in Gloucester will remain open, contrary to some public statements made recently.

Bromery said that statements that some of the investigators located at the Gloucester Marine Station may transfer their activities to Boothbay Harbor in Maine does not mean the University will abandon the station. He added, "We will continue to support the Marine Station as a valuable resource for the University and the community because the work going on there has a very high priority. The University has every intention of maintaining the Marine Station and supporting its mission of education and research."

The University has a broad and comprehensive marine science program with 21 full-time and part-time faculty, and 10 member advisory and planning committee. Research and teaching programs are carried out at the Marine Station in Gloucester, the Coastal Research Center marine laboratory at Truro, the Aquacultural Engineering Laboratory at Buzzards Bay, the Marine Fisheries unit at Plum Island on the Merrimack River, and the Amherst campus.

Third World media increases scope

By LUIS MEDINA

Third World News and Publications on campus are increasing in numbers as well as quality.

One of the larger such publications is DRUM, a Black literary magazine. DRUM reflects various aspects of Afro and Latin American art, culture, and literature.

DRUM is fincially supported by the Student Senate. Ed Rogers, the publication's director, said the next issue will appear on campus within two weeks. This particular issue is being put together by inmates of Norfolk Prison. They are taking a class being taught by UMass. Professor J. Cole.

DUBOIS LINES is a brochure type publication printed by the publicity committee of the W.E.B. Dubois Dept.

The CCEBS Newsletter is a publication which has a varied range of topics, but mostly concerns itself with articles relating to tutoring, career planning, counseling and placement programs. It is only publication in New Africa House that has commercial advertisements submitted by Black-owned businesses.

The heat's on in Southwest

By SHERMAN BOYSON

If there is such a great energy crisis going on; why are most of the students in Southwest going to sleep with their windows open? The answer is because of the energy crisis itself.

This strange, but true, paradox is the result of an attempt to conserve energy during intercession, complicated heating equipment, too few personnel with too many thermometers, and a shift in leadership.

A random selection poll of 110 rooms in Washington and Coolidge Towers revealed that 58 per cent of the occupants complained that the rooms were too hot, 9 per cent felt the rooms were too cold, and 33 per cent were satisfied with the heating. The vast majority of students who said their rooms were too hot reported that they kept their windows open most of the time. "We have to keep the windows open" one UMie reported, "or we can't breathe."

Why then, if an energy crisis exists and people are supposed to be putting up with cold, is the heat so high in some rooms? John Hoffman, a physical plant official in charge of temperature, explained the problems. "The heating system in the buildings is electronically controlled." he explained. "During intercession it was decided to reduce the temperatures of all unused buildings to 50 degrees to conserve energy. When you upset the electronic controls, it takes time to bring them back to normal."

The energy conservation plan was a success and the heat in all the unoccupied dormitories was at 50 degrees during January. Then, when the semester began again, Hoffman and his department began the awesome task of resetting and calibrating seven to eight thousand thermostats. The number of men needed to accomplish such a task is not available. To complicate matters more, the man who was in charge of the feat was recently transferred to another department. So, a new man must be brought in to continue the work.

These problems with re-adjusting the heating system were the cause of the "heat wave" that occurred in the Southwest dorms the first week of the semester. Many students found the temperatures in their rooms as high as 85 degrees. Students had windows open and fans going in an attempt to bring the temperature down to a more bearable level. As the heating system is readjusted, the temperature gets more and more towards the 68 degree level it should be at. Most students in the random poll indicated that the situation has been steadily improving. Hoffman said "it is in the process of being taken care of, but it is going to take some time."

In the towers, persons who occupy corner rooms have it hotter than most. They have double radiator units in the rooms, and thus have more heat. Hoffman explained that five or six years ago, too long for most present residents to remember, the corner rooms were extremely cold. The extra radiator units were installed to relieve the problem. Local plumbing crews are now working on the problem of balancing the extra radiator space with the main control systems.

While the situation may be a little hot for some rooms for a time, the problem is being resolved.

As you can see, some students are really sweating it out in southwest dorms...

Concert committee

Three strikes and you're out

By MICHAEL E. C. GERY

It seems that superstars have as many problems as anyone. But when they suffer, thousands of fans suffer with them.

In the past three weeks, three campus concerts have been cancelled. Leo Kottke had personal problems, Bonnie Raitt had throat problems, and Tracy Nelson-Mother Earth had money problems.

"They don't give a shit about the disappointments," said a student in line to collect his refund for the Raitt show.

"I've come to expect this," said another after the Kottke cancellation.

The concert committees on campus bear the brunt of sudden schedule changes. They deal with the stars' agents.

Kottke's cancellation was not so sudden. His agent called a month before his January 30 date here to say that Kottke had family problems. According to Bob McDonnell of the Campus Center Board of Governors, the contracts for the Kottke concert were in the mail when the agent called. McDonnell was told that Kottke needed more time to spend with his family, and that he had cancelled nearly all the gigs on his midwinter tour.

Two days before her scheduled appearance at UMass, Bonnie Raitt's agent called the Program Council, to say that the singer had laryngitis and could not perform two shows at the Winter Carnival. According to Jim Riley, student activities program coordinator, the Winter Carnival committee decided that with over 2400 advance tickets sold, to hold one show was not feasible. Bonnie Raitt had to be cancelled.

Jim Riley says the negotiations with Raitt's agency were businesslike. "By agreement," said Riley, "the Program Council needs certification in a situation like this. We didn't know if Bonnie was just a little hoarse or what."

It was suggested that Raitt be examined by a physician and that the medical report be sent here. A doctor's report was sent here by telegram which indicated "callouses and nodules on the vocal chords" of Bonnie Raitt. The physician recommended 16 days complete rest and no talking.

Tracy Nelson and Mother Earth were scheduled to appear in the Hatch last Thursday to kick off a regional tour. On the night of the show, Tracy Nelson called from Nashville, Tenn. and spoke with Tom Jodka, program director at WMUA The call was taped and played on the radio station.

"It would cost us money to come up where you are," Nelson told Jodka. The band had not received the "advance money" from the Boston clubowner who had scheduled a performance following the UMass appearance. So the gig here was cancelled.

"It's just a rule we have," said Ms. Nelson, referring to the advance payment. "You begin to feel that you've been hustled, and that you'll get hustled again."

Ed Vadas, director of the Hatch Celebrity Series, accepted plans to postpone the Tracy Nelson-Mother Earth show for a week.

The boys in the buff

By JACK BELL

ORONO, Me. — As the old saying goes, when it rains it pours.

Until recently, about the only thing the University of Maine was known for in the rest of the New England states was not being known for anything in particular.

Then came the formation of a homosexual organization that bent the students and administration hopelessly out of shape with its requests for university funding. In the midst of that furor, another burning issue has emerged that some university officials find equally as grim and students find hilarious.

Specifically, it is the appearance of legions of "Phantom Streakers".

Termed the "Boys in the Buff" by UMaine's student newspaper, The Campus, the streakers are a number of daring young men who run nude across the campus to various destinations, including Student Senate meetings, in between buildings, and yes, even behind the university police station.

THE STREAKERS made their debut Feb. 11 during a snowstorm and 15-degree weather, when they ran past the student union and went in different directions, all dashing for waiting automobiles. One of the streakers was pursued in vain by a university police officer, and another was photographed in mid-stride by the student newspaper's camera. His picture appeared on the front cover of the paper the following day.

Apparently encouraged by the coverage they received, (no pun intended), two more streakers dashed around campus in the middle of the afternoon on Tuesday, running past a car driven by the director of university police. Not to be outdone, a third streaker made an appearance behind the police station itself. All three were caught and appeared in court Wednesday on indecent exposure charges. The trio were fined $25.

Meanwhile, Dean of Student Affairs Dwight Rideout issued a policy statement reminding students that streaking, referred to as "a nude running activity" by some administrators, was a direct violation of the law and that streakers would be dealt with accordingly.

NOT ALL of those connected with the University view the "nude running activity" with the seriousness that the administration does, however. An editorial appearing in the student newspaper speculated that streaking might become a full-fledged varsity sport, and that Maine might be able to challenge the Big Ten schools in the Lady Godiva Bowl. It went on to suggest that President Nixon might be able to regain some of his credibility if he streaked from the White House to the Justice Department in front of television cameras. "The American public would cheer the President for finally exposing himself," the editorial concluded.

Some students say the streakers are supplying a much-needed respite from the continuing controversy surrounding the Gay Liberation movement on the Orono campus, and increasing numbers of students seem to be getting involved in the newest outdoor sport.

Nixon wants more control for health

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Declaring that "inflationary pressures are still strong in the medical field," President Nixon asked Congress Wednesday for authority to continue federal controls on health care costs.

In a special message, Nixon said he wants an extension of economic stabilization powers in the health area beyond their scheduled April 30 expiration. He said "we must maintain federal controls until other measures are adopted" under his pending national health insurance proposal.

The insurance bill would not impose anything like rigid controls, however. Caspar W. Weinberger, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare told newsmen its provisions would have the greatest impact on costs through discouraging overbuilding of unneeded medical facilities and physician reviews of work performed by their colleagues under the insurance plan.

Very little in Nixon's lengthy message was new. Most of its elements were disclosed in the new federal budget and in a separate message sent to Congress earlier on the health insurance topic.

However, Nixon did announce he will submit legislation authorizing the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to support local planning boards representing the public, the medical profession, insurers and elected officials.

Nixon said there is a lack of local planning with the result, for example, some communities have too little hospital beds and not enough outpatient facilities.

Nixon also promised to make an effort to prod greater numbers of physicians - mostly general practicioners - to serve rural and other areas with doctor shortages.

Saying he wants to shift the emphasis of federal aid to medical education from subsidies to medical schools to student loans and scholarships, Nixon said:

"Under my proposed scholarship legislation, scholarships would be offered to any student who agrees to serve in programs or shortage areas of national need after graduation."

Weinberger said details have not been worked out but suggested three to five years' service might be required.

Solzhenitsyn's wife to leave

MOSCOW (AP) — Alexander Solzhenitsyn's wife said today Soviet officials have told her she and her family can join the exiled writer abroad as soon as administrative procedures are completed.

The wife, Natalya, said the officials promised prompt action on passport requests for the family.

She said she was also told that "in principle" her husbands' books and papers could be taken to him in the West. She said she was informed of this Monday at the passport office in Moscow.

Mrs. Solzhenitsyn said officials game her documents to fill out. She said she has not started on them yet.

She said one reason was that on Soviet passport applications one must say where one intends to go and since Solzhenitsyn himself has not decided where he wants to settle permanently, she cannot complete that blank.

Sargent files bills to benefit courts

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent filed six bills Wednesday which he said would make the state judiciary system more efficient.

Sargent also endorsed five bills filed by other individuals and organizations.

The governor's proposals called for pre-paid legal services for middle-income people, based on the principle of group health plans; the recall of retired judges for temporary duty, and the creation of two additional Superior Court justices.

Sargent also proposed creation of an Office of the Jury Commissioner under the supervision of the state Supreme Court to improve jury selection. The bill also would raise jury fees.

Other bills called for recording devices in the district courts for preservation of testimony, and a resolution for a Judicial Council study of standardizing rules and procedures in various state courts.

Sargent said he supports legislation filed by the League of Women Voters to create a Judicial Performance Commission which would investigate complaints against judges, and a bill that would allow the state to assume court costs of indigent litigants.

Other legislation endorsed by Sargent included a measure to create a money-refundable bail bond system; a proposal to phase out part-time justices in the district courts; and a bill to eliminate de novo trials, those in which criminal defendants appeal District Court decisions to Superior Court for a second trial.

The bail legislation would, in effect, eliminate bail bondsmen by giving the courts sole responsibility for administering bail.

Under the proposed phase-out of part-time District Court justices, two full-time circuit justices would be appointed for every three "special" justice vacancies.

Sargent said his own legislation, plus the bills which he endorsed, would make the courts more accessible to citizens and would "ensure the integrity, equality and fairness upon which our judicial system-in-deed, our society is based."

High court allows wiretap evidence

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court Wednesday approved the use of evidence gathered by court-ordered wiretaps against persons not specifically under surveillance.

The 6 to 3 decision said the Federal Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1970 requires that warrants name specific persons only when the government has probable cause to believe they are acting illegally.

Otherwise, a wiretap may lawfully be placed on a telephone over which it is suspected that unnamed persons are committing an offense, the court said.

The decision arose from an attempt to suppress wiretap evidence gathered by the FBI against a suspected bookmaker's wife. The warrant authorizing the tap named only the suspect and "persons as yet unknown," but now his wife.

In other actions the court:

—Held unanimous that either party in a housing discrimination suit filed under the 1968 Civil Rights Act could demand a jury. The law does not specifically authorize trial by jury. Civil rights lawyers expressed fear that juries would be less likely to render fair verdicts in housing discrimination cases and would slow down the process. The justices said trial judges could counteract both drawbacks.

-Unanimously extended federal general assistance benefits to Indians living near reservations and maintaining ties with the Indian community.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs wanted the benefits reserved solely for reservation-dwelling Indians. The court held that Congress intended otherwise.

The benefits are approximately equivalent to state welfare benefits.

On Tuesday, the court refused to interfere with the state conviction of Arthur H. Bremer for the May 1972 shooting of Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace in Laurel, Md., during a stop in Wallace's presidential campaign.

Writing for the majority in the wiretap case, Justice Potter Stewart rejected the contention that the government should investigate potential targets so that all may be named in warrants for wiretaps.

"A requirement that the government fully investigate the possibility that any likely use of a telephone was engaging in criminal activities before applying for an interception order would greatly subvert the effectiveness of the law enforcement mechanism that Congress constructed," Stewart said.

In dissent, Justice William O. Douglas said the decision apparently means that wiretap warrants "need specify but one name and a national dragnet become operative."

Justices William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall also dissented.

'73 inflation report shows 5.4% increase

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The final report on 1973 inflation was in Wednesday and showed what most Americans already knew, that prices throughout the economy were climbing steeply and steadily as the year drew to a close.

The inflation rate in the final three months of the year was 8.8 per cent, and for the year prices rose 5.4 per cent, the Commerce Department said in its revised report on the 1973 Gross National Product.

The report showed that real economic growth in the final quarter was 1.6 per cent and for the year it was 5.9 per cent. Total value of the nation's output of goods and services was at a rate of $1,337.5 billion at year's end.

In other economic developments Wednesday:

The Cost of Living Council lifted wage and price controls from the $6.5 billion iron and steel foundry industry.

Council director John T. Dunlop said the council would oppose any additional price increases on 1974 models of the nation's auto makers.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz told a congressional committee that the dollar would remain strong and perhaps gain a little in value this year. He said the energy crisis should have less impact on the United States than other countries.

The Commerce Department's report on the GNP showed that the savings rate of Americans was up sharply in the final quarter of 1973, to 7.3 per cent of spendable income, an indication that people are worrying more about the economy.

"The savings rate usually goes up in a recession or slowdown and usually indicates some caution," said a Commerce Department economist. One reason Americans start saving more in times of economic slowdown, he said, is the fear of losing jobs.

Crucial finding surrounds tapes

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - With encouragement from the White House, two challenges have emerged to a crucial finding of the technical experts examining the subpoenaed Watergate tapes.

One came from a volunteer, and the other from an unnamed expert consulted by James D. St. Clair, President Nixon's chief Watergate attorney.

And both were factors prompting U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica on Tuesday to order all sides in the tapes case to halt further public discussion of the matter.

At issue is the report of the six-member panel of experts on the 18 ½-minute gap in the tape of a June 20, 1972, conversation between the President and H. R. Haldeman.

The panel, chosen jointly by the White House and special prosecutor's office, and then appointed by Sirica, told the court it had determined that the Uher 5000 recorder on which Rose Mary Woods, the President's secretary, had listened to the June 20 tape, had been stopped and started manually at least five times during the 18 ½-minute segment.

The experts said they based their conclusion on the electronic marks made by the record and erase heads on the Uher machine. The marks, small parallel lines, are left on the tape when the record key pops up and sends a momentary pulse of electricity through the heads just before they are deactivated.

St. Clair questioned the experts about whether they were certain that deactivating the heads simply by pulling the plug out of the wall wouldn't leave the same marks. The experts conceded they hadn't done that but they said they were certain pulling the plug would not leave marks.

The experts also testified that they had found a defective part in Miss Woods' recorder and replaced it. It was that action which was the basis of the most publicized challenge.

The challenge came from Allan D. Bell Jr., president of Dektor Counterintelligence and Security Inc., who appeared first on a Washington television interview program. He said he believed the defective part, which is linked to the power input on the machine, could have caused pulses that would have left the same marks the experts said were caused by pushing of buttons on the Uher.

Members of the White House staff suggested to reporters that they watch the show on which Bell was appearing.

More recently, when Bell's theory was discussed favorably in an article in Science magazine, a publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told reporters they ought to read the article.

But Ziegler also told reporters at a briefing on Tuesday that Bell was not the expert St. Clair has cited in statements challenging the panel's finding. The White House has refused to name the experts.

Hearst volunteer effort started

By BERNARD HURWITZ
Associated Press Writer

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) - A massive volunteer effort to give away $2 million in food got under way on Patricia Hearst's birthday as the FBI agent handling the case predicted her kidnapers soon will free their young victim.

Charles A. Bates, agent in charge of the San Francisco office, said he had "a seat-of-the-pants feeling" that Miss Hearst would be released Wednesday. Nine days before, Bates predicted the Hearst family would hear from the kidnapers, and later the same day they did.

Patty Hearst turned 20 on Wednesday, 16 days after she was abducted from her Berkeley apartment by two black men and a white woman who lay down a barrage of gunfire behind them. The Symbionese Liberation Army, a mysterious and multiracial radical group, has claimed Miss Hearst is being held as a "prisoner of war."

Prospective volunteers jammed phone lines Wednesday to the newly opened office of "People in Need," set up a day earlier by newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst to distribute food to California's needy. The actual distribution was to begin Friday.

Secretary of State A. Ludlow Kramer of Washington, administrator of the program, said 32 trucks, warehouse space and hundreds of man-hours already had been donated. He said the organization expects to seek public donations for the program.

Bates told newsmen in San Francisco he feels "the next logical step" following Hearst's setting up the food giveaway should be Miss Hearst's immediate release.

Bates said the SLA had "backed off their first demand" for $70 worth of free food for every needy Californian. State officials estimated the cost at more than $400 million.

Kissinger faces Cuba question

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Diplomatic skirmishing over Communist Cuba faced Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger Wednesday in his efforts to initiate a new dialogue between the United States and Latin America.

Argentina and Peru indicated shortly before Kissinger's arrival to meet with 24 Latin American and Caribbean foreign ministers that he would be confronted with new moves to get Washington to ease its hostility against the Fidel Castro regime.

But officials at the State Department have said that Kissinger has no intention of altering the 12-year economic blockade imposed against Cuba by the United States.

This major meeting of foreign ministers is in response to Washington's call for new and improved relations with its southern neighbors and allies, and they are flexing what muscles they have in an effort to deal with the United States on an equal basis. The issue of Cuba is a major one.

On Tuesday, Peru officially placed before the conference a recommendation to "eliminate in the continent any form of discrimination and isolation." Cuba was not named but the Peruvian intent was clear. Peru is one of seven Latin American countries maintaining friendly relations wirh Cuba.

Cuba is the only Latin American Country not invited to the meeting, organized by the others.

Hardy Maine copes with gas shortage

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Maine's success in coping with the gasoline shortage reflects the character of the state's people, some observers say.

"People here are hardy... a little tougher," says Civil Defense Director Timothy P. Wilson, who pegs Maine's gasoline allocation for February as the lowest in the nation.

Despite this low allocation, Maine has pretty much escaped the acute shortages and long lines that have plagued other areas of New England and the Northeast.

While nobody can pinpoint the specific reason, there's near-unanimous agreement that Mainers have not been caught up in the "panic buying" that has sent motorists scurrying to the gas pumps whenever they need to top off their tank.

Spokesmen for the Maine AAA and the Maine Petroleum Association MPA agree with Wilson that the ability of Mainers to withstand adversity has played a part in preventing the gasoline shortage from becoming more disruptive.

"Maine people are used to adversity, they're accustomed to going without," said Milton F. Huntington, executive director of the MPA. "They come from hardy stock, and it's not such a traumatic thing for them to be faced with shortages. They know how to bite the bullet."

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis' energy adviser, Rick Stauffer, said talk about the Maine character "is the kind of rhetoric you get when nobody has the answer."

He agreed, nevertheless, that the state's ability not to succumb to panic buying may be the reason for Maine's success. Wilson, who heads the state's fuel allocation office, suggested that this rural state's low population density may be serving as a safety valve that prevents panic from becoming widespread.

More gas but pains remain

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Officials of gasoline-thirsty Northeast states who will receive additional fuel under a new federal program said today they were happy with the extra allocation, but warned that the new supplies won't solve the shortage problem.

The long lines at the pumps continued in the Northeast and elsewhere as more states turned to some form of rationing.

South Carolina, on Tuesday, became the 12th state to announce a distribution system based on the odd-even plan initiated by Oregon. The governor of Delaware said he will propose such a program shortly.

The problem was compounded by spotty dealer shutdowns and protests over how much fuel they have and who they can sell it to.

The FEO on Tuesday ordered oil companies to send additional gasoline from their own stocks to 20 states suffering shortages for the month of February. The additional fuel was to be added to the amount the states already have set aside for hardship cases to be allocated by governors to ease particularly severe shortages.

The amounts varied from state to state. Most state officials said the extra allocation was nice, but not enough.

Energy chief William E. Simon said on the NBC "Today" program that the extra gasoline would not put an end to long lines of cars at service stations. He reiterated that the fuel shortage was a long-term problem, measurable in terms of years, not months.

Gov. Thomas Salmon of Vermont, where the February allocation was increased 5 per cent or 680,000 gallons, said the boost was good news, but added that the state still needs about 3 million more gallons of gasoline.

Lawrence Rogers, the regional administrator of the FEO in New England, said of the increase: "It constitutes quite an injection for such a short period of time. The impact should be considerable in alleviating the shortage."

Authorities in states not among the 20 benefitting from Tuesday's announcement were predictably disappointed. Gov Dan Evans of Washington said he was surprised the state wasn't on the list and added he would ask the FEO to explain why.

Evans, chairman of the National Governors Conference, said he was going to Washington, D.C., for an emergency meeting of the conference's executive board. He said the governors would "attempt to devise the best possible method of ensuring equitable allocation of gasoline supplies to the states and within the individual states."

Gov. Sherman Tribbit of Delaware said he was doubtful whether the voluntary allocation plans really worked. But he said he would announce one anyway, offering details after a meeting with gasoline dealers. Tribbit said the plan basically would be patterned after the Oregon system.

Similar plans already are in effect in New York, New Jersey, Oregon, Hawaii, Maryland, the state of Washington, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The energy crisis

FEO officials give the latest word

It turns out, however, that it was not an official allocation, but only the oil companies' estimates of what was heading for each state; and the FEO now says those estimates were largely inaccurate.

Q. Well, what are they going to do about it?

A. They sent special study teams into 20 states that seemed to have particularly tough problems of gasoline supply, to check those estimates, and energy chief William E. Simon said Tuesday study teams would be sent to all 50 states.

Q. That's very nice and I hope they get their figures straight in time for March, but what did they do about February.

A. On Feb. 9, the energy office asked the oil companies to transfer some gasoline from 10 states with relatively good supplies to 12 states and the District of Columbia, with poor supplies.

Q. How much?

A. Up to two percent of each state's original February supply.

Q. Two per cent?

A. No. "Up to" two per cent; it could be less.

Q. Well, at least it's more than they had before.

A. Not necessarily. The companies had to make the transfers only "to the extent practicable and considering limitation of their distribution systems" — that means they didn't have to do it at all, if they could find a good excuse not to.

Q. Which states, under the Feb. 9 order, may or may not get anywhere from nothing to two per cent more in February?

A. Arkansas, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Kentucky, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, Texas and Tennessee.

Q. That's only nine; you said 12 plus D.C.

A. Right, I left out Illinois, Maryland, New Jersey and Virginia because they no longer fit in that group. I'll explain about them in a minute.

Q. O.K., now which states may or may not lose anywhere from nothing to two per cent in February?

A. Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Q. Now what about those four you left out?

A. They also turned up on the list of 20 states announced Tuesday by the FEO; none of the others were listed twice.

Q. What does that mean?

A. On Tuesday, the FEO listed 10 states whose February gasoline supply would be increased five per cent: Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, New Hampshire, Oregon, Vermont, West Virginia, and New Jersey and Virginia. Those last two were on the old list; their previous "maybe" two per cent is now included in their definite five per cent. The oil companies must provide those five per cent increases.

The February supplies of gasoline were also increased two per cent Tuesday for Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Illinois and Maryland.

Those last two also were on the old list; their "maybe" two per cent now has been made a definite two per cent which the oil companies must provide.

Q. Will those increases end these darned long gasoline lines?

A. As far as February goes, it's a little late to do much good, but they may help for the last few days and on into early March. It's hard to tell how much.

They go into a special "set aside" and the governor of each state, or his state energy office, decides which areas need it most.

If you spread an extra two or five per cent throughout a state evenly it might not make much of a dent. But if you concentrate it in a few areas with serious shortages, it could help a lot.

Scattered violence erupts in stations

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Long lines and short tempers are adding up to violence at some gasoline stations around the nation.

An Associated Press spot check yesterday showed scattered reports of arguments and fist fights among motorists. There have been assaults on station attendants as well as accidents, some fatal, in several areas.

Weekends are the worst. "I really don't know what happened," said Charles Wood, an Atlanta, Ga., station attendant as he described a series of fist fights on Sunday. "Just all of a sudden, all hell broke loose."

Wood said there were six separate fights — ended by police who made all the drivers get into line. "I say let 'em fight it out," commented Wood. "If they get bent fenders, it ain't my fault."

A service station owner in Gary, Ind., was shot and killed Tuesday night and a customer was wounded in an argument that began over a spare tire.

Police said witnesses reported that a man entered the station from the wrong direction, bypassing a long line of cars waiting for gasoline. The motorist asked to have a spare tire filled and the station owner told him to leave, resulting in an argument. Both men pulled guns, witnesses said. The station owner was killed and the customer was wounded in the face and arm. No charges were filed immediately, but a police guard was placed at the wounded man's hospital room.

Robert Link, a gas station attendant in San Jose, Calif., told police he was attacked by four men and a woman who tried to push to the head of the line. Link, 27, said he fended them off by spraying them with gasoline.

Rationing plans have helped in some areas. Honolulu authorities said they had no reports of violence since a mandatory odd-even plan took effect Jan. 28. Before that, they said, one man was charged with felony assault for attacking another motorist with a tire iron during a wait on a gasoline line and another man was charged with obstructing traffic when he refused to move after the gasoline line was cut off just in front of him.

Golf ball search

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Providence police said today they're still investigating the weekend theft of an estimated $200,000 worth of golf balls from Uniroyal Inc. plant here.

Some 144,000 golf balls and a still undetermined amount of golf shoes were stolen from the Eagle Street plant Sunday night or Monday morning, police said.

The theft took considerable time, police said, and involved breaking into a locked cage, hauling the golf balls on skids to a freight elevator and trucking them away. "All aspects of the loss," including the possibility it was an "inside job," are being investigated police said.

Uniroyal employes were being questioned about the theft today, police said. The plant employes security guards, they said.

A total of 12,000 boxes of the firm's most expensive brand of golf ball - the U.S. Royal Plus Six - were taken. Company officials said the retail price of the golf balls is $1.35 each. The wholesale value of the golf balls was estimated at $100,000.

Inventories were still being checked today to determine how many pairs of golf shoes were taken. No estimate was available.

Clark tuition

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Clark University has announced a $300 tuition increase starting with the 1974-1975 academic year.

The increase will raise the annual tuition to $3,100.

A Clark spokesman said Tuesday that the increase would enable the university to balance its $11,658,000 budget for the coming year. The spokesman also attributed the hike to rising costs.

N.H. welfare

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The state Supreme Court ruled illegal today the flat-grant system of welfare payments implemented by the state welfare division last week.

In a seven-age decision, the court said Welfare Director Thomas Hooker "is without authority to promulgate regulations which conflict with statutory requirements."

The suit was brought by six welfare mothers who said their welfare benefits would be reduced under the system, in violation of state law.

Joining the welfare recipients in a similar suit was Sen. David H. Bradley, R-Hanover.

Bradley and the other plaintiffs said the flat-grant system, which bases payments solely on family size, failed to take into account the state law requiring the division to give "due regard" to the "conditions existing in each case."

Spfld. accident

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Municipal Prosecutor John M. Sullivan has been charged with leaving the scene of a personal injury accident and operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alchol following a pedestrian accident here, police said.

Sullivan, 55, was taken to Wesson Memorial Hospital after he was charged Tuesday night. He was admitted after complaining of chest pains. A spokesman at Wesson said he was in fair condition today.

Sullivan was arrested by Springfield police after the Tuesday evening accident.

Wayne R. Ragsdale, 17, of Springfield was treated for bruises after he was struck while walking along Boston Road.

Lexington vote

LEXINGTON, Mass. (AP) - Lexington residents will get a chance to vote April 1 on whether President Nixon will be welcome at the town's bicentennial celebration.

An article asking the tow selectman to advise the President that his apperance "would diminish the historic value and demean the high ideals" of the bicentennial will be up for a vote at the annual town meeting.

It takes the signatures of 10 registered voters to put the issue on the town meeting warrent.

The article charges that the president "illegally removed from Office" special Watergate Prosecutor Archibald Cox, "admitted ordering the illegal bombing of a neutral nation" and "admitted creating without legal authority a force of secret agents which carried out illegal acts."

Public smoking

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Smoking would be prohibited in public places, except in certain designated areas, under a bill to be introduced in the Rhode Island Senate today.

Sens. Lila M. Sapinsley, R-Providence, and Guido J. Canulla, D-Warren, said the measure recognizes the right of nonsmokers to breathe air that is not polluted by tobacco smoke.

Smoking would be considered "a public nuisance and dangerous to the public health" under the bill. Restaurants, libraries, museums, buses and other public places would have to set aside specific confined areas, separate from those used by the general public, if they wanted to allow smoking.

Violators would be subject to fines ranging from $10 to $100.

Shockley, Innis to debate race theory at Yale

NEW HAVEN (AP) — The on-again off-again debate at Yale University between Nobel Prize-winning physicist William Shockley and civil rights leader Roy Innis appears to be on again.

Shockley said Tuesday night he had been invited to debate by a Yale group after two others backed off from plans to stage the debate.

Gail Schwartz, vice president of the Calliopean Society, confirmed that the group has invited Shockley and Innis, former head of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Shockley holds the theory that race and intelligence are correlated.

Lux Et Veritas Inc., an association of Yale alumni and students, decided Tuesday not to invite the physicist after Yale President Kingman Brewster and the Yale Corporation issued statements critical of the invitation.

Thomas E. Spahn, executive director of the group, said Brewster was "trying to create an orthodoxy of views on campus...to allow only certain people to speak."

'Pretzels for God'

The pretzel power drive is on

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — That curious, convoluted chunk of bread, the pretzel, was in its origin a symbol of a Christian season that begins next week. And there's a move afoot to revive the custom.

"Pretzels for God," is the name of the drive, generated in Phoenix, Ariz., to put the pretzel back into the observance of Lent, the 40-day period of penitence and spiritual renewal preceding Easter.

"The idea has caught on tremendously here, among young and old and Catholics and Protestants," says Marlene McCauley, leader of the effort to point up the real meaning of the pretzel and restore its religious use.

"It's a holy symbol of prayer and penance," she says. "It's a sign of Christian love."

The group urges families at the start of Lent on Ash Wednesday next week to explain to children the religious origin of the pretzel, to serve it on each plate each day of Lent at the evening meal, opening with a "pretzel prayer."

The prayer, recalling early Christian use of the pretzel, goes in part:

"Grant us, we pray, that we too, may be reminded by the daily sight of these pretzels to observe the holy season of Lent with true devotion and great spiritual fruit."

The pretzel push comes at a time when Lenten observances are more open to innovation, now that Roman Catholicism has lifted its former rules of mandatory fasting and abstinence from meat all through the period.

Instead of focusing on fixed routines of dietary limitations, the stress now in Catholicism - and also in Protestantism - is on positive programs for spiritual growth, such as special Bible study and religious reading, and on generosity to aid those in need. As for the pretzel's origins, the Rev. Francis X. Weiser, of Boston, a Catholic scholar on the history of Christian customs, says "it sounds surprising, but the pretzel has a deep spirtual meaning for Lent."

He says the pretzel first was made by Christians in the fifth century as Lenten bread, since it consists only of water, flour and salt also yeast nowadays, but without eggs or milk forbidden in LENT IN ANCIENT TIMES.

The pretzel originally was called "bracellae," Latin for "little arms," because of being shaped in the form of arms crossed in prayer. In Germany, it became known as "brezel" of "pretzel."

"It still shows the form of arms crossed in prayer, reminding us that Lent is a time of prayer," says Father Weiser. He applauds the idea of reviving the pretzel custom "since we still have these breads around everywhere."

Someday we will be known as a beautiful vague name...

By PAUL PUTES

America, like all civilizations, must realize that we are mortal. Someday we will be known as a beautiful vague name which vanished like a ship sailing over the horizon. Everything American civilization stood for will dissolve into the constancy of the unreachable depths of time; its culture and sub-cultures, its politics and laws, its religions and Gods, its scholastics and applied sciences, its language and books, its intelligence and ignorance, and its men and women. Yes, it will be all ashes, the visibility of a civilization of ashes that once stood for something.

With the current status of inept political leadership, economic despair, social incompatibility, inflation running rampant, questionable amounts of natural resources...it seems that an extraordinary tingling feeling of numbness has subdued America's senses, to a point where it will not be able to recognize or identify itself as a conscious state, if the moral within continues to decline.

Supposedly the people of America control their country just like the mind controls the body. But what people? The masses, the politicians, (who are elected by a minority of the masses) the scientific community, academia, the business fraternity and so on. Realistically and democratically speaking a combination of thought in these areas (and other areas) control America, this vast American mind has determined unfortunately, our present status. For instance, the potentialities of a dangerous energy crisis which presently cramps American economic and social life. The wheat crisis in which the Russians got last year's harvest, the speculators got rich and the American consumer suffers the rising cost of wheat products. The fish crisis, which America will face in the future due to the lack of government subsidy for fishing vessels equipped with modern techniques for fishing and processing aboard. The crime crisis, it certainly wasn't too many years ago that people could walk alone at night without worrying about getting mugged. The last survey indicated something like 75 per cent of the women in America are afraid to walk alone at night in their own neighborhoods. With the rise in crime, how many years do you think it will be, before 100 per cent of the men and women are unable to walk the streets alone at night because of terror? Finally, because one can go on and on, the most important, the pollution crisis. Pollution was a major factor in the collapse of ancient civilizations due to the damage caused to the quality of the soil and water supplies by foolish ecological practices. Similarly today, the environment is being spoiled in many parts of the American civilization by stupendous industrial poisoning, agricultural misuse or overuse and civil strife. Why can we not learn from past civilizations and eliminate the practice of ill-fated acts toward the environment? Why must man pollute with abysmal ignorance?

Is Nature a polluter by nature? The now technology teaches that there are examples of natural pollution such as the natural act of rainfall carrying dissolved solids and gases and the stripping of silt or topsoil during rainfall or snowmelt. Man accuses Nature of being both a polluter and destroyer in such forms of erosion as floods, earthquakes, and the weathering away of rocks by winds. Consider the first four letters of erosion, EROS, who in Greek mythology is the God of LOVE and is defined in psychoanalysis as "the sum total of the life-preserving and self-preserving instincts." No, Nature is not a polluter, for erosion is the life preserving process of the ever green growing earth, constantly in motion, shifting and upheaving, never resting in its travels and migrations throughout the Universe. And man has just not been able to move fast enough when he has challenged the many moods of Nature by defiantly standing in its way, for example — man builds many of his public works on the flood plains. Then, when a "natural disaster" occurs like a flood or quake, man angrily blames Nature for his failures and their results. When anger, subsides, he finally rationalizes "It was God's way." In reality man should say "I got in God's-Nature's way". Be it a 'natural disaster', an old woman being eaten away by cancer, or a child being hit by a car, man always finds a sucker to pass the buck to..and most of the time he blames the creator he professes to adore. Man's eternal cop out: It was God's way. Never admit, man, that you erected where you were not supposed to erect, that you created the cancer and can not find the answer, or that you allowed the road, the car, and the child to collide.

Instead of man redirecting his priorities, Slowing down his pace on insance public works, and trying to communicate more directly with nature, man has alienated Nature and set himself apart from it with his artificial world of never ending building projects.

If our past thinking has determined our present status then our present thinking will inevitable determine our future status, it is very simple, man is what man thinks. All that we, the American civilization, represent is merely a result of what we have thought. Therefore, America's best defense which will soon be a desperate one will depend on pure, logical, honest, constructive thought, for 'the quality of life'. At the moment, the many crises that plague America add up to be — "The Intelligence Crisis".

Venceremos brigade

To the Editor:

During the last few months, rumors of a major change in U.S.-Cuba relations have cropped up repeatedly in the press. Fifteen years after the triumph of the Cuban revolution, the U.S. may finally take steps to normalize relations and lift its blockade on trade, information and travel.

Throughout those 15 years, some North Americans have refused to abide by U.S. government restrictions. They have visited Cuba, come home and talked about Cuba, taken pictures and made movies to show that Cuba isn't exactly the grim regimented society we're told it is. And they have formed organizations to spread information and arrange other trips. One of the main organizations has been the Venceremos (We Will Win) Brigade.

Since 1969, the Venceremos Brigade has sent six groups from the U.S. to work in Cuba for a couple of months and to get a first-hand look at what is going on there. Another trip has been planned for this spring. The people who will be going have been selected and preparations for their departure are well underway.

This is all by the way of warning that you may run across one aspect of those preparations when passing through the Campus Center one of these days. The Western Mass. Regional Venceremos Brigade are setting up a table there every Thursday to peddle information, posters, and whatever they can capture in songs and slides of the spirit of the Cuban revolution.

If you'd like to help out with a little change (and help decorate your room at the same time), OR if you're just plain curious, stop by the table.

Black men: defend our women

To the Editor:

This letter is concerning the incident in the Blue Wall on January 31, 1974. Two Black women were attacked by a group of White men. Now, whether they were members of the Wrestling Team, the Phi Sigma Fraternity, or just ordinary "red-necks", the problem is still the same.

Every nation, and every people has the right, and even more important, it is their duty to defend their women.

This kind of racial violence is not new in the history of Black people. The racial and social conditions in this country have not fundamentally changed in the last fifteen years: although many Black folks have deluded themselves into thinking otherwise. Therefore, it would be wise for Black women to socialize where they know Black men are. And for those Black women who must socialize among those negative elements, they should do so in the company of Black men... who are not cowards.

I say to you Blackman defend and FIGHT LIKE HELL those who try to destroy your women. If those women who were attacked were white, there would have been quite a few Black men with their (asses) whipped — whether they were the attackers or not.

And I ask those Black men who are trying to rationalize this incident; If it had happened to a Black woman who was close to you, WHAT THEN?

I say that if Black men don't begin to defend their women on this campus, these assaults will continue. Therefore, this statement is a moderate statement advocating only protection and defense; not revenge. This letter is addressed to all Black men, if there are any, on this campus. And if you want lessons on how to protect our women, see me.

We want Gomes!

To The Editor:

I was one of the people that were extremely disappointed when Gary Gomes stopped writing editorials for the paper. What he wrote had meaning to many of us and kept us going in a time of great apathy. I don't always agree with what he writes, but I would like to thank BELOW THE SALT for letting him have a weekly column and at least giving him the chance to say what he thinks needs to be said. The time of apathy is not yet past and we need voices like Mr. Gomes'. Neither Mr. Gomes or I expect UMass to return to the sixties and activism, we are merely calling for activity. All we are asking is give it a chance. (Sound familiar?) All I am asking is that you open your mind and give Gary Gomes a chance. Do not just read what he writes and say that you think he is crazy or brilliant, read and react. If you don't know what to do, I'm sure Mr. Gomes would be delighted to speak to you.

Back to hocus-pocus

"Would you love me if I were a Scorpio?"

Mysticism is on the rise. The Occult is riding high. I've heard it from informed sources that more people read the Collegian for Sydney Omarr's astrological tables than they do for my columns. And one doesn't need any sources to observe the proliferation of religious sects proclaiming adherence to "The Way."

By mysticism, I don't mean nominal adherence to any traditional religious doctrines, such as a belief in a god or some ultimate force in the universe. One isn't encumbered by mysticism merely because one takes an unquestioning attitude toward the supernatural assumptions of one's religious affiliations. Unabashed mysticism begins when one crosses the line of passive acceptance and enters the realm of "blind faith," in which one accepts as uncontestable the validity of a wide variety of supernatural assumptions. The list of mystical beliefs is a long one, but it can usually be narrowed down to the following: astrology, demonic possession, exorcism, reincarnation, afterlife, witchcraft, sorcery, and spiritualism.

I don't mean to cast aspersions on anyone's beliefs, religious or otherwise, or to ascribe motives. But as one who is familiar with the long history of mysticism and the occult, I cannot remain neutral in the face of this reversion to the hocus-pocus of the Dark Ages.

Were you "enchanted" by the movie The Exorcist? So much that you now believe in the existence of the Devil, and in his power to enter a human's body and "possess" it? Do you accept as truth the various reports of exorcism that are becoming increasingly prevalent since the release of the movie? If you do, then you owe it to yourself, and to the rest of us, to study the history of the Middle Ages, or the Salem Witch Trials, or any other period in which such beliefs were held by a significant portion of the population. Read the accounts of the barbaric practices initiated by communities in order to rid themselves of the various "evil spirits." Read the accounts of the wholesale slaughter of thousands of innocent persons whose unorthodox life-styles convinced the "believers" that such peculiarities were indeed signs of deviltry. Read the accounts of the VooDoo practices of contemporary Haiti under "Papa Doc" Duvalier, or the bloody rituals of the Manson family in California.

Do You follow a Zodiac Chart when planning your daily activities? Perhaps you would be interested to know that Genghis Khan and Adolf Hitler consulted Oracles and Astrologers before launching major military offensives.

Do you believe that your particular religious belief is the only path to "salvation," and that all those who fail to follow that path are condemned to serve out their afterlife in hellfire? All I can recommend to you is that you read about the Holy Wars, the Inquisitions, and the Pogroms, all of which have been conducted by zealots who were convinced that it was their duty to purge the earth of the "heretics and blasphemers" who failed to affirm the accepted path to salvation.

Does God talk to you? Or have you recently communicated with a deceased friend or relative? I suggest you consult a competant psychiatrist. Don't come to me with your revelations. You haven't seen the light. You've enshrouded yourself in darkness.

Grab-bag Wallace

Who is this Wallace fellow and what is he up to? That's the question most political observers have been asking these days, but nobody seems to be sure of an answer. Nonetheless, George Wallace seems to be making the rounds in grand fashion. Last year, he made a surprising appearance on the same stage with Ted Kennedy, and just this week, he appeared with the very same man he's been cursing for years, Richard Nixon.

Whatever the case, it appears that the man from Alabama has toned down tremendously since the early fifties and his hard-line racist stand against integration. It almost seems uncanny that a person could change his image so drastically, and get away with it. But now, Governor George Wallace has become the all-American working class hero, and as he appeared up there on the same platform with two Black speakers, it almost seemed that this solemn, soft-spoken man in a wheelchair was not the remnant of the "solid South" that he had been only a decade before.

It's even stranger to note that Wallace had the leading delegate count in the Democratic party before the assasination attempt in 1972. Therefore, it's obvious that he has a great mass of support throughout the country, :and not just in the South as we Northerners would like to believe). So what is George Wallace up to these days?

It's hard to conceive that a man with the apparent shrewdness and political dexterity of Wallace would be making such "strange bedfellows" if he didn't have something brewing in the back of his mind. The most obvious conclusion that one could reach (and perhaps too obvious) is that George Wallace would like to run for president again in 1976. It would be that Wallace pictures himself as the William Jennings Bryan of the modern Democratic Party and that this is his year. Who knows? If Ted Kennedy continues to refuse to run, the party might decide to go the other way and choose Wallace.

But that doesn't seem very likely, considering Wallace is just not as strong as he was before he was confined to a wheelchair. In that case, the only observable answer to the question at hand can be spelled out in five letters — POWER. It's possible that George Wallace realizes that his chances of becoming president are minimal, but his chances of having some control over the president — well, that's another bag altogether, and it's a pretty important bag at that. One might call it "the grab bag".

Sticking one's hands into "the grab bag" is not a new idea at all — why it seems that everybody does it. Nixon's main problem is that he let so many people put their hands into "the grab bag" that there wasn't anything left when it came right down to governing the nation. Now, Nixon is merely a puppet for those concerns that got to "the grab bag" first.

Wallace is attempting to appeal to the political regulars on both sides of both parties. Whether or not he can spread himself this thinly and get away with it is another story. If it were anybody except a wary George Wallace in a pitiable wheelchair, I would have my doubts. But after seeing his political ability at work in the short span of my lifetime, I'm afraid that he could do just about anything he wanted to, given the chance.

Notes from afar

The COLLEGIAN does not normally print letters to the editor that are unsigned. However there are certain gems that come from the cowardly ranks of closet critics that are too good not to share. The letter below came addressed to Bill Ballou after he wrote a column discussing Calvin Coolidge. — The Editors.

Sir,

Well, well so we tax payers are supporting Mass universities trying to help so many students to get ahead, and to think we have an instigator Columnist connected with that school. I say he must be another shit head, a gorilla looking abuser. Yes all you need is a big tub of manure to put your head in it so you can grow a few brains. You sure must have a head full of shit no good for brain.

And to think we have nuts like you in a university. You are a disgrace to the schools and to our country, abusers like you have been abusing our Vice-President and President Nixon.

A big bomber should pick you all smearers abusers and dump you in the jungle. I doubt that the bugs would eat you. You cowards. You and all your gang of Democrats are the biggest liars, dirty underhanded crooks. No, No, not Nixon, you are the dirty, tricky gangsters.

"Do I smell a cigar?"

Tick-tock zzzzzz

By KAREN CMAR

The energy used to run the clocks that are placed in classrooms throughout the University is probably the best spent money on campus. If it wasn't for these clocks countless thousands of students would never make it through their classes. First of all, the constant tick tick of the clock can provide just what one needs to fall over the brink into slumberland. And if a student prefers to stay awake during class it is always interesting to sit and watch the hand move on the face of the clock. Occasionally, the hand jumps to the next number; this can be very exciting.

Jumping hands can be exciting

If it weren't for these important benefits the students might actually have to listen to the droning voice of the professors. This is especially dangerous in those classes that last for two hours or more. In such classes counting the seconds and minutes can be loads of fun. Those students who tend toward chain smoking may enjoy the one-two-three smoke game. In this pleasant diversion the student puts out his cigarette, counts to sixty three times and then lights another one. Believe me, it's really fun.

It has been said that anticipation is often more exciting than the actual act. This is another benefit of clocks. Many students have found that watching the clock and anticipating getting out of class is a lot more exciting than actually getting out of class. In fact, it has been asserted that many students actually prefer not going to class at all. Imagine that.

Note taking should be discouraged

There is, unbelievably enough, a small minority of students who do listen to the professor and these students have been known to do very strange things. They have been observed going back to their rooms after class and staring at the insides of textbook for hours. They are often seen carrying large stack of very heavy books around campus and have been known to carry notebooks and take notes in class. This sort of unstable activity is dangerous to the atmosphere of the entire University community and it should certainly not be encouraged.

No-smoking farce

To The Editor:

Returning to school, I was pleased to find NO SMOKING areas in the dining commons; however, I soon became disappointed as those in Worcester are a FARCE!! I blame this on three groups of people: SMOKERS, DINING COMMON PERSONNEL, and NONSMOKERS.

DINING COMMON PERSONNEL - have scantily defined areas and frequently leave ashtrays on tables. Recommendation — put individual signs on NO SMOKING tables.

SMOKERS — Facing Worcester's front door (parallel to N. Pleasant St.) the NO SMOKING areas are: 1st dining hall — entire right side, basics — entire back end, 3rd dining hall — left side. We only ask that you smoke elsewhere, not that you don't smoke! If you are at a table without an ashtray kindly check before you light up, you may be in a NO SMOKING area.

NONSMOKERS — These areas are for you! It is your responsibility to inform those who light up of their error, many are not aware!

"Great Ireland"

To The Editor:

We, the members of the Irish Cultural Society of the 16th floor John Adams have noted with great interest the recent collection of "Irish" letters in the COLLEGIAN. Our esteemed historian (also our founding father) has prepared the following comments for the interested and the ignorant.

Everyone knows St. Patrick drove the snakes from Irish soil and that the Irish are a great race of fighters and poets and singers and saints but, did you know that:

The first man of Columbus' crew to step on American soil was an Irishman named Patrick McGuire.

The continent later known as America was referred to as "Great Ireland", by ancient geographers long before Columbus.

St. Patrick was perhaps the greatest, that Ireland ever knew, or ever will know - still more, one of the dominant personalities of world history, whose influence will end only with the final running out of the sadns of Time. What Confucius was to the Oriental, Moses to the Israelite, Mohammed to the Arab, Patrick was to the Gaelic race. And the name and the power of those other great ones will not outlive the name and the power of this great Apostle.

Sincerely,
The Irish Cultural Society

3 day pizza

To The Editor:

In reference to the letter by Teri S. and Janet L., we do feel sorry for them having to wait three hours for their pizza from Hungry U, but if it's any consolation to them they're not alone. We have been waiting three days for a mushroom and pepperoni pizza from Domino's. We called once two days ago, and they said it was on its way. We don't want to be rude and call again.

Legalize Marijuana

To the Editor:

The personal decision of whether or not to indulge in the recreational drug of one's choice is an individual freedom or liberty that has been severely curtailed by Massachusetts drug laws. The private use of marijuana is still illegal in this state although the penalties have been reduced to a point where many people can find them acceptable. The fact remains that marijuana use is illegal and the laws can be and are used selectively to put "undesirables" away or under wraps when no other charges can be made to stick on such persons.

The Committee for a Sane Drug Policy, an organization based in Boston with a branch at UMass, has been the driving force behind efforts to legalize marijuana in this state. We have a coalition of Massachusetts legislators sponsoring and backing marijuana reform bills. It's the largest group we've had so far and it is growing. But we must have your help to push these bills over the top.

Seven marijuana bills have been filed this year, the most important one dealing with decriminalization of private use and possession of marijuana, House 2457 and Senate 666. You can help assure the passage of these bills by taking a few minutes to write to your State Senator and Representative and expressing your views on the issue.

There will be a table set up in the Campus Center by the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy, mostly on Fridays. Stop by to get names and addresses of your legislators. Postage will be paid for by the CSDP if you bring your letters to the table. For further information contact me at 306 Butterfield, 5-2418, 5-2419.

The little time it takes to get a letter off will be a big investment in our future as Massachusetts citizens. Don't wait for someone close to you to be victimized by the laws. Write a letter urging support of House 2457 and Senate 666. Time is short, the bills may be voted on by March. Act Now!!

Nixon is a person

To The Editor:

This article represents a feeling. And feelings are not subject to logical rigor, so what I'm going to say is going to offend, anger, and puzzle many of you. I know that. But hopefully some of you will understand the feelings behind my statements and I will have accomplished something.

This morning I woke up and read the Globe. I read how wholesale prices have gone up, how gasoline station owners are planning to force the government to revise its Oregon plan, and a lot of other disturbing problems. And of course there was a lot about Richard Nixon — impeachment inquiries etc. And I start thinking about Richard Nixon not as President but as a person.

Yes, Richard Nixon, despite all the cynicism that this sentence invites, is a human being. He laughs, cries, loves, hates just like you and I. But perhaps the thing which Richard Nixon has more than some of us is his desire to be successful in what he wants to do. It was a long hard struggle for him to get to the White House. But he got there because he was determined to win. The way he got there was the culmination of his experiences as a person in the course of his life. Obviously, in reaching his goals, he committed sins. But all of us do when we want something bad enough. In our every day lives, we con, cheat, and antagonize people around us because we're human.

Richard Nixon was elected by the people of the United States to lead them. And he can only do it one way really well — his way. I'm sure he suffers tremendously when he reads the paper or watches the news just as Ralph Nader must when he reads the same paper or watches the same news. But at least for a moment, put yourself in Nixon's shoes and try to feel his person being attacked by millions. I wouldn't hang him; I hope you won't.

MassPIRG reports

Ralph Nadar's creation-the PIRGs

(Each UMass student has the option of donating $2 a semester to the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) as part of his tuition bill.

Because it is collectively funded by students from UMass and a score of other Massachusetts colleges, the acitivities of Mass PIRG deserve particular scrutiny.

The COLLEGIAN today begins "Mass PIRG" reports, a weekly column chronicling the environmental and consumer group's activities. The column will be written by Steve DeLancey, a UMass undergraduate who is now an intern at the Amherst office of Mass PIRG —— editor)

By STEVE DeLANCEY
Mass PIRG Intern

The idea of using voluntary contributions from students to provide offices and hire a professional staff to investigate areas of consumer and environmental concern came essentually from one man — Ralph Nader. He saw the growing concern and awareness of students in the 60's as a real potential for social change. Contemporary college students, because they are flexible and comparatively free from society's pressures, have always provided an element of activism in a public largely caught up in a mundane existence that often precludes active concern with the bureaucratic handling of their lives.

That activism, however, never had any real organization, continuity, or focus. Consequently, it had little real or lasting effect. Nader saw the formation of student PIRGs as the answer to those needs.

Student Public Interest Research Groups combine student activism and knowledge with political and legal power, experience, and know-how in the form of a professional full-time staff.

The PIRG is able to use the information it gathers with the aid of students to take legal action, file and back legislative bills, provide testimony at hearings, and keep the public informed through the media. It also acts as a way in which the public can band together, form lines of communication, and thereby protect itself and its interests against powerful industrial lobbying, unresponsive government agencies and the like.

The first student PIRG was formed in Oregon in September of 1970. Since then PIRGs have been organized in nineteen other states, Washington D.C., Canada, Australia, and England — a number of others are currently in the planning stage. They operate on a total funding base of about 1.1 million dollars, are supported by 130 colleges, and involve the efforts of some 300,000 students.

Although Nader's office in Washington gives speeches, advice, information, and inspiration, each PIRG is entirely autonomous.

They all have a by-law that states if over 50 per cent of the enrolled students of a funding universtiy request a refund or refuse to contribute, all money is returned to that school and it ends its affiliation with the PIRG. A PIRG could thereby be disbanded if the students decided that it was no longer working in their interests.

Ralph Nader came to Curry Hicks Cage at UMass in February of 1972 and spoke about PIRGs to a large crowd of interested people. Soon after, petitions for student support were circulated and discussions between concerned students and university officials and faculty ensued.

Finally, in August of 1972, with the aid of an $8,000 grant from the Connecticut Valley Committee, the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group Inc. (WMPIRG) was formed — a non-partisan, non-political, non-profit organization.

Until just recently, Massachusetts had two PIRGs: WMPIRG in Amherst (233 N. Pleasant St. — on the second level of the Carriage Shops), and Mass PIRG East in Boston (120 Boylston St.).

On January first of this year, however, the two combined to form one state-wide corporation, retaining both of the branches. The merger of the two to form Mass PIRG provides the state with a more effective, stronger organization which is still able to respond to local issues.

Columnist a UMie; interns at MassPIRG

(Steve DeLancey, a COLLEGIAN contributing columnist who will report on Mass PIRG, is a UMass senior from South Deerfield majoring in English and journalism.

Here he tells how he got involved in MassPIRG as an intern, and in the process outlines a general plan for student involvement in the research group — editor)

Five courses for fifteen credits for six semesters at the University of Massachusetts had taken their toll — it was time for a change. Somehow "an education" consists of more than classes, books, exams, and research papers. Fortunately, there were (and are) a number of programs at UMass that provide alternatives to regular courses. Having made the decision to try something different, it became a matter of finding out exactly who to talk to and then deciding in what direction to go.

Eventually I wandered into the Students Volunteering Service (SVS) office in Goodell. After looking through their listing of agencies and groups requesting student volunteers, and talking with a few of the people there, I decided to check out the possibility of working part-time at Mass PIRG in Amherst. Everyone I spoke with at the MassPIRG office assured me that there were any number of ways in which I could be of help to them and that many potential projects were waiting for students to take them over. I straightened out credits with Whitmore's computer and have since begun to discover just what's going on in the real world — how thing work, how they don't, and how they might be changed for the better.

When this semester began, the usual "so what have you been doing" questions began to come up. When I responded that I was going to be doing some work at MassPIRG, the reply invariable went something like, "Oh, yeah, that's who the two bucks I paid (or didn't pay) goes to. What do they do anyway.?"

In this column I'll attempt to answer that question for the UMass community — one of the eleven Massachusetts college communities that supports the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. After explaining how it began and generally what it is and what it does, I'll try to give you a sampling of the things they have done and some of the topics they have in mind for future consideration.

Hopefully this column will give you a more complete idea of where that two dollars that's tacked on your tuition bill goes beyond what you might read in the straight press releases. It might even give you a glimpse of how we could begin to crawl out from under the apathy-breeding weight of a society so often controlled by private interests with large amounts of money and power but little regard for public welfare. Once we realize there are ways to fight back we can work to change some of the many things that really need to be changed.

UMass dog of the year

By LORI ANN YESLOW

Everyone takes him for the dirty-looking mutt with the hungry look in his eyes. Hungry until you you take pity and feed him half of, or all of your dried up hamburger. Then you notice the "hungry look" in his eyes is stationary as he roams from table to table mooching food from sympathetic UMies. A little hungry but alot more amazed, you leave the commons already late for your 12:20.

The animal I speak of is none other than Toby. Almost everyone knows Toby, he's been roaming around UMass for over four of his six years. In that time he's managed to get himself stuck in a ditch near the fine arts center when it was first being built only to be rescued by students. He is also a familiar sight at the Amherst pound having been pulled in a total of twelve or thirteen times so far. Ane yet he trots on his almost daily journey starting with breakfast at a southwest dining commons, through the campus center past grad research, lunch somewhere in central and back around landing in southwest for dinner at around 5:30.

After extensive research it was discovered that Toby does have a home: 93 Fearing St. which he shares with twelve people and five cats. We were informed there that despite Toby's tendencies to "sleep around" last semester, he has turned over a new leaf and has returned home every night so far at around 6:30.

Due to his fanatical love for soccer he has come bombing out after the ball at many a UMass game, and the campus center pond helps exercise his never ending interest in swimming. His interests do not end with sports, he has acted with his stiff legs and limps for many a student, just so someone will think he's pathetic and-or sick, and give him a place to sleep for the night, to save him the long walk home of course. Officially his name is Toby, but he can also go by scruffy or yeswell.

Like dreaded eight o'clocks, like the library, like notorious southwest, Toby is UMass without an I.D. number.

House approves 13.6% boost in veterans benefits

By JERRY T. BAULCH
Associated Press Writer

..WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed 382 to 0 a bill to increase education benefits for Vietnam era veterans by 13.6 per cent, far above the 8 per cent President Nixon says he will ask.

The measure now goes to the Senate where members of the Veterans Affairs Committee have said they will press for a 23 per cent increase in benefits. The committee has been awaiting the House action before scheduling new hearings.

The House measure would give a single veteran in college $250 a month compared with the present $220. Nixon's proposal would give $238 and the Senate proposal $270.

The House bill does not include a Senate provision to provide a new low-cost direct government loan program to help veterans pay their tuition. Sen. Alan Cranston,(D-Calif.) says he may propose a lower monthly increase than the 23 per cent but combined with a tuition support subsidy.

The question of a tuition subsity or loan will be taken up separately by the House later.

Post-Korean veterans, the only ones now eligible for GI education benefits, have complained that they can't meet the soaring tuition costs with just their monthly allowances. They say it is unfair for them not to have the tuition paid, as was done for World War II veterans.

The House bill would:

—Give veterans 10 years after they get out of service to use their GI education benefits. The limit is now 8 years, which means thousands who were discharged between Jan. 31, 1955 and June 1, 1966 will lose their benefits June 1 this year unless the deadline is changed.

—Reduce the requirement for eligibility for vocational rehabilitation for service-connected disability from the present 30 per cent disability to 10 per cent.

—Establish a Vietnam Era Veterans Communications Committee within the Veterans Administration, composed of VA employees who are Vietnam veterans. It would advise the VA and Congress how best to reach the veterans.

—Permit wives, widows and children under the war orphan education program to pursue farm cooperative training, which is now open only to veterans.

—Open up the work-study program for veterans who need a part-time job to supplement his GI bill benefits from $2 million dollars.

Jury selection for Reilly trial begins

LITCHFIELD, Conn. (AP) - The murder trial of Peter Reilly, the 18 year-old accused of slaying his mother, begins today in Superior Court with jury selection.

A judge ruled Tuesday that an alleged confession given by the young man to police could be used as evidence.

Reilly, a high school senior, is accused of killing his mother, Barbara Gibbons, 51, on Sept. 28 in a small Falls Village house where they lived.

Judge John A. Speziale said that because of the "attention attracted to this case and the extensive publicity in the news media" he was issuing rules to ensure an orderly and fair trial.

He ordered policemen, court employes, jurors and others not to talk about the case to newsmen. He banned cameras, television or radio equipment and tape recorders in the court house and surrounding area. Artists will not be allowed to make sketches in the court house.

Bowdoin brought down by 'great uneveness'

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) - Several years ago, Bowdoin College, like many other well known New England colleges, made a commitment to what it calls "great unevenness" in the make-up of its student body.

Now, the small liberal arts college has a healthy percentage of black students and "special talents" and seems at a loss of how to educate them.

It surfaced at a panel discussion this past weekend on the growing problem of illiteracy at the school. As an estimated 170 members of the idyllic academic community began to talk and argue, it became clear that illiteracy, as such, was not the problem.

The hard question being asked was whether Bowdoin could live up to those promises made in the late 1960's.

Could it educate minority groups and remain a top-flight training ground for professionals.

"What good is it searching for the diverse student when Bowdoin has mostly traditionally skilled professors teaching courses based on literacy," asked sociology Prof. Daniel Rossides, one of the four panel members. "We have all categories of students here who don't have professors prepared to teach them."

Rossides termed Bowdoin's commitment to the needs of disadvantaged students "rheotorical."

Traditionally, Bowdoin has trained professionals, turning out doctors, lawyers and businessmen. And, as a private school, Bowdoin depends on contributions from well-monied alumni to keep alive.

Rossides suggested that while Bowdoin may have made a policy change amid the campus turbulence of the 1960's, it has yet to alter the composition of the faculty to reflected the needs of so-called "disadvantaged" students.

Bowdoin has 73 black students and 231 native Mainers in a student body of 1,237.College officials says therewere only a "handful" of blacks here through the mid-60's.

One black student, interviewed after the lively session in the college union, said he wanted to be an urban planner and wasn't getting the knowledge he needed at Bowdoin. Because of his scholarship, the student said he could not afford to leave.

As one who figures in school policy, Admissions Director Richard Moll drew a lot of fire during the panel discussion and the question and answer session that followed.

English Prof. Herbert Coursen faulted Moll's department for admitting too many sub-literate students and complained the range of literacy was so wide in some of his classes he "didn't know what to do."

Coursen also underscored Rossides point about the faculty's readiness to handle ill-prepared and "special" students.

"Our English department is trained to deal with literacy, not illiteracy," he said.

After Moll admitted his office was "under considerable pressure to get "special talents," including athletes, he drew a heated response from Education Prof. Paul Hazelton.

New crisis plan in store for next year

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — For most of us the energy crisis has turned into a gasoline crisis and few are worried about other fuel shortages.

But the experts have been saying all along that the crisis will be with us for some time, and the state has prepared draft contingency plans that may have to be used next winter.

The plan, drawn up by a technical advisory committee headed by Henry Jacoby, professor of management at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, tries to evaluate possible savings in various sectors of the economy, and various levels of crisis severity.

It provides the first hard figures many laymen may have seen.

For example, which provides the greater saving — shutting down television at 10 p.m. or halving street lighting? The British are doing both.

The committee puts these measures in the class to be taken after milder steps. Both provide about the same saving, the equivalent of 340,000 barrels of oil for the TV blackout and 300,000 for halving street lighting. That's 0.7 and 0.6 per cent of pre-crisis usage.

The most effective thing is also the easiest — simply turning down the thermostat six degrees. This applies to homes too, and this appears to have been done to a great extent. The New England Fuel Institute estimates Massachusetts consumers are using 16 per cent less fuel than they did last winter, even before the savings from the mild winter are counted.

Next would be a tune-up of oil and gas burners to maximum efficiency. In the commercial sector, such tuneups would mean savings of 2 million barrels of oil. In homes, it would be 3.2 million barrels saving even if only half the homeowners did it.

At a very severe shortage, the plan notes a four-day school week would save 2 million barrels and cutting back retail store hours would save 900,000 barrels for each extra hour closed.

It is this kind of hard-nosed calculation all states may have to be doing in future winters.

Back in January Gov. Francis W. Sargent ordered state vehicles to cut their usage of gasoline by 25 per cent. A reporting and monitoring system to make sure the agencies are complying is still two weeks away.

The man who is setting up that system says, however, "there is no question usage is down." Jim Melillo of the Management Bureau is beginning to receive the first reports from the agencies and hopes to show on March 1 that state cars, are, indeed, using a quarter less gasoline than they had been.

The state has selected four companies from 11 bidders to rent $800,000 of copying equipment, the first time it has put copier rentals out to bid. Administration and Finance Secretary William I. Cowin estimated the bidding, and control procedures, would save about $114,000 a year.

Salmon seeking Vermont governorship once again

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Democratic Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, turning his back on a possible run for the U.S. Senate, announced today he would seek a second term as governor of Vermont.

The governor said he wanted no part of the carnival atmosphere present in the state following Sen. George D. Aiken's announcement he would not seek another term in the U.S. Senate.

Salmon noted a variety of problems facing Vermont and the nation, including energy, environmental laws and the economy, and said he felt the governor's office was the only one which could face those problems.

Since Aiken's announcement, all eyes in the Democratic party had focused on Salmon as a likely Democratic candidate of the post. Salmon said today a poll he had commissioned showed he could have been the winner in a general election race with Congressman Richard Mallary, who has announced he will seek the Republican nomination for the Senate.

The governor said he did not consider Mallary an indefeatable candidate and predicted a Democrat could win in a race for the Senate.

In regard to his own campaign for a second term as chief executive of Vermont, Salmon said he did not expect primary opposition for the nomination and anticipated his campaign would not begin until after the September primary.

He vowed he would not be a "slate-maker" for the Democratic party and would not influence the choice of other party candidates for statewide office.

Mrs. Salmon and three of the family's four children were present in the governor's State House office for today's announcement. Salmon said his eight-year-old daughter Caroline was at home with "a bad case of the mumps."

Salmon said he made the initial decision to seek reelection after a two-hour conversation with his wife.

In his announcement, during a news conference, Salmon said "Vermont finds itself today in the hurley-burley of inprecedented political jockeying in the wake of Governor Aiken's announced retirement.

"I for one want no part of this carnival atmosphere at a time when credibility in government at all levels is at its lowest ebb."

Sorbonne

Qualified undergraduates in Philosophy and various other majors can earn from 30 to 32 credits taking regular courses at the University of Paris (Sorbonne) during 1974-1975. Students select their courses from the full range available to regular French students.

The SUNY Program Director will help students secure suitable housing and arrange programs, and will assist or arrange assistance for them in their studies throughout the year, September 15 to June 15.

Health advisory board

The problem of student non-involvement in deciding what students need and how their money should be spent is a real problem.

The infirmary's Health Advisory Board is the student advocate group to University Health Services administration. Without input from the Third World, Greeks, area governments and other groups, the Health Advisory Board cannot be representative.

The need is for students. Decisions will be made this year about the health fee. An open meeting of the Health Advisory Board will be held today at 4:30 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center.

Development center

The Student Development Center (formerly the Counseling Center) will soon begin a weekly small group experience for students. The group will meet on Wednesday afternoons from 4:30 to 6:00 p.m. for 10 sessions. Its focus will be helping students to better understand and handle the difficulties they have in relating to others. Each individual will be asked to come with a willingness to share her-his feelings and perceptions of her-himself and others. There will be time to look at problem behaviors both within and outside the group.

The group leaders will be Susana Krivatsy and David Andes, both graduate counseling interns at the Student Development Center. In order to give adequate time to all participants, the group will be limited to eight members. Interested may contact Krivatsy or Andes at 545-0333.

Women Voters League have men in midst

TRENTON (AP) - The League of Women Voters has discovered 11 men in its midst.

All 11 are members of the Perth Amboy branch where the league women defied the organization's national by-laws by admitting male members.

When the male membership was publicly revealed Tuesday, Nina McCall, president of the New Jersey League of Women Voters, contended the Perth Amboy chapter was wrong. "Women have really been discriminated against, and to let men in our organization would only further that tokenism," Mrs. McCall said.

However, Doris Philipp, president of the Perth Amboy local, said, "We'll take anybody because we need all the help we can get."

French exorcist works in office

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The exorcist has office hours.

And a beige waiting room, and a carpeted consultation nook, and a pretty good-working relationship with the devil.

Encased in glass and steel and two floors down from the headquarters of the archbishop of Paris, Francois Cardinal Marty is a once-a-week world of talk of spells and demons.

The "possessed" begin lining up at 8 a.m. on Wednesdays waiting for the Rev. Henri Gesland, 66, to arrive for work at the antiseptically modern building of the Paris Roman Catholic archdiocese.

A small, gnomish man with a white rim of beard along his chin, Father Gesland slips behind his chair and begins a day of listening. He is the Church's official exorcist for the Paris region, but as far as he is concerned the devil is a rare visitor.

"Since my appointment in 1968, I've had more than 3,000 consultations," the priest said. "There have been four cases of what I believe to be demonic possession."

In a normal day of devil-chasing, the Father Gesland sees up to 25 visitors who wait patiently for their turn.

Recently, with French newspapers reporting on America's interest in the film "The Exorcist", Father Gesland's waiting lines have grown.

"It's pretty much the same thing," Father Gesland explains. "I let them talk. And I listen. A large proportion of my visitors think someone has placed a spell on them...

"I give practical advise in most of the cases. 'Are you eating enough' I might ask. And then I might suggest that they see a general practitioner or even a psychiatrist."

Father Gesland has no special training for the exorcist's job, but after returning from 30 years in Ceylon as a missionary, he assisted another priest in helping a woman who thought she was afflicted by devils. When the exorcist in charge resigned, the diocese called on Father Gesland.

"The choice," according to the Rev. Roger Meuillet of the diocesan headquarters, "was dictated by Father Gesland's personality, more than any other factor. He is an understanding man, a patient man, who can listen and calm people."

But for all the "zozos" - the priest's expression for jokers - that he sees, there have been the four cases where he did recite the Litany of the Saints and the 53rd Psalm, where he splashed holy water over the possessed and ordered the evil spirits to flee and not return again.

Strangely, Father Gesland's most convincing struggle with demons involved two 13-year-old girls - about a year older than the preteen-ager played by Linda Blair in the film, which has not yet been shown in France.

"This child was at a difficult age, puberty, and you draw what conclusions you want from that," the priest said, "but there were reports from many people that there were many strange things about her. First, she brusquely changed from a normal child to one who insulted everyone - teachers, relatives, friends - with incredibly filthy language. When she walked in front of lamps, the lights would go out. When she sat in rooms, things fell from the mantle or a table.

"We decided exorcism was in order. I did three sessions that lasted two to three hours each. I used a rather long, official Latin prayer that asks the evil spirit to name itself and say why it is in the person. I ordered it to give a sign it will leave and won't come back.

"As I said the prayers the child who had been rolling on the floor of the church appeared to calm down. But there was a terrible battle after a while. When I showed my pectoral cross, she hurled against the floor and kicked me. But finally the devil did depart.

"Later when her parents were leaving the church, the child opened her mouth and a miraculous medal fell out. We had been with her every second. She could not have placed it in her mouth. Now, a year later, she is much better."

The other 13-year-old spoke Italian and German when she was possessed even though she did not know either language, Father Gesland said. He said that she, too, was freed of demons through exorcism.

"These are very special, unusual cases," he said, "Most people who come to see me, I try to talk to, give them 15 minutes of my time and see if I can't calm them down. It's quite sad when you have a person who insists on a solemn exorcism and you tell them that's not possible.

"I know that they're not possessed by any devils, but they are sure that's the reason life isn't going their way. I tell them take a walk, improve your diet, get along better with your family. The devil is not hiding behind every rose bush, you know."

Phony ritual costs $3,500

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A woman and her twin daughters have "exorcised" their landlord here in a phony ritual which cost the man $3,500, Dist. Atty. Carl A. Vergari says. Held in lieu of $7,500 bail each on an indictment charging them with grand larceny are Mary Williams, 45, and her daughters, Helen Williams and Laura Lopez, 26.

Vergari gave this account:

The woman told their landlord, Jose Lopez, recently laid off from a landscaping job, that he didn't look well.

Convincing Lopez — no relative to Laura - that his failing health and lost job were the devil's doing, they advised him to undergo exorcism.

Lopez consented. He was told to draw $3,500 from his savings to demonstrate his faith in the ritual.

The trumped-up rite was performed on Jan. 29 at the women's residence and involved rubbing Lopez's head with fake holy water, the taking of oaths on a Bible and incantation.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo is service and Mercury; it is health and work — this is a sign depicting issues, the practical and spotlighting results. Special services are a hallmark here. Give Virgo an appointment book, a calendar, a diary and you will bechoosing a useful gift for this native. Virgo can laugh and even appear naive — but there is shrewdness here and very little wasted motion. Virgo is in awe of Leo, makes money with Libra, love to Capricorn, marries Pices, fulfills ambitions with Gimini. For Virgo, proper diet is essential. The digestive system of this native is a delicate mechanism. Virgo makes sacrifices but this is not necessarily noble: it is second nature.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your desires are fulfilled. You expand and want more — tendency is to be extravagant. You can enjoy yourself. Pressures and relieved. You get rid of burden and have more room. You feel free of obstacle which you did not deserve.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New approach, added independence — these factors are highlighted. Obtain valid hint from Aries message. Bring resources to forefront. Deal with Leo, Aquarius individuals. Prestige is on upswing. Be direct, confident.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Learn by teaching. Express unorthodox views. Aquarian can help you solve riddle. Accent is on knowledge, language, writing and travel. News concerning publishing venture could be upcoming.

CANCER(June 21-July 22):Find out where money is coming from and where it goes. Check interest rates. Be aware of contractual obligations. Discuss these matters with legal representative, partner or mate. You may have opportunity to expand.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): What appears a slowdown is merely a period for catching emotional breath. Another Leo, an Aquarius and Scorpio individual could be in picture. Public relations improves if you avoid insisting or making demands.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid tendency to try doing everything at once, including eating. What seems like it won't wait — is a trap. Set your own pace — deliberate, intelligent. One who rushes you may have ulterior motive. Know it and respond accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Land or property value may be more than you originally anticipated. Check figures. Avoid tendency to jump at first offer. Pisces, Virgo persons may figure prominently. Take steps which aid in insuring future security.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get affairs in order. Overcome temptation to skip essentials. Older individual makes demands, but they are in your best interests. You are not fulfilling potential. Broaden horizons. Strive to "see" potential. Return call, message which has been neglected.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are rewarded for crative endeavors. You also are asked to do more, perform an encore. Key is to be amiable, not foolish. Leo, Aquarius persons could figure prominently. Money picture is bright. Know it and act like you are aware of it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Drive hard bargain. You have plenty to offer and your judgment now is sharp. Be specific. Take lead — be independent and respect your own style, qualities, abilities. Those who claim you are arrogant are merely seeking face-saving device.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What appears shrouded in mystery will soon see light of day. Know it and proceed in forthright manner. Aquarian might hold key to progress. You finally will be rid of what has been a secret fear.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have humor, intellectual curiosity and the opposite sex finds you attractive. September should be the most important month of this significant year for you. If single, you marry. If married, you have more responsibility — perhaps a business or an addition to the family. Watch your weight. Be wary of friends who offer flatter and little else.

Kennedy may be future UMass energy speaker

By JOAN FASSNACHT

The Collegian learned yesterday that Senator Edward M. Kennedy (D.-Mass.) may be coming to Amherst in April to take part in the third in a series of energy symposias sponsored by the Five-College Science and Society Coordinating Committee.

In a telephone conversation, Ms. Chris Capito, Kennedy's college appointments secretary, said, "There is no answer yet, but we will have one by the end of the week. Senator Kennedy is planning some foreign travel, which might present a time conflict."

Robert Tinker, a professor of physics at Amherst College, and a member of the Coordinating Committee, said the Conference, entitled "Social Control of Technology," has been tentatively scheduled for the week of April 15.

Other speakers scheduled to attend include: —Prof. Norm Birnbaum of Amherst College, who will speak on "Threats and Promises of Technology". —Mr. Joseph West of Western Electric, topic to be announced. —Mr. Bruce Hannay of Western Electric, will speak on April 29 on "The Industrial View of Technology".

Senator Kennedy has recently been active in setting up the new Office of Technological Assessment (OTA), designed to provide Congress with a means of assessing present and future technology. Kennedy is Chairman of the Board, with Emilio D'Addario, the former Connecticut Senator, serving as Chairman of the Committee.

If Kennedy cannot come to the Conference, D'Addario will atend as an alternate speaker.

UMass skiers place second in weekend Mt. Rowe events

The third and fourth ski races of the Osborne Division of the New England Intercollege Ski Conference were held at Mount Rowe in Guilford, N.H. over the weekend on artificial snow. UMass placed second in both events in the nine college division contests.

Having finished 4th and 7th in the first two races, these two second place finishes bring the win loss ratio to 21 wins to 11 losses. In a nine college event second place would mean one loss and 7 wins. In league standings so far Amherst is first, BC is second, UMass third, UConn fourth, BU fifth, Northeastern sixth, Tufts seventh, AIC eighth and Bentley ninth.

The races were interesting and UMass did well considering that Steve Tonelli was out with a bone chip in his knee, Jim Hawkins was out with a broken thumb and the flu and Ben Ferris was suffering with a sprained ankle that has not yet healed. The whole team could, therefore, pack into Coach Macconnell's station wagon for the trip into snowless N.H. seeking the artificial snow at Mt. Rowe.

In Saturday's giant slalom, Co-Captain Kurt Syer placed second to Tim Cyr of B.C. Dave Babbott and Mark Brown, both of Amherst College, finished third and fourth, skiing with a consistency that helped to make Amherst the division leader. Dick McWade finished a good eighth while Larry Peck, in his first outing this year, got a very good thirteenth place. Bill Nebesky, also in his first varsity outing this year, got a good 21st place in a field of 80 racers. Dave Ferris and Dave Rutter finished 26 and 27th.

Gary Peck, the only UMass B team skier, tied for 15th place. Had he been skiing "A" team, UMass would have won but UConn had a time of 248.3 seconds for their best four out of six "A" team racers while UMass had 248.5 seconds; Amherst was close behind with 249.5 seconds. Other teams in the order of finish were BU, BC, Northeastern, AIC, Bentley and Tufts.

The weather was warm for Sunday's slalom and it was snowing during the first run. A very complicated, tricky slalom course was set which eliminated nearly one-half of the field. In the first seed, which contained the best racers from each of the nine colleges, only two racers found their way through the bamboo thicket without disqualification; Robbie Gray from Tufts, who eventually won the race, and Kurt Syer from UMass who stopped to check the confusing path through the wickets. A good time for that run was 33 seconds while Syer had 40. Without the careful check to be sure of the course, it would have been another UMass disaster. With a solid second run to go with the "lost in the bamboo forest" first run, Syer finished a very respectful 12th and UMass pulled it out with another second place.

Dick McWade wiggled his way through the bamboo to finish third behind Dave Babbott, the Amherst freshman who has finished second, third and fourth in the four races so far. Bill Nebesky tied for seventh place while Dave Rutter finished 16th to round out the UMass foursome. Since Lary Peck was disqualified in the first run and Dave Ferris had a binding release in mid-course in the first run, and did not finish, UMass was under a lot of pressure for the second run.

Boston College won the race with a team time of 287.5 seconds, UMass was second with 290.1, Amherst was third with 291.9. Other schools in the order of finish were BU, UConn, Tufts, Northeastern, AIC, and Bentley.

The next races are at Prospect Hill in Waltham, Mass. on next weekend. The BC slalom starts at 10:00 A.M. on Saturday and the Northeastern slalom starts at the same time on Sunday. Prospect Hill is a good site to watch a race and there is no admission.

LARRY PECK in his first outing for UMass this year finished 13th in a field of 80 racers from nine colleges at Mt. Rowe.

DICK McWADE stays tight to the gate, in the Tufts slalom. McSade finished third in the field of 80 racers.

Finley picks Dark as A's new manager

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - A well-traveled Alvin Dark, a former manager under Charles O. Finley, was named today by Finley as the Oakland A's manager for the coming baseball season, succeeding Dick Williams.

Dark, 52, managed the Kansas City A's in 1966 and was fired on Aug. 20, 1967, after a near-rebellion by the players. He also managed the Cleveland Indians from 1968 through 1971 and has been out of baseball since.

Finley announced the return of Dark to the A's at a news conference here.

Finley said today he and Dark "have decided to get married again."

Finley acknowledged, "There has been a lot of speculation. But I really didn't know myself who my manager would be until 48 hours ago."

Dark also had managed the San Francisco Giants from 1961-64, taking them to the 1962 World Series. He was a star shortstop for 14 seasons in the major leagues, compiling a .298 career batting average.

Braves, Aaron stir press controversy

(AP) The Atlanta Braves have struck out with much of the nation's sporting press over their decision to have slugger Hank Aaron sit out the season-opening series in Cincinnati and try to break Babe Ruth's home run record before the hometown fans.

"Baseball has gone crooked," charged Dick Young of the New York Daily News over Braves' President Bill Bartholomay's recent announcement that Aaron will not start the games against the Reds in Cincinnati on April 4-6-7, although he will be available for pinch-hitting duties and part-time outfield play.

Aaron has 713 career homers, one behind Ruth. The Braves — i.e., Bartholomay — want him to get the record in Atlanta, where the team opens a long home stand April 8 with a nationally televised game against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"A fix by any name is a fix...Bartholomay would taint the game, the record and Henry Aaron with this insidious fix," wrote Larry Merchant of The New York Post.

"No wonder baseball is not held in the same esteem it once was. The national pastime has become the national joke," wrote John Bansch, assistant sports editor of The Indianapolis Star.

Dave Anderson of The New York Times called it "brazen defiance of baseball's integrity" and Jerry Nason of The Boston Globe rapped what he termed "contriving of the most blatant sort, an unabashed pitch for a 'controlled' TV, a prepared package."

Many writers and columnists urged Commissioner Bowie Kuhn to order the Braves to play Aaron in Cincinnati. Red Smith of The New York Times quoted Kuhn as saying he would meet with Bartholomay during spring training and it would be up to the owner to persuade him the Braves would do their best to win the games in Cincinnati.

"Come on, Bowie, make 'em play the cards the way they've been dealt," pleaded Dave Condon in the Chicago Tribune.

Some writers felt Kuhn would order Aaron to play against the Reds.

Wrote Smith: "Depend upon it, if Henry Aaron is fit on April 4 he will be in the Atlanta Braves' outfield."

Woman hoopsters tame WSC

By LINDA MACKLER

The UMass women's basketball team brought its record to 5 - 2 with a beautifully played game at Worcester State College Tuesday night, winning 49 - 37.

UMass quickly jumped into a nine point lead and although at half-time Worcester had closed to within one point; UMass regained command of the game in the third quarter and maintained it.

For the second game in a row, Jenny Edminster was leading scorer and rebounder. After sinking 15 points and grabbing 12 rebounds Jenny said, "Throughout the season our offense has been the weak spot. Now though, everyone is relaxing and shooting, which takes the pressure off the defense."

The offense did look very relaxed. They were moving quickly and easily handled Worcester's press. In the meantime, Worcester was unable to break UMass's press. Worcester's one outside shooter, Joan Bromley fell under pressure and scored only eight points.

"Ann Foley played an excellent defensive game. This is the first time she's been so aggresive under the boards," Coach Farr stated after Ann took nine rebounds. She also said, "Basically we played out kind of game - a running offense with control of the ball. We beat them on the press."

Thursday night in New Hampshire, UMass will play a crucial game. A victory will assure them of a seat in the upcoming Regional Tournament at Brooklyn College March 7th - 9th, while a defeat may possibly knock them out of contention. This year's Tournament is looking for regional representation and will choose only one or two schools from each state. Since Springfield College has been defeated only by Queens, UMass must prove it too can beat a strong team like New Hampshire.

Relay wins it for women

By MDC STAFF

In the first dual meet ever held in New England between two women's college track teams, UMass defeated Springfield College 28-21 in an exciting, although small scale, meet held Saturday at Curry Hicks cage.

The meet came down to the last event, the 4 x 1 lap relay, before victory was assured for the UMass women. Charlotte Lettis anchored the relay and edged Cindy Bartlett of Springfield by one tenth of a second. Lettis, a distance runner, had a most unusual and straining expression on her face as she just barely held off the fast closing Bartlett.

Lettis also led the UMass sweep of the mile run with a time of 5:30 followed by Marion Kilick in 5:45.9 and Merry Cushin 5:48.

Another meet is tentatively scheduled for March 9th.

A cheerleader left Orr Rink last night and uttered the best description of last night's UMass - New Hampshire hockey game, and it was how every UMass fan felt: "I think I'm going to cry." So close and yet so far.

The Minutemen tied the game with just over two minutes left at 5-5 only to give up a powerplay marker a little while after and a meaningless empty net goal to go down 7-5 at the hands of the Wildcats. But for almost 58 minutes they gave the second-ranked college hockey team in the country fits.

When asked prior to the opening faceoff if his club was up for the game, Jack Canniff laconically replied, "we'll find out when the game starts." Then his players answered the question with perfection as they astounded everyone in the building scoring three first period goals and blanking the startled Wildcats.

Eleven seconds after UNH captain Gordie Clark was penalized for elbowing, Tim Howes took a Bill Mintiens point-to-point pass and let a slapshot go which UNH goalie Seth Barnum stopped with his arm only to have the puck trickle off and fall into the net, at 12:22. At 13:49 Billy Harris picked up a Howes rebound to Barnum's right and stuffed a backhander past his pad into the far corner to make it 2-0 for the Minutemen.

UMass kept the pressure on, and at 15:19 Kevin Conners picked up a rebound off a Mark Sullivan shot and scored on a twelve-foot backhander from the slot to Barnum's stick side.

The first stanza was all-Umass as the UMies peppered the Wildcat goal with 16 shots, allowing only five at the other end.

Just as UMass fans pictured the word "upset" in their minds, UNH showed the stuff they're made of. Only fifteen seconds into the second period, Bill Mintiens was sent to the box for tripping; thirteen seconds later Jamie Hislop deflected a shot from the point with the blade of his stick as he was falling down about eight feet in front of Chick Rheault and put UNH on the board.

Then the deluge started that would see the period end with Umass down by 5-3. After Hislop's goal the Minutemen seemed to lose their vim and vigor as UNH started coming on.

The Wildcats potted goals at 3:10, 3:47, 8:29, and 17:54 to gain the two-goal advantage, and of the five second-period markers Rheault couldn't be faulted on any of them.

The socond UNH goal at 3:10 of the period came on a screened slapshot from the point. The tieing goal came when Rheault stopped Jamie Hislop on a breakaway only to have the puck passed back in front to a waiting Jim Burke who rifled it home from ten feet with Chick out of position.

UNH's fourth goal came on a passout to Ray Bertollo from behind the net with Bertollo only having to redirect it behind Rheault. The fifth goal for the Wildcats was of the flukey variety as Vic Olmstead came over the UMass blueline and wristed a shot from thirty-five feet that Rheault had the bead on all the way. Unfortunately, the puck tipped off Tim Howes' kneepad enough to change its direction and catch the lower left-hand corner.

IT'S YOUR TURN — Chick Rheault lets the ref do the work for a change during last night's near-win over UNH. He faced 42 shots, 19 in the 3rd period, as UMass fell by two, the winner with less than 2 minutes left.

KEVIN CONNERS: two key goals

Just before the second period ended Vic Ronda received a five-minute major for high sticking Jim Lynch and breaking his nose in the process. UMass took advantage of the infraction by scoring at 1:47 when Mark Sullivan batted a loose puck in front of the UNH cage past sprawled goaltender Dan Magnarelli who had replaced Barnum in the second period.

At 17:31 Orr Rink erupted. Mark Sullivan picked up the puck at the Umass line after stopping an errant Wildcat cross-ice pass, beat two New Hampshire defenders into the clear and fired a wristshot which Magnarelli blocked from twenty feet out. But Kevin Conners, the trailer on the play picked up the rebound and parked it in the deserted cage making overtime a virtual certainty.

Sadly, it was not to be. Ten seconds after Conners' tieing effort, Tim Howes picked up an elbowing penalty and at 18:36 Jamie Hislop scored his third of the night on a passout from behind the net to put UNH on top to stay.

Rheault was brilliant throughout the game but especially in the third period when he stopped eighteen of nineteen shots. Except for a span of eight minutes in the second period, UMass skated step-for-step with New Hampshire but just didn't have the ability to finish off the big play when it counted.

Next Wednesday night the Minutemen face Division One Northeastern. After New Hampshire they should be a pushover.

Wrestlers strangle WPI 39-3

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Staff Wrestling Writer

It was hoped that the Minutemen matmen could bounce back big after losing to Wilkes College. The UMass grapplers bore out those hopes and brought their record to an 8-7 mark with a convincing 39-3 pounding of Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

The Minutemen hosted WPI on Tuesday night in their next to last home performance and won nine out of ten bouts — four by falls. The experience that has been gained by wrestling class teams like Wilkes was very much in evidence as UMass out-dueled the Engineers in every department. Takedowns and near-falls were very plentiful on UMass scorecard as the winners were never seriously put out against WPI.

Senior Joe Phillips decisioned WPI's Steve Barnicle 8-4, picking up three very nice takedowns in the process. Larry Reynolds had WPI's talented Co-Captain Larry Martiniano at 126 but had little trouble as he handed him an 11-3 shellacking. Reynolds was not stopped on his feet and was working for the pin constantly while he amassed six minutes riding time in the bout.

The 134 pound match saw UMass' Dick Muri maul the Engineer's Paul Wittman, 7-0. Russell Chateauneuf picked up UMass' first pin of the evening at 142 as he decked Chet Kokoska in 6:20. In the bout Chateauneuf displayed the smoothness that was reminiscent of his freshman year when he won the New Englands.

"I'm starting to get in shape, that's all," smiled Chateauneuf mysteriously upon being questioned about his thoughts about the upcoming New Englands.

WPI picked up their only win at 150 as their other Co-Captain, Eric Isbister, outlasted Minuteman Donny Rice, 9-6. It was a close affair with Rice reversing Isbister three times for his points. Steve Jabaut moved up a weight class and handled Steve Schlitt of WPI, 11-5. Schlitt had a height advantage that Jabaut minimized in the second period as he flattened him with a pancake takedown that was good for a two and three.

UMass Captain Stevé Benson was out for the school pin record but had to settle for a pin in the third period of the 167 pound bout instead. The time of the fall over Bill Patonas was 6:38. UMass swept the next three weight classes as the trio of Spaulding, Osborne and Fenton collected two pins and a win. At 177 Bob Spaulding bested Bob Winter, 6-2, while Robin Osborne decked Gerry Batchelder in 3:58 at 190. Dennis Fenton collected his second win in the last two matches by pinning Craig Arcari in 3:58. On Saturday he beat Wilkes College's talented Al Scharer 9-4 for Umass' other win in the dual match.

PIN POINTS: The dual match scheduled for this Saturday with Dartmouth has been rescheduled for next Tuesday due to problems at Dartmouth... In the national wrestling picture the University of Michigan is a slight favorite to wrest the NCAA title from Iowa State... Big Ten teams (dominate) the Top Ten with Iowa second and Wisconsin fourth in the ratings... The UMass Minutemen are starting their big push down for the New Englands. Larry Reynolds is making a concerted efford to drop to 118 while Steve Benson drops to 158 and Cliff Blom to 150. It is hoped that in so doing none of these wrestlers will be working hard for second place... URI will finish their best season to date this Saturday as they meet Ivy League doorman Brown in what should be a yawner at Providence. The Rams should have more top seeds in this year's New Englands than anyone else.

Tradition of intense rivalry key

UMass gymmen tackle Spfld juggernaut

By WALT POWERS
MDC Sports Staff

Back in the days of Mass Aggie, a UMass-Springfield mens gymnastics meet was always good for a laugh. After all, the Chiefs were a perennial NCAA power, and there weren't too many "farmers" who even knew what a pommel horse was. For the Redmen, it was good experience; for the Chiefs, it was a chance, to relax and run up a big score.

Times have changed since then, but not the results. UMass now keys for the meets against such NCAA powers as Penn State and Southern Connecticut, while Springfield, still a small college juggernaut, aims the guns of its long traditionat it's now powerful Amherst neighbor. This tradition, not the comparative strengths of the two teams, will probably decide the result of the meet tonight.

"This rivalry isn't as intense as that between the UMass-Springfield women," said Tom Dunn, "but it's certainly very intense. We're the biggest meet on the Springfield schedule, and they always come up with their best meet against us".

UMass has consistently outscored the Chiefs throughout this season, but past results are irrelevant here. A statistically superior UMass team was taken to the final event in last year's one-point Minuteman victory, UMass' third in the sixteen year series history. Tonight's meet will be held in Springfield, where UMass has won only once before, back in 1968.

This meet figures to turn on pommel horse, where Springfield lacks death and has scored consistently lower than UMass all season. All other events should be close and in one of them, the still rings, Springfield has the edge. A strong showing by an up-and-coming parallel bars squad could wrap up the meet for the Minutemen. UMass cannot afford the sidehorse lapses that occured against Navy though because as the scoring gap narrows, any judging edge shifts to Springfield.

If Gene Whelan loses the all-around a snowball may freeze in hell, so the individual spotlight will focus on Springfield's flying Scuderi brothers. Two of them, Sal and Angelo, compete for the Chiefs, the third brother, Steve, is Tom Dunn's third all-around. All three grew up in Springfield, so for Steve it will be sort of a homecoming.

With only weak Cornell left to play, a win tonight would earn the Minutemen fourth place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Association.

NOTE: the bus trip scheduled for tonight's meet has been cancelled.)

Bruins tie Stars, 5-5

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Boston center Phil Esposito rifled in three goals, giving him 50 for the season, as the Bruins came back to tie the Minnesota North Stars 5-5 in the National Hockey League Wednesday night.

Esposito tied the game at 15:32 of the third period on a power play, sweeping in a loose puck at the corner of the crease to get him to the 50-goal level for the fourth straight season.

The North Stars, breaking a seven-game Bruin winning streak, had come from a 4-2 deficit early in the final period to take a 5-4 edge on goals by Murray Oliver, Lou Nanne and Barry Gibbs, the third at 14:40.

Earlier in the period, Carol Vadnais and Esposito gunned in goals for the Bruins in a span of 33 seconds.

The goals by Oliver and Nanne came 29 seconds apart.

Gibbs, skating in unassisted from the center zone, and Esposito traded first period goals. Bobby Orr, with an unassisted goal of his won on a power play, and Nanne, 12 seconds later, exchanged second period goals.

The standing room only crowd of 15,555 booed Esposito loudly in the final minute as the big Boston center skated in circles in his own zone in an effort to preserve the tie.

ByMIKE KNEELAND
MDC NEWS EDITOR

Two area students have sparked an investigation into Springfield Hospital Medical Center by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Mark Citron, a UMass pre-med student, and Douglas Whelan, a Hampshire College pre-med student, charge that the hospital "has created conditions which are preventing the Spanish-speaking community from receiving adequate medical care."

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission in New York City recently received a copy of the statistics filed by Citron and Whelan along with the students' personal observations. The Commission, which heads the Region One area which includes Springfield, plans on taking a closer look at the situation.

According to Citron, who spent more than two weeks at the hospital, before being asked to leave, about 20 per cent of the emergency room patients are Spanish speaking. He says many of these people do not speak English. hospital before

Citron quotes Dr. Miner, director of the hospital's emergency room services, as saying it is not the responsibility of the hospital to supply interpreters. People coming to America should learn to speak English or else bring an interpreter with them, Dr. Miner told Citron.

Citron said he was told by Dr. Miner that the hospital could not find any bi-lingual, medically trained persons to hire. But when Citron called the Springfield Mass. Employment agency, he says, the agency said they had not received any such request from the hospital. Citron said the employment workers told him they would "extensively search" for such a trained person if the request were made.

Bill Schaare, a Springfield Hospital spokesman, said he feels that the hospital is an efficient one. "I find it hard to believe that we are operating in a total void," he said.

Schaare believes the hospital is particularly interested in the Spanish-speaking people. As evidence, he noted the work done at the Brightwood-Riverview Health Center.

The Center, he says,is staffed by Springfield Hospital employees who treat outpatients in the predominantly Spanish area. Schaare says there are nurses there who speak "some Spanish", physicians, and three health aids of Spanish decent. He said the Center advertised for people to work there who could speak Spanish.

In Springfield Hospital itself, a list of employees who can speak Spanish is compiled, Schaare said. Speaking from his home, Schaare said he could not be sure how many employees speak Spanish without access to files.

The spokesman added that a full-time Spanish speaking clerk in the outpatient ward is on duty. He said that during her working hours she could easily be summoned to the emergency room if necessary.

Whelan, who worked seven months in the hospital, cites one case where a lack of communication was evident,however. A child died, he wrote, in the pediatric extensive care unit. "I don't mean to imply, in this case, that the resulting death could have been avoided by obtaining an immediate history. What upsets me is that the grandmother's feeling of helplessness and anxiety should not have been compounded by her frustration at being unable to communicate with a single member of the emergency ward staff."

Citron charges he was in effect "kicked out of the hospital" because the questionaire he was distributing with the hospital's initial approval, to Spanish people was yielding embarrassing results for the hospital.

Citron also says he personally heard physicians comment disrespectfully towards Spanish patients.

He concludes that there is no "positive motivation in the hospital to try to understand the Spanish Culture and life-style."

Impeachment for non-criminal acts OK, House probers told

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Judiciary Committee, investigating the possible impeachment of President Nixon, was advised by its staff yesterday that impeachable offenses need not be criminal acts.

The advice, quickly rejected by the ranking Republican member of the committee, was contained in a staff memorandum exploring in general terms the constitutional grounds for impeachment of a president.

In its most significant finding, the memorandum states that criminal law is not applicable to the process of removing the president from office.

"The criminal law..does not address itslef to the abuses of presidential power," says the memorandum. "In an impeachment proceeding a president is called to account for abusing powers which only a president possesses."

Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., and Rep. Edward Hutchinson, R-Mich., at a news conference at which the memorandum was distributed, made it clear it in no way reflected the committee's position on the crucial question of what constitutes an impeachable offense.

Hutchinson said "it speaks to the committee, it does not speak for the committee." And he left no doubt that it did not speak for him.

"It supports a broader concept of impeachment than I would think wise in dealing with a president," said Hutchinson, who added that he believed criminal behavior should be required before a president was removed from office.

But the memorandum stated there is nothing in the 400-year history of impeachment in England, the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention or the precedents of the House to support the narrow view espoused by Hutchinson.

Turning specifically to the standards against which a president must be judged, the morandum states that no precise criteria can be listed.

"However," it says, "where the issue is presidential compliance with the constitutional requirements and limitations on the presidency, the crucial factor is not the intrinsic quality of behavior but the significance of its effect upon our constitutional system or the functioning of our government."

The memorandum says that the constitutional duty imposed on a president to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," implies a responsibility for the over-all conduct of the executive branch.

Pre-vet students suffer in Mass.

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

Aspiring veterinarians, handicapped by their New England residency, are being rejected from veterinary colleges across the country, according to James Fleming, president of the recently revived Pre-Veterinary Club at UMass.

Members of the club are distributing notices, selling bumper stickers and travelling to towns, in an effort to alert people to this problem, and to gain support for a bill proposing the establishment of a regional veterinary college at the site of the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

Presently, there are 18 veterinary colleges located in 17 states, not one of which is in any of the six New England states. Intense competition is increased for New England residents as veterinary colleges give first priority to their own state residents. Second priority falls to residents of states without veterinary schools who enjoy regional agreements with those states which have the colleges.

New England states do not fall into this category either.

"Most of the New England students whom I've talked with are frustrated," said Fleming, a senior, who recently visited the University of Vermont, among other campuses trying to start other campaigns. "Although there are many well-qualified students in this region, they have no opportunity for a veterinary career."

Tower of troubles

What's wrong with the library?

By MARK VOGLER

The world's tallest library has king size problems.

It has been labeled by several at the University as "a monolith to someone's super ego." Some even suggest that it may not have been worth !16.8 million to construct the 26-story structure (296 feet high).

Whatever the case, many at UMass don't consider the new library the "pie in the sky" which its planners intended it to be.

Informed sources have cited for the Collegian a list of woes that have befallen administrators and maintenance men since its opening last June:

--No apparent evacuation plan or adequate safeguards in the event of a fire.

--Malfunctioning of the heating and air conditioning systems which places in possible jeopardy such valuable papers as the W.E.B. DuBois collection.

--Erratic and inefficient elevator service.

--Security flaws leading to possible book thefts.

--Use of professional staff to do the work which nonprofessionals have been capable of doing.

Several library staff members who have requested to remain anonymous have flatly called the library a "fire trap."

"There are no sprinklers in the building because of the books. They don't even have an evacuation plan worked out. Looking at it from an insurance company point of view, it certainly is a liability," one source told the Collegian.

"In the event of a fire all five elevators would come down to the ground level and people would be stuck. It's impossible to open the window to get out. Since the stairwells would act as flues, anybody attempting to exit from above the level of the fire would be overcome by smoke inhalation."

Gordon Fretwell, associate director for public services at the library, said that the latest fire-safety information instructs not to evacuate high rise buildings during a fire.

"We merely respond to getting people out of zones within the immediate area of the fire," he said.

"There are many fire problems that I am aware of, but none of the nature which cause me to lay in bed at night worrying that 500 kids might ge burned in a tragedy."

Fretwell confirmed that the stand pipes available in the stairwells to hook up fire hose are useless because the doors were improperly hinged — the fault of the archetect.

When the doors are fully opened, it is impossible to get to the stand pipe. And to unravel the fire hose within the stand pipe encasement, the door must remain closed. (see photograph)

"How the hell can I get to the hose!" Amherst fire officials tell us that they'll use the stand pipe from the floor below.

Asked whether the carpets throughout the building are supposed to be fire resistant, Fretwell said he assumed they would be. However, suring a test conducted by the Collegian, a carpet sample burned when lit with a paper match.

Amherst Fire Chief Edward Dougherty told the Collegian that he and his department were "completely satisfied" with the design and the location of the stand pipes.

In the event of a fire, the stand pipe one level below would be used, he said.

As far as the lack of a sprinkler system, Dougherty said the present sprinkler law was not in effect at the time of the building's construction. He added that the absence of an evacuation plan was of "administrative concern and a minor inconvenience."

"The best minds in the country are not in agreement as to the best methods of evacuating a high rise building. There is just no set plan," he said.

The heating system in the library has noticeably been malfunctioning this winter and many expect the air conditioning to create problems when the warm weather sets in — just as it did suring the summer months.

According to Fretwell, heating and cooling problems in the building are believed to be linked to a water pipe rupture which occured last summer in the engine room — something which has not yet been repaired. Over 100,000 gallons of water had to be pumped out of the basement by the Amherst Fire Department.

Library employees working in the lobby have been forced to wear overcoats and sweaters to fight off the cold drafts.

One source said that a girl quit her job after catching pneumonia — directly attributed to her work in the library.

"The problem in the lobby is one of a negative air pressure building up. The system is exhausting more air than it takes in," Fretwell said.

"Because of this the outside air is stronger and is forcing its way into the building."

Some of the doors in the lobby have temporarily locked to minimize the incoming cold air.

Because of the inefficient heating and cooling system throughout the building, special attention must be addressed to the preservation of special socuments — including those of W.E.B. DuBois which were purchased by the University last spring for $150,000.

The DuBois documents are housed on the 25th floor, stored in cardboard cartons. They are reportedly in very fragile condition and will require careful restoration before they can be studied and put on display for the public.

Fretwell said that a special humidifyer and dehumidifyer device has been installed to protect the valuable collection. Several library sources have said that unless the room conditions are carefully watched, the DuBois papers could conceiveably disintegrate.

Elevators have become an everyday problem for those frequently visiting the library.

One of the reasons that Fretwell cites is that the elevators are "a conglomeration of parts from three separate manufacturers." One of the manufacturers went bankrupt.

"Elevators are complex machines without fiddling with the parts in different combinations," said one technician who has worked on them.

Only two of tne elevators can stop at any floor. To complicate matters further, one cannot call an elevator from any floor.

....This sample of the "fire resistant" carpets in the library burned when lit by a cardboard match.

Two weeks ago, all five of the elevators were not working. However, Fretwell maintains that they have been in fine working order recently.

People have occasionaly found themselves "stuck" in one of the elevators between floors. One library staffer recounted one such incident that occured on the 18th floor.

"Technicians went up in another elevator to help them. In a matter of a few minutes they has the pannels down and had the people walk across the shaft on wooden planks into the rescue elevator."

Perhaps one of the most direct problems facing students is the misplacement of books.

Fretwell estimates that missing books — stolen or otherwise misplaced — are in the thousands, but adds that he'll have no definite figure until an inventory is completed.

Some sources suggest that the library administration has contrived a stolen book problem to justify the purchase of an electronic detecting system.

Fretwell defends such a system on the grounds that it would be easier to keep track of books and the individual privacy of students and others using the library would not be intruded.

Other sources say that stolen books is a serious reality due to lax security. Lax security was cited by the Collegian on several occasions.

"Obviously the present security system is inadequate, and anybody who wants to can rip off this place blind," said one student worker.

"There are two push bar doors on the main floor that aren't even near the check-out desk. One can steal as much as he wants. For those in the know, there's always the underground tunnel down in the basement."

The tunnel leads from South College to the library.

One staff source has accused the University of "Beefing up" the library staff with professional help in order to get a top library accreditation.

"Money seems to be running down a rat hole over here and something ought to be done about it. Perhaps an investigation ought to be done by the Bureau of personnel and standardization into the staffing patterns in the library," the source said.

"The salaries are rediculous. Some people are getting $18,000 a year for sitting on their butts while the people doing the work are getting peanuts."

Some innocent in student court

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"Innocent" was the verdict handed down by the University Judiciary judges in the first shoplifting case of the semester.

The innocent verdict is not as unusual as it may seem, according to Jim Pappas, Student Attorney General. "The verdicts of the cases brought to court are usually half and half, although most people tend to believe that the guilty verdict is the more common," Pappas said.

The court case, presented Thursday night in a Campus Center room, was similar in procedure to an actual court case. Although a "lighter" atmosphere pervaded the University Judiciary courtroom, compared to an actual courtroom, the University Judiciary case was conducted in a legal court manner.

The session, lasting 30 minutes, opened with a call for pre-trial motions, of which there were none.

Next, the charge was read: shoplifting a record album from the University Store, and the defendant's plea was heard: "not guilty".

The first witness was a store guard. The guard said he suspected the defendant of shoplifting an album and placing it between a notebook and newspaper he had carried into the store.

The Defense then asked the guard if he actually saw the defendant shoplifting the album. The guard replied "no."

The Prosecution then posed questions relating to the general training of a University Store guard, and how he-she is able to detect a prospective shoplifter.

The second witness on the stand was the defendant himself. He said he had purchased an album from the store earlier in the day. On returning to the campus store, he said he carried the album into the store with a newspaper and note book.

The Prosecution asked the defendant why he didn't leave his belongings in a locker or a cubby-hole at the front of the store. The defendant replied that he had previously had a large quantity of belongings stolen from those places.

The Prosecution and Defense then summarized their cases. The Defense said the Prosecution lacked enough evidence to prove the defendant guilty.

The three judges left to decide the verdict. They found the defendant innocent.

The student was the victor. Concluded Pappas, "If you know you're innocent, there's probably a good chance that you can prove it."

Bills to protect veterans' benefits

By FRITS GEURTSEN

Legislation to protect the pension benefits of veterans and their widows was recently introduced by U.S. Representatives Michael J. Harrington (D-Mass.) and Ogden Reid (D-N.Y.).

According to Harrington, "As the law now stands when social security benefits go up, veterans benefits go down.

Frank Cotter, Director of Veteran's Affairs on campus further explained it. "When Congress voted to increase social security benefits recently they failed to raise the income limitations for pensions accordingly. Right now that level is about $3000 a year. Many veterans saw their incomes rise above that level due to the social security increase and thus they lost all or part of their pension benefits."

Approximately 13,000 veterans in Massachusetts alone are affected by the legislation.

"This legislation," said Cotter, "affects Second World War veterans rather than those from the Vietnam War era. There are, however, about 1000 war orphans at UMass whose mothers might be affected by it."

Cotter predicted that the legislation would have "no problem passing. Congress realizes that it has made a mistake and will rectify it as soon as it possibly can."

Dem. Sec. of State hopeful on trail here

By REID FISHMAN

Boston City Councillor Larry DiCara addressed a small group Wednesday night in room 162 of the Campus Center. DiCara, who is a Democratic candidate for Secretary of State in Massachusetts, referred to the highlights of his past record as being: (1) community school programs in Boston, (2) rent control, and (3) successful actions on bringing a referendum concerning the structure of the Boston School Committee.

In a speech to about thirty students, DiCara mentioned that "Boston is farther away than it used to be" and that "government is operating as if we really didn't have any technological advancement." DiCara feels that the state government should seek to establish more modes of communication with the cities and towns, stating, "my bias is against the legislature and in favor of the cities and towns."

DiCara referred often to the statewide caucus in Framingham on March 23, but he said, "I don't like to call it a caucus, I like to call it an open convention." When asked if he would abide by the caucus' decision, DiCara said, "If I am not successful in the caucus, and if somebody else is successful in the caucus, I will not be a candidate in the primary."

When asked if he supported any candidate for governor, DiCara refused, but added that his policies agreed with those of Mike Dukakis about 98 per cent of the time.

According to statistics compiled by the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE), in 1970-71, 35 students, or 2.4 per cent of the first-year veterinary students were from New England. Fleming claims that of the 135 New England residents who applied to veterinary colleges last year, only 9 were accepted — 2 by the University of Pennsylvania and 7 by Cornell University — approximately 93 per cent were rejected.

Because of the number of schools, said Fleming, "it's more difficult to enter a veterinary college than a medical school. People with 3.8 cums and good references are being rejected."

According to Fleming, most Animal Science majors want to become veterinarians "in the back of their minds."

"Everyone discourages them," Fleming said. "Peers and counselors all tell them that it's too hard to get into a veterinary school."

Fleming also warns of a critical veterinarian shortage, based on the NEBHE's forecast that by 1980 New England will need 17.5 veterinarians per 100,000 population. They will, however be 1200 short of that mark.

"The need for veterinarians is on the rise; however the opportunities for becoming one is decreasing," said Fleming.

S1298, scheduled for Senate consideration at a March hearing, will be the third bill concerning the establishment of a New England veterinary college to go before the legislature.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. John Conte (D-Worcester), is based on what the NEBHE Committee on Veterinary Medicine had proposed following a study of the school scarcity. The committee advised that a veterinary college be built on the site of the UMass-Worcester campus.

The college would be allied with the UMass Medical School and have access to its research and clinical faculties. Not only would the school train new veterinarians and conduct research, but it would also provide for the continuing education of practicing veterinarians, consultation services and extension activities.

Fleming calls the proposed school "a revolutionary concept." The six states involved would own and administer the school according to their percentage of New England's population.

"Since Massachusetts residents make up 48 per cent of New England's population," said Fleming, "they would be entitled to 48 per cent of the vacancies, and would be required to pay 48 per cent of the costs.

S1298 is similar, though not identical to S92, which passed the Senate last year "by a landslide of the quorun present", according to Fleming. It met opposition, however, in the House, where the major complaint was that the plan didn't conform to the proposal laid out by the NEBHE, as the bill also planned to utilize the site of the Grafton State Hospital.

Some people believe that UMass President Robert C. Wood's opposition to the plan helped to kill it. Dr. Alan Ferguson, Executive Director of the NEBHE accused Wood after S92's defeat that he hadn't taken the matter of the veterinary school to the trustees because of other plans for UMass-Worcester. Wood said that he was waiting until the campus became fully operative next year to see whether or not it would be the ideal site for the veterinary school.

Fleming and the Pre-Veterinary Club members are doing "grassroot campaigning" to amass support for S1298, and the subsequent establishment of a New England Veterinary college. They go to towns and ask people to write their representatives to support the college.

"We want to bring all of the forces together," said Fleming. "Most people don't know of the veterinary problem. They are the ones who will be the true beneficiaries if the school goes through."

Fleming explained that veternarians are not just "dog and cat men", but are involved in medical research, public health programs and consumer protection among other diversified fields.

The Pre-Veterinary Club, celebrated a rebirth last semester after 20 years of dormancy. One hundred twenty members strong, it arranges for guest speakers from the field of Veterinary Medicine, provides information on veterinary school requirements in addition to campaigning for the New England veterinary college.

The club will sell raffles for a bicycle from Monday, February 25 until Friday, March 8 on the Campus Center Concourse. Profits will be used to fund club activities.

Hearst kidnappers demand additional $4M for food

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) - The kidnapers rs of Patricia Hearst accused her father of "throwing a few crumbs to the people" yesterday and demanded he add another $4 million within 24 hours to a $2 million food giveaway.

A source close to newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst said commitments for another $4 million in free food would be sought immediately from grocery stores and others in the effort to secure freedom for Patty Hearst, abducted 17 days ago.

It was uncertain whether this would be acceptable to her guerrilla captors or whether they would settle only for a personal $4 million contribution. Hearst has placed his personal assets at around $2 miliion.

U.S. and the world

The kidnapers said Hearst's original $2 million plan "is not at all a good faith gesture, but rather is an act of throwing a few crumbs to the people forcing them to fight over it amongst themselves."

They demanded "that the total amount of $6 million be allotted to your designated People in Need or charity organizations within 24 hours of receipt of this order and that the food be available to the people within one week of receipt of this order."

The Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims responsibility for the kidnaping, warned that Miss Hearst would be "executed immediately" if any attempt was made to rescue her— "or to injure or to capture our captive soldiers."

This was an apparent reference to SLA members Joseph Remiro, 27, and Russell Little, 24, charged with murder in the cyanide-bullet assassination of Oakland School Supt. Marcus Foster last Nov. 6. They are being held in San Quentin Prison.

"Once we see compliance with these specifications and the program well under way, then, as we have previously stated, we will begin negotiations for the release of your daughter," the SLA said.

The transcript of the latest communique from the mysterious and multiracial SLA was made public in segments and the 24-hour time limit was not known until a latter portion became available.

In the message, the SLA claimed the Hearst corporate and personal wealth "does in fact go into the hundreds and hundreds of millions.

"Even if Mr. Hearst was to give all that to the people he could never pay the people back for the past losses of freedom nor for the current suffering that they are now under," the SLA said.

Contents of the message were first relayed by television newsman John Lester — selected by other correspondents to meet with the Hearst family as "pool" reporter — quoted the message as saying Miss Hearst would be held in accordance with the Geneva convention and her status won't change until the status of SLA "soldiers" Joseph Remiro, 27, and Russell Little, 24, changes.

The 20-minute message claimed that Miss Hearst's father, newspaper magnate Randolph A. Hearst, was withholding the family's fortune.

Lester quoted Hearst as saying that a listing of his assets in the SLA communication contained some accurate entries and others that were inaccurate.

Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, contributed $500,000 of his own money to the "People In Need" food distribution program he created Tuesday — an amount he said represented one-quarter of his total assets. He said Tuesday there was no more money "in the kitty." The William Randolph Hearst Foundation put up the remaining $1.5 million.

Lester said Miss Hearst spoke for only 10 seconds, saying: "Today is Feb. 19. This morning the shah of Iran executed two men at dawn." In two previous taped communications she has given similar news items to pinpoint the day the message was made.

Last Monday, Feb. 18, two men convicted of leading a plot to kidnap Iranian royalty were executed by a firing squad in Tehran. The men were described as anarchists and were accused of plotting to kill the royal family after kidnaping them — if the government did not release political prisoners.

There was no immediate explanation for Miss Hearst's mention of the Feb. 19 date. The transcript said Hearst's plan, scheduled to begin Friday, won't be acceptable unless numerous new demands are totally met. These include:

—"That an additional $4 million be added to the $2 million already allotted, making a total of $6 million to be used for the purchase of food. That this total $6 million figure be disbursed to the cities of San Francisco, Oakland and East Palo Alto.

—"That $70 be given over a one-month period to each family coming to receive food. That is, by the end of one month's time, a total of $70 of food will have been given to each family.

—"That all foods distributed be of top quality. And that no attempt be made to distribute garbage, or clothes or surplus storage foods of government commodities to the people.

The new communication was received as Hearst's $2 million giveaway was about to begin with handouts of groceries Friday at four "food banks" in the San Francisco and one each in Oakland and East Palo Alto. The program was expected to begin operating statewide soon. "We will have enough food on Friday to fill 20,000 requests," said Peggy Maze, acting director of Hearst's "People" program. She said the food would include milk, bread, turkey, chicken, hot cereal and fruit cake.

Atlanta newspaper to pay $700,000 ransom for editor

By JACK STILLMAN
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Persons purporting to be kidnapers of Atlanta Constitution Editor Reg Murphy sent a tape recorded message from Murphy to the newspaper Thursday night and demanded $700,000 ransom.

William H. Fields, executive editor of The Constitution and the Atlanta Journal, said the ransom would be paid.

Fields played the tape at a news conference but did not say how the tape was received.

"I have been kidnaped by the American Revolutionary Army," a voice indentified as that of Murphy said in the tape recording. "I wish you would first tell Virginia, his wife, and the children that I am all right, that I have been treated with courtesy and that I have not been abused.

"The American Revolutionary Army, as I understand it, feels that the American news media have been too leftist and too liberal. That is the cause for my abduction."

He continued, "The demand that they have is a ransom of $700,000. They understand that I don't have that kind of wealth and they don't take it personally. They make it the demand towards the corporation. They tell me that they would like for it to be in $5, $10, $20 and $50 denominations."

Murphy disappeared from his home Wednesday night after being asked by a man to help him distribute $100,000 worth of heating oil to needy causes.

Sources said Murphy left with a heavy-set white man who wore a cowboy hat. The man, in his 20s, was about 6 feet tall.

Fields said the newspaper will pay the ransom as soon as it is "apprised of the method and time."

The recorded message said his kidnapers would call "at random" someone in the Atlanta metropolitan area.

"They will be given the demand and will expect the person who is called to call you," the voice on the tape said.

Newspaper staffers and officials said the voice on the tape was definitely that of Murphy.

"The American Revolutionary Army tells me that they intend in the future to engage in guerrilla warfare throughout the country," he said.

"They don't intend to engage in bloodshed at this time. One of their significant demands is that all federal government officials resign and that free elections be held in the future."

Murphy said his abductors do not claim to be working in coordination with the SLA.

Kissinger pledges new Latin America relations

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger pledged the United States to a new spirit of brotherhood with nations of Latin America on Thursday, seeking neither to intervene in their domestic affairs nor to impose political preferences.

"We meet here as equals — representatives of our individual modes of life, but united by one aspiration — to build a new community," Kissinger told the foreign ministers of 24 hemisphere countries in a broad outline of his long-promised "new dialogue."

The secretary indicated the Nixon administration is ready to submit new legislation to modify current restrictions on U.S. aid to countries that expropriate properties of American firms.

He also proposed conciliation machinery to iron out such disputes and said hemisphere nations should meet on a regular basis. His speech significantly omitted any reference to Communist Cuba, whose economic isolation the United States continued to advocate. Cuba was not present at the meeting in the Mexican Foreign Ministry's modernistic tower building.

Kissinger seemed to recognize in his speech that most of the Latin American countries have felt neglected, or even snubbed, by the United States over the last several years. He said that in private meetings Wednesday with five foreign ministers he found one dominant concern — "Does the United States really care? Is this another exercise of high-sounding declarations followed by long periods of neglect."

As evidence that the United States is truly moving forward with a new hemisphere policy, Kissinger cited recent U.S. agreements with Mexico over water salinity, with Panama over the canal and with Peru over expropriation of mines and factories.

"Some of our most troublesome problems," he said, are conflicts over the obligations of private U.S. firms operating in foreign countries, and of the host countries.

Kissinger said the administration in Washington is prepared "to explore means by which disputes can be removed from the forefront of our inter-governmental relations."

The ministers themselves could discuss "various procedures for fact-finding, conciliation, or the settlement of disputes," Kissinger said.

Senior U.S. officials said the idea would be to disassociate the U.S. government as much as possible from the negotiations for compensation for nationalized American property.

The Gonzales amendment, now on the books, requires the United States to halt aid to any country which does not make adequate reparation. But Kissinger said: "We would be prepared to discuss with our Congress appropriate modifications of our legislation."

He talked also of a new monetary system for the hemisphere in which Latin America would have a strong voice and a U.S. pledge to avoid new limitations on Latin American access to U.S. domestic markets.

In the opening speech to the meeting, President Luis Echeverria of Mexico complained that many past U.S. promises were never fulfilled.

Solzhenitsyn due in Denmark

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP): — Alexander Solzhenitsyn left Switzerland by train today and headed for Copenhagen.

The train carrying the Nobel Prize-winning author who was expelled from the Soviet Union made a stopover in Frankfurt. The author was in a first-class compartment that had the curtains drawn. West German railroad policemen stood in the corridor outside.

The train was due in Denmark Friday morning.

In Moscow, Solzhenitsyn's wife said she and her family have been promised quick approval of their application for exit visas to join Solzhenitsyn in exile.

House blocks vetoing of federal pay hikes

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House action on vetoing President Nixon's pay raise for top federal officials, including a $10,000-a-year raise for congressmen, was blocked Thursday in committee.

Fourteen members kept a veto resolution against the pay raise bottled up in the House Post Office Committee by preventing a quorum to vote it out for full House action.

The defeat appeared to leave only a Senate veto in the way of the raise, although Rep. H. R. Gross, R-Iowa, said he will not give up his effort to get a House veto vote.

Asked if he thought the 14 members had boycotted Thursday's meeting to prevent a vote on his veto resolution, Gross replied, "They weren't here, were they."

The outspoken critic of federal spending immediately began circulating a discharge petition to try to force the veto resolution out of the committee and on the House or Senate by March 6, will raise congressmen's pay from the present $42,500 to $45,700 next year, $49,100 in 1975 and $52,800 in 1976.

Federal appeals court judges and assistant federal agency heads would get the same raise and lower officials would get corresponding three-step raises.

Supreme Court justices and federal agency heads would get a one-step raise to $64,500 from their present $60,000 starting next year. Chief Justice Warren Burger's pay would go to $67,200 next year from the present $62,500.

Under a special procedure, a select commission recommends pay raises for congressmen, federal judges and top administration officials every four years and the President then sets the pay raise subject to Congress' veto within 30 days.

Kissinger will quit if Nixon impeached

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has told senior members of Congress that he would feel compelled to resign if the House of Representatives votes to impeach President Nixon, the Washington Star-News said today.

The newspaper, in a story from Mexico City by Jeremiah O'Leary, said Kissinger "felt he could not effectively conduct the foreign policy of the United States if the President is impeached."

Sen. Gale W. McGee, D-Wyo., was quoted as saying: "We spent some time trying to persuade him not make such a decision."

McGee accompanied Kissinger on his flight Thursday from Washington to a conference of Latin American foreign ministers in Mexico City. The newspaper said Kissinger made known his view on quitting "in a private conversation with a group of some of the most prestigious members of both chambers accompanying Kissinger on his flight..."

Senate Majority Leader Hugh Scott, who was among those with Kissinger, said Kissinger had only one conversation with the congressional delegation "and it was only about the hemisphere conference."

Car owners burn their gas-guzzlers

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Owners of large automobiles that get poor gasoline mileage are apparently burning the vehicles in record numbers to collect insurance, several state officials confirmed Thursday.

One source said there are two or three "rings" in operation that will accept contracts to burn cars for prices ranging from $100 to $150.

The same source said police have reports of one Boston resident who has bragged that he burned more than 100 vehicles.

Meanwhile, Robert J. Kelly, deputy state insurance commissioner in charge of the department's Fraudulent Claims Bureau, said reports from local fire departments and insurance companies show a rising trend of suspicious fires of large automobiles.

"In a month or two, as prices of gasoline go up, you'll see a real ballooning of these fires," Kelly said. "People are beginning to decide that they don't want cars that get six or seven miles a gallon.

"The small car fires have been few and far between."

Additional confirmation of the trend came from Massachusetts Insurance Commissioner John Ryan and state Secretary of Public Safety Richard McLaughlin.

"There's been a general belief that the increase is real," Ryan said. "A couple of months ago we asked the insurance companies to start providing information to the fraudulent claims bureau."

The bureau is part of the Insurance Department and is funded by the state, but these funds are subsequently reimbursed by the insurance companies.

McLaughlin said he had heard reports of substantial increases of burned-out large automobiles in junk yards across the state.

The fraudulent claims office, with 35 investigators, has tried to begin work on each new case of a car "torching" as soon as it is reported, Kelly said.

"If you get to the owner within 24 hours you stand a good chance of getting him to admit that he did it for the insurance money, or had someone else do it," Kelly said. "You can't get them to say it was because of gasoline mileage and prices, but I know that's the reason in many cases."

Since Jan. 1, Kelly said his office has received reports of 178 suspicious auto fires. Twenty of these reports came from insurance firms.

He said there have been 43 such fires in Boston in the past 10 days.

Kelly said automobile "torchings" have always been common, but the new twist is that the vehicles involved are almost exclusively the biggest and the ones with the lowest gasoline mileage.

Three weeks ago, he said, The Fraudulent Claims Bureau set up a system for the Boston Fire Department to report suspicious car fires and the bureau has continued to seek aid from other local fire departments.

Station lines consume gas

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Motorists in Massachusetts are wasting hundreds of thousands of gallons of gasoline a day in their search for an open service station, an engineering team from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has found.

The long lines and short hours at gas stations in the state and elsewhere "are more than an inconvenience — they are significantly worsening the gasoline shortage," the team said.

The findings are the work of Prof. James C. Keck and Associate prof. John B. Heywood, both of the mechanical engineering department, and Lawrence H. Linden, a mechanical engineering graduate student. All three are connected with the MIT energy laboratory.

In a typical case cited by the team, a motorist driving a standard size car three extra miles to find an open service station and waiting in line 30 minutes consumes about half a gallon of gasoline in the process.

If the driver is then limited to a $3 purchase — six gallons at 50 cents a gallon — he has just wasted 8 per cent of his purchase.

If the 8 per cent figure is typical, then about 450,000 gallons of gasoline are being wasted each day in Massachusetts alone.

The team said "Action must be taken to reduce the waiting lines and extra mileage so that the gasoline shortage is not made worse through its own side effects."

Service station owners to protest allocations

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Protests by service station operators were threatened or under way in four Eastern states Thursday as dealers and motorists alike grew increasingly impatient over difficulties with the federal government's gasoline allocation program.

Service stations throughout Pennsylvania were ready to close at 6 p.m. Friday and stay shut "until the federal ostriches get their heads of the sand," the executive director of the Pennsylvania Service Station Dealers Association said Thursday.

Tom Anderson made the statement in predicting that the shutdown approved by the 5,-300-member association would be joined by nonmembers and be 95 per cent effective.

In Delaware, station operators in two of the state's three countries began a pump-out protest Thursday, vowing to sell gasoline as fast as customers want to buy it until this month's allocations are gone, then padlock their pumps until March.

In Connecticut, most stations began closing at noon Thursday to protest federal sales regulations. In Greenwich, where only four stations were open, dealers voted to continue their two-day strike until a meeting scheduled Friday between town officials and Federal Energy Office — FEO — representatives.

In New York State, Mac Victor, executive director of the 5,000-member New York State Association of Service Station operators said dealers are threatening to close unless the Federal Energy Office stops its "foot-dragging" and makes a "clear-cut proposal" to keep them in business.

N. H. studies bill to control energy

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A bill that would give the state complete control over the production and distribution of energy in New Hampshire received its first public hearing in the legislature Thursday.

It was denounced as a Hitler-like attempt to seize power and the best way to turn people to communism.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Ernest Coutermarsh, D-Nashua, said the measure was necessary to deal with "one of the most serious emergencies in our nation."

The bill would create a nine-member commission, of which Gov. Meldrim Thomson and Coutermarsh, the House minority leader, would be members. The commission would control the production, distribution, allocation and conservation of all forms of fuel and power in the state.

Violations of the commission's rules could result in penalties of up to seven years in prison and fines of up to $50,000.

Rep. Stanley Williamson, R-Goshen, called it "the most dangerous bill I have ever seen."

"This is how Hitler came to power... using economic crises to persuade the German parliament to give his movement the power to take over the German government."

"It is 'extremely dangerous' for the legislature 'to give somebody else the power to make laws'," he said.

Gasoline supplies remain low in N. E.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gasoline supplies are low in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Vermont and are fair in Maine and New Hampshire, according to survey conducted Thursday by the American Automobile Association of New England.

Areas reporting low supplies were Cape Cod, Lawrence, the Springfield-Holyoke area and Fall River, Mass.; Providence, R.I.; and Bennington, Rutland, and Burlington, Vt.

Many of the stations contacted in the AAA survey are continuing to stagger their hours of pumping gasoline - a few hours in the morning and then again in the afternoon.

Others are pumping only in the morning until they reach their daily quota. Limits on purchases are a standard practice in New England. Two dollars and three dollar limits are the most common.

In Massachusetts some of the stations contacted are awaiting their last delivery from the February quotas, which may reflect the additional two per cent allocation of gasoline to Massachusetts.

Hancock uses more energy

BOSTON (AP) - Replacing the insulated windows in the new John Hancock Tower with single-pane glass will increase the building's total energy consumption by 5.65 per cent, a spokesman said Thursday.

However, the John Hancock Mutual Insurance Life Insurance Co. said that because of other energy-saving measures, the 60 story building will still be 3.65 per cent more efficient in its energy use that other structures of comparable size.

The company was forced to replace the glass when it discovered that the original double panes would not withstand high winds. The glass cracked and fell into the streets below.

Much of the building — the highest in New England — is now covered with plywood.

Disneyworld: best example of the corporate leisureworld.

The only real thing you can do is spend money.

By BOB SCHEIER

Driving through the palm tree and commercial strip wilderness of central Florida, you come to a three lane exit simply marked "Disneyworld", and at the end of that road lies the latest and largest example of the corporate "liesureworld."

And from the time you're pulled away from your parking lot in rubber-wheeled "mini-trains" until you are deposited back at your car an exhausting twelve hours later, you're never allowed to forget the fact your're having — or supposed to be having — a good time.

From the parking lots, to the main gates, to the rides, restaurants, flying elephants, plastic alligators, and papermache castles, the clean-cut smiling attendants never let you forget the fact your're having a great time.

The only trouble is, they're so busy ushering you from line to line, "attraction" to "attraction," they never have time to explain just what it is you're supposed to be having such a good time at.

Disneyworld is, essentially, a big amusement park which borrowed a lot of props and ideas from a) comic books, b) modern science, and c) the myth of America's clearcut past.

Because of the modern socialism of the tour guides-crowd control expects there's nothing left for the customer to do besides deposit his rear end in the rides, pay for his hamburgers, and take up space on the choo — choo train.

For instance, Main St. USA is simply a street which re-creates, down to the last detail, a movie set for a Western in the 1880's.

You walk down the street, take in the newly painted, air-conditioned, computer-run quaint stores, and that's about it. The only real thing you can do is spend money.

Or make money. It was on Main St., USA, that I turned off to Disneyworld while watching a "barbershop quartet" sing. They jovially clowned around, pretended to make mistakes, pretended to forget lines on songs, and playfully hit each other with their hats.

Except if you watch them carefully, you see they aren't having a good time at all. They were watching each other for cues, watching the audience response — in short, earning a living, while pretending to be carefree and trying to make us feel carefree, too. My Willing Suspension of Disbelief was hanging a bit too low for what.

Many of the rides don't leave you any room for anything more real. On one — "It's A Small World" — the visitor rides past thousands of multi-lingual singing dolls carrying the profound message that peace in the world would be nice. Gee.

The "Hall of Presidents" keeps you just as far from reality. In a colonial-style building with air-conditioning outlets in its walls, you get to see mechanical reproductions of all 36 Presidents stand and blink in the glare of the Instamatics.

Even the current President stands and fingers something--maybe a tape, or a subpoena--in his pocket while President Lincoln speaks of the dangers of fascism from within the country.

But all of this is kept safely back in the past, as the 36 robots disappear behind the curtains and a roar of inspirational music.

There is no room for participation, conflict, challenge, or...I hate to say it...reality. After seeing two alligators in a "wild" part of Disneyworld, thinking they looked plastic, and then seeing the loudspeakers from whence their roar came, I had had it.

I'm all for escape and relaxation, but there must be a more challenging, and meaningful way to do it than this. If this country is ever going to be more than a chain of shopping malls of the heart and mind from coast to coast, it will need more than this crowd-controllld, everything is beautiful, rosy-cheeked and distorted reflection of our fantasies to challenge it.

Or maybe I just can't forget where Presidential press secretary Ron Zeigler got his start--as a guide at Disneyland. Fantasyland, - here we come.

NES has record numbers

By SAMUEL P. HASSAN

The largest enrollment ever for the three year old Near Eastern Studies Program was announced by Chief Advisor and Professor of Arabic and Armenian Vartan Artinian last Friday in Herter Hall. In a meeting attended by Chancellor Bromery, Vice Chancellor Gluckstern and Dean Jeremiah Allen of the Classics Department, some 30 students and faculty members took an encompassing look at the NESP, and made plans for the future.

The NES Program, which is not a full-fledged department, is administered through the Department of Classics by faculty members teaching Classics, History, Political Science, Art, and Language. Being intercollegiate (five-college) as well as interdepartmental, the program is highly enrolled, 630 students, and according to NES committee member Walter Denny, "very diversified, and quite unique."

Because of the diversity and increasing enrollment, a need for expansion is evident, but what form the expansion will take remains to be seen.

Vice Chancellor Gluckstern suggested a previously mentioned umbrella type arrangement with CASIAC, but noted that the CASIAC staff would need to be strengthened to bear the burden.

This idea of administering Near Eastern Studies through CASIAC was frowned upon by one woman at the meeting who said, "We'd get lost in CASIAC." Walter Denny who teaches Turkish and Islamic Art said that becoming a department would require secretaries and staff, and that the, "informal, organic way of growing," has meant for no, "internal rot," in the program. He feels the program is better off the way it is although becoming a department is on the minds of many involved in the program.

Chairman of the NES Committee Edward Phinney expressed a desire to become more interrelated with Afro-American Studies, and Doui Afesi, assistant professor in that department agreed. Mr. Afesi also mentioned a more realistic approach to the Near East, and suggested a program ideology, something like a department ideology.

Planning of 5 College Seminars, a Summer 1975 program in Egypt, and arrangements for the upcoming Near Eastern Pot Luck Dinner took place, and a progress report on committee efforts to obtain educational subsidies from Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Bahrain was given by Chairman Phinney. NES has received over 200 volumes from Armenian Organizations, and Harvard has donated about 500 volumes that were duplicates. Kuwait has sent books in the past, requests have been made, and replies from the governments contacted should be on the way.

An emphasis was placed on the lack of student understanding about the Near Eastern Studies Program, and David Biddle suggested a sepecific program offering for Freshman. Professor Biddle teaches History, and is on the NES committee.

The program itself grew out of interest and enjoyment of both students and professors, and efforts by committee members and the administration to keep the program growing with student interest are being made. Friday's meeting was an excellent example of these efforts, and it appeared to be a big step in the right direction.

Skinorama: X, R, PG, G

By ERNIE KING

It all started with David Hemmings and two young English starlets named, Jane Birkin and Gillian Hills. All three were in an film titled, "Blow Up." In a scene that made cinema history, Jane and Gillian were wrestling in Hemmings studio and managed to divest each other in front of Hemmings, with a little help from him. This scene created a storm of controversy, because for a few brief seconds, you saw on the screen, two completely naked young women. Antonioni refused to cut the scene and was not given a seal of approval by the film industry. "BlowUp," was a success and Holywood found a new source of income, pandering to the lust of Americas voyuers. On November 1st, 1968, the old Motion Picture Production Code was scrapped and the Voluntary Classification system was adopted. The ratings, G, GP, R, and X would now grace our eyes every time we saw a film. The first film to earn the X rating was, "Birds of Peru," a grind house production that was a box office success.

Skinorama has been with us since the days of the Frat house cellar partys but never in its history has it been more profitable. Commercial films exploiting both heterosexual and homesexual alike are flooding the market and wasting the time and money of many a, "dirty old man", throughout the country. Most of the films have no plot and many of them lack basic reality. Naked women being balled by fully clothed man, psuedo-lesbianism and high school girls locker rooms dominate the major part of most of the films. The midnight specials get a little earthier but for the most part, they are boring ripoffs.

The going rate for enjoying one's perversion on wide screen cinema-scope and living colour varies from one to five dollars, depending on the controversy surrounding the film. Films such as; "The Cheerleaders," "My Bare Lady," or "The Swinging Stewardesses," are priced between one and two dollars depending on what night you go. Others bring out the moralist from every corner of the land, giving the film free publicity through controversy and court action. Two of these films, "The Devil and Miss Jones," and "Deep Throat," were priced at five dollars and were drawing capacity audiences from middle class America. Both of these films were explicit in the sexual scenes but the repetion soon became boring and the acting was non-existent. The film techniques used in these meat market productions are those of a Kindergarden film making class and they have the visual pleasure of a bad home movie.

To give themselves a guise of respectability, the pornoproducers have resorted all manner of disguises. Films such as "Together," or "High School Girls," are presented as films dealing with documented cases of sexual deviancy or the treatment of these problems. Some fantasize on the scandelous goings on in the various professional fields. "Night Nurses," "The Secretaries," and "Sub-Urban Wives," all fall into this what really goes on behind closed doors category.

With competition as stiff as an erection at a Saturday night orgy, the pornovies have had to resort to gimmickry to gather audiences. "Starlett," a sleeper about couching your way to stardom was rated triple-X by its' producers and it sucked up profits like a vacuum cleaner at the same time it took it's audience to the cleaners.

"Animal Lover," a tender tale of bestiality, currently playing in New York is using the controversy surrounding "Deep Throat", to reap it's profits.

Not all of the X-rated films are in the grind house category however, films like; "Midnight Cowboy," "I Am Curious Yellow," or "The Last Tango in Paris," are worth seeing and the choice should be left up to the viewing public.

What makes these films a box office success is the X-rating and the controversy that surrounds a film that has been labeled obscene. If the crusading D.A.s and other defenders of the public morality really wanted to put an end to the stimulation of anyones ld not be their course of action. Courts and confiscation mean publicity and people rush to the theater like lemmings to have their morals offended and senses shocked. If the films were left alone and people's morals weren't governed by America's army of censors, the "Tits and ass," syndrome of Hollywood would eventually die in the solitude of it's own boredom.

Why Rocky quit

A very strange thing happened a while back in my home state.

Nelson Rockefeller resigned as Governor of New York, a post he had held since 1959. Economically speaking, New York is the most powerful state in the Union. Also, the Rockefellers are the most powerful family, and the richest, in the United States. It is the family's money alone that has kept Nelson in New York's governor's chair.

Nelson says he resigned to head a "fact-finding" commission. It is one that he says he suggested to Nixon. Now why would he do such a thing? It is my guess that he is making one last run for the Presidency in 1976. Nelson will be 68 then. Once he passes 70, he will have little chance as too many voters will consider him too old to be President. To take a look at him, let us take a brief look at his family.

It all started out with John D. who built up a giant conglomerate known as Standard Oil which was split up before he died. John D. hated competition. He wanted a monopoly on oil. When he was forced to split up Standard Oil, he had the Rockefeller Foundation started as a tax free corporation that still today controls most companies bearing a Standard Oil name. John D. was also responsible, through his son-in-law Nelson Aldrich (Nelson's grandfather) Senator from Rhode Island, for setting up the graduated income tax and the loopholes that go along with it.

Today, there are four Rockefeller brothers. Nelson, Laurence, John D. III and David. Let us briefly consider them.

John D. III runs the foundation. He and Rockefeller man Cyrus Eaton (receiver of the Lenin Peace prize) have bankrolled numerous leftist schemes. Laurence is an environmentalist. He does studies for Mr. Nixon on population control as well as other "quality of life" subjects. Nelson is the Governor who put New York State into much debt and made it the horror it is to live in. But the most powerful is David. David is the president of the Chase-Manhattan Bank which is the most powerful bank in the world. It's Moscow branch is located at the most prestigious address there, 1 Karl Marx Square. David was also responsible for firing Nikita Kruschev in 1964. He is also Chairman of the Board of the Council on Foreign Relations, a semi-secret organization pushing for world government with it controlling the Rockefeller sponsored structure for such, the United Nations.

The Rockefellers are sure to put a lot of money into what they want. Until recently, Richard Nixon was their man. Now, King Richard is fighting them. What the Rockefellers would really like is to get Nixon out of office, have Ford appoint Nelson vice president before resigning and then have Nelson become president without the benefit of an election. They want Nelson to be President so they can merge the US and the USSR into their World Government. And isn't it a coincidence that Nelson is talking enough of a conservative line to fool people like Barry Goldwater?

We must not allow this to happen. If it does, the freedom of all of us is at stake.

One Agnew too much

It has often crossed my mind, while sitting and staring at a blank page in my typewriter, just how many people have at one time or another, attempted to write their first novel. And how many of those actually complete a manuscript, and have it accepted by a publisher. And of that number, how many actually make it to the best-seller list, or there-abouts. It is discouraging on the one hand to consider how fast the numbers dwindle. While on the other side, it is encouraging to look at many great authors who were not recognized as such until very late in their careers. Some even had trouble finding publishers willing to take a chance on them, as was the case with Malcolm Lowry. Others, like James Joyce, had to battle the laws before their books became available. And of course one can always imagine the stored genius of would be authors, who have not yet broken the bonds of obscurity, but who will one day be granted their due.

It is safe to say, therefore, that the standards of literary worth are curious ones, and in a sense, arbitrary. Required reading for some, is trash for others. And so it should be, at least in as much as beauty is in the eyes of the beholder, or some such nonsense. In other words a balmy day in May to some is every bit as enjoyable as a fresh, crisp, ten dollar bill. But the way things are today, I'm sure they'd be no lack of enthusiasm for the sawbuck. Necessity, after all, is but another determinant of beauty. But on to the point.

One should think that, in all fairness, an author would be required to exhibit a certain talent as such, or at the very least, a sense of common regard for the English tongue. And even if his manner of speech is repulsive, is it not fair that he should at least fall into the category of human being? Even the experts agree that the day of a novel written by a Dolphin, is pretty far off. (And that's the real Dolphin, Emily, not the football players; which is not to say it doesn't apply to both.) But the hell with the fish and quarterbacks, the point is that a writer should be required to submit himself to the scrutiny of the reading public, before any decision is made as to his greatness. Fitzgerald went through it, as did Joyce, and Hemingway, Graham Greene and Dashiell Hammett. No exceptions for the masters. And now we come to the exception; the first time author with a recognizable name. The publishers consider the selling power of this creature's name, and not the content of the book. Let's face it, if a man named John Doe approached a first-rate publisher with one chapter, that's one chapter, of a novel about a future Vice President who is unwittingly programmed by some sinister force to overthrow the government or some such hogwash, he'd be told to go back into his hole and re-read the Manchurian Candidate, and don't call us, we'll call you, but thanks for the laughs.

But as the Lord works in strange ways, so to, evidently, does the devil. For the man's name was not John Doe, but rather Spiro Agnew, and the book is to be published. Even a leading magazine, one which I will never, ever, even thumb through again, has bargained for exclusive serialization rights. And it wouldn't be all that disgusting except for the fact that Agnew is a crook, disgraced the office he held, spit at the American people, is protected by Secret Service agents, and works from an office provided by the White House at the taxpayers' expense. If anyone has a right to publish a book about a Vice President, we do. I'm sure we could all compose a dandy. The nerve of that guy, it's just sickening.

Now, I'm not denying Agnew's right to make an ass out of himself in print if he so desires. And, I suppose if he can make a buck while he's at it, then here-here to the stupidity of Americans. But that'll be the cold day in Hades I'll help him do it. Talk about pronography! This'll ruin the hearts and minds of just about anyone. Perhaps all the patriotic, God-fearing, book-burning, morals-protecting, holier than thou's, will slap a ban on this baby. But of course, on the contrary, they'll probably rush right down to the nearest book shop, and scarf up two copies before their gone, and then wait, breathlessly, until the day that Agnew comes to autograph them. My Lord, some people's children!

So keep thumbing through the book notices in the papers, everybody, so you'll be sure not to miss the publication date. Better still, why not reserve a copy now, to avoid the big rush later on. But as for me, Spiro, old boy, if you don't mind, I'll just dust off my cope of Tender is the Night, and see if I can't get my mind off all this trash. Thank God there's only one Agnew, and even that's too many for me.

Leave us alone

By STEVE TRIPOLI

WASHINGTON, D.C.You know, for much of my time as a student in Amherst and a Collegian staff member I've been a big critic of the academic environment at UMass. The fact that I'm part of the Outreach program in D.C. now attests to my disenchantment with that whole scene. I'm glad that the journalism department has encouraged us who are in that major to get out and get our feet wet. Very few strings were attached to the JS internship programs.

Unfortunately, this is not so for the majority of the people here from UMass who happen to be Political Science majors. The PoliSci Department, through the kindness of their academically backward hearts, has arranged a once a week class, readings, and papers for the PoliSci majors who are here. The class meets at 7:30 p.m.

From living in the same house with these people I can attest to the fact that at the end of a work day they are usually damned tired. They certainly don't need the once a week grind of hanging around after work, going to a class, and not getting home until 9:30 or 10 p.m.

Furthermore, they're supposed to be getting a taste of Washington, memory of the rancid atmosphere of UMass and the professors hiding behind their goddam theories. The reading and papers are even more absurd here than in Amherst, since they keep the student away from seeing the sights and sounds that he -she is here to see.

Don't these professors realize that most of the people here are trying to get away from them? Maybe they do realize just that, and this is their revenge. Don't they realize that this town is twenty times what their classrooms will ever be, and that it is regressive to victimize people here with the same trash you've victimized them with already?

To put it simply, the people down here should be LEFT ALONE.I'm sure that all you blind academics can't begin to imagine what it's like to live without having "academic pursuits" to hide behind, but don't blame the people who are smart enough to try dealing with reality for that. If you have to be what you are in Amherst, and I condemn 90 per cent of that.

By the way, just as an afterthought, the people who are the victims of this mostly concur with the opinion expressed, but unfortunately find themselves intimidated by the old do your work-get a good grade ethic that tyrannizes so many good students. I have been repeatedly told that they just couldn't rock the boat for fear of reprisal. An organized resistance never got off the ground for the same reason. The department should be proud. The average professor finds this kind of person the model student.

Shrine restored

To The Editor:

Response to the (Feb. 1 MDC) plas of James House asking for donations to rebuild its stolen beer wall has been generous, but a more extensive effort is needed

Beer drinking philanthropists situated about campus have thus far contributed 1192 empties, but this is only 34.0571 per cent of the established goal. The founding fathers of the beer wall are offering a case of Schlitz to the largest donor. Thus far, 113 Baker leads the quest with an impressive total of 307 cans. The residents of third floor James House gratefully acknowledge the assistance of the major contributors as well as the many smaller individuals who have selflessly contributed to restore a fallen shrine.

Once again, we ask the student body to comprehend the cruel nature of this debacle. a 3500 can beer wall, the sole cource of inspiration; the very essence of our existance; mysteriously plundered without apparent clue or motive. Beer can rings were being compiled to purchase a seeing-eye dog for a blind person, but they too were abstracted. This calamity places the morality and humane qualities of all UMASS students in jeopardy. The destruction of this wall constitutes a moral and economic waste.

Paul "P.J.." Mooney, one of the original wall's largest single contributors claims, "The wall made drinking more meaningful...Beer is nature's most complete food...Alcohol helps stimulate brain cells. Despite the consumption of large quantities of beer, the composite corridor cum. was 3.1...The only time one's mind can truly rest is when one is intoxicated."

Ted Petine, the distinguished president of James House, implores, "I thoroughly endorse this highly constructive project and feel it will aid in the revitalization of the dorm's living environment which reached a low ebb with the malicious destruction of the wall. Despite a recent bout with tendenitis of the elbow, I have neither curtailed nor slackened my efforts to rectify this gross injustice!"

To help in the restoration of this historic landmark either bring your contributions to James House 3rd floor, or call 6-7565 thru 6-7573. Thank you for your undaunted assistance in fighting the evil and sinister forces which lurk on campus.

Thank you, Ms. Secretary

To The Editor:

My room-mate and I had recently gotten into a hassle over our meal tickets. We were both turning 21 the first week in Feb. and had been told twice — once last semester and again at the beginning of this semester — by Food Service that as soon as we turned 21 we could turn our meal books in. The girls in the office told us if we turned in a full book we'd get a full refund.

The day after my room-mate's birthday she turned her ticket in with no hassle. Then my turn came and I was told I had to be 21 before the beginning of the semester. I went to talk to Mr. Flint and told him what happened but it was like talking to a wall. He all but said tough luck and kept shoving the rule book in my face. Now my room mate could no longer be sure of her refund and I was supposed to kiss my 3 weeks loss of meals goodbye.

The next day both of us went to talk to Flint but again got nowhere. We then went over to the Dean of Students office feeling we didn't have a chance if everyone was like Flint. Thank god they weren't. The dean was our problem and we told her the whole story. She then went out of her way to help us. She called a number of people to inquire about our problem. She found the place for us to go — the Ombudsman's Office — and called Ms. Foster who agreed to listen to our story. She was also extremely nice and helpful and right after talking with us she went over to talk with Flint.

In the meantime, the dean's secretary — who had felt sorry for us — took the time and trouble to make more inquiries. She called a dean who in turn called Mr. Warren and finally we were both granted refunds for the 3 weeks of meals we missed.

We want to thank that secretary for being so nice. She didn't have to take the time to make those calls but she did. If there were more people like her and Ms. Foster around things would go a little more smoothly.

Thank you Ms. Secretary. (We don't know your name but you'll know who we mean.)

Streaking

To The Editor:

Recently a friend who attends University of Connecticut informed me of his schools notorious proficiency in the intermural, bisexual sport of streaking. Baring one's ass and running across campus has become this generation's answer to goldfish swallowing at UConn.

I am making an appeal to all the students of UMass. Anything that UConn can do we can do better (with the possible exception of basketball.) It's a shame to let our great potential go to waste.

Support your university. Lift your school spirit. Drop your drawers and get streaking!

Service sorority

To The Editor:

The sisters of the National Service Sorority, Gamma Sigma Sigma, would like to identify themselves. Although we have been in existence for 10 years and have been active in many phases of campus and community life, we'd be willing to bet that 80 per cent of the university community has never heard of our organization.

You could have seen us driving off to Belchertown to paint murals on the ward walls. Or you could have bought a book at our Used Book Exchange. Have you come in contact with us? Come meet our sisters — we'd like to know you better. Come to a coffee hour (Feb. 26 in Colonial Lounge) or drop by a sisterhood meeting (Monday 6:30 p.m., Memorial Hall basement). Join us in service!

Support for intellectual freedom

To The Editor,

You have probably concluded that the letter I sent you, asking you to support the campaign in the defense of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, was overtaken by events and became obsolete due to Solzhenitsyn's expulsion from the Soviet Union. In a sense, this is true. Personally, the man is probably safer now than he was before February 13. However, in a deeper sense, the turn of events made the message even more urgent because the cause for which Solzhenitsyn stands suffered a serious setback.

From all available options, the Soviet government chose the most clever and devious one. By removing Solzhenitsyn from Soviet territory, the government avoided the odium of direct confrontation and defused his personal case. The calculation is obviously the same as in the case of other Soviet intellectuals who were allowed to go abroad, and then prevented from returning home. Once a Soviet dissident is abroad he cannot function any more as leven of political opposition at home. And when the sensation is over, the Western public buries him by forgeting both about him and his cause. To top it all, the Soviet government reaps credit for liberalism--for exiling its opponents to the West rather than to Siberia.

Solzhenitsyn's defeat--he never wanted to leave the Russian soil--points to the weakness of campaigns which focus on personalities in order to dramatize the cause of freedom and democracy in the Soviet Union. Once the drama evaporates, the cause is apt to be shelved. This is why I decided to follow up my appeal with a reiteration of the principal reason for my initiative.

Behind the concern for individuals like Solzhenitsyn, there is the conviction that the only durable guarantee of a peaceful future for the world is the end of despotism in the Soviet Union. I feel the individual aspects of the Soviet situations are linked in two kinds of chains of effects and self-reinforcing feedbacks, one real, one hypothetical. The existing chain runs from despotism to protection of the internal regime through isolationism and external expansion, to militarism, to a permanent threat of war. The hypothetical and desirable chain runs from internal democracy to mobility of people and ideas, to integration with the outside world, to disarmament, genuine dialogue, and peace. Thus, in Western actions on behalf of freedom in the Soviet Union, idealism coincides with self-interest.

I presume you actually do not need any convincing, and hope you will join such actions as the Ad Hoc Committee for Intellectual Freedom and the "Andrei Sakharov Campaign" I mentioned yesterday, and support the means of communication with people in the Soviet area, such as Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe, as well as United States policies which further the chances of the democratic movement in the Soviet Union. I understand Senators and Representatives like to get letters from their constituents.

Thank you.

Sincerely yours,
Vaclav Holesovsky

Mexican deal

To The Editor:

I'm a man who likes to live clean and think simple. When you live like that, good things just seem to come your way. It was just the other day I got this real great job offer. I get to bring a suitcase full of fancy jewels and things all the way to Mexico, and I don't even have to pay for the flight. Imagine me doing a big important thing like that. Wait till I tell mom.

First off I thought something might be wrong with this deal, so I came right out and asked them. Brave, that's the way I am. They said it was legal an all so I feel a lot better now. You can't be too sure these days.

Well I have to catch my jet now so see you next week at the Blue Wall. I'll be the guy flashen the big dough, with the gypsum smile. Thankya kindly.

Commentary

To The Editor:

For some time now I have been subjected to COLLEGIAN Commentaries from the likes of Joyce Kosofsky, Bob Estelle, Robert Riley, and more recently, David Eibel. To be quite frank, these individuals make me ill. The COLLEGIAN does however; have people like Fred Weiss, Bill Ballou, and Zamir Nestelbaum. But now even Nestelbaum disturbs me. In the past he has combined a good sense of humor with a reasonable degree of intelligence. However; his most recent column leaves much to be desired. The title in bold lettering reads "SLA Grabs Tweety". The reference of course, is to the recent kidnapping of Patricia Hearst. Nestelbaum wrote with complete disregard for the feelings of those involved. Anyone finding humor in this matter obviously cares little for the life of a human being. I am not opposed to satire for without it I'm afraid we'd be pretty dull creatures. My main criticism is that the column was written in poor taste. One does not make light of a Protestant in the hands of the IRA. One does not make light of an Israeli in the hands of terrorists. What is it then that makes the ordeal of this young woman the victim of your 'satire'? The real SLA has killed before and may kill again. Patricia Hearst is in danger of losing her life. I find no humor in that.

Gypsy needs help

To The Editor:

Don't find yourself here. Prison in Mexico is no fun. It was almost a month before we got word that Gypsy was busted in Mexico. They finally let him write so he could get his hands on some money. Until the guards and permanent inmates are paid off he's on the bottom; the only thing he's got going for him is that they're more interested in money than his life. Pretty straightforward.

The first letter painted a vague, but horrifying picture — living in a cell with enough gruel to eat to stay alive, forced to be the object of the sexual or violent whims of the others. A game called "whop the gringo" seemed entertaining to the folks for a while. Gypsy was "it". The first letter told of a 28 year old man who couldn't hang on for long. It told of a setting that I'd grown familiar with through the gruesome fantasies of Hollywood. Only this is real. They are killing my good friend Gypsy. I love him and can't let them do that.

We began by sending enough money to keep him alive, not knowing how much was reaching him, if any. The American Embassy politely excused themselves from any involvement.

Now, eight months later, Gypsy lives in a small room without bars. He has turned this room into a library which he runs along with his candle-making business. His last letter was written on new silk-screened stationary that he's making. Added to his other sources of income this will hopefully insure his physical safety. He needs money; without it he doesn't stand a chance to stay alive. I share with you some of that letter.

> "...I think you understand my feelings about this place. My body is confined, but there is still opportunity to expand and grow... The initiation here was very difficult but your love (meaning the many who have sustained me with their enduring friendship) has reinforced my strength to the point that I am now the best person I have ever been... But honestly, Kenny, you wouldn't want to be here.
> ...Have you ever looked into Australia? I have a friend here from Australia and he puts out good reports — wide open and free. Maybe one day...
> I'm on pins and needles waiting for the sentence from appeals court. It's the same old story — they say if I pay I go...
> What can I say...? Thanks for the $, it is well spent.
> I love you,
> Gypsy.

The Mexican judicial system deals fairly openly with a system of payoffs. One buys his way out of prison. Those of us who love Gypsy don't have the money to free him. What we do have is the conviction that people tend to care for each other. We believe that if we are able to make the suffering of this one human being real enough, that there are few people who wouldn't help. We're going to raise enough money to free Gypsy. As we begin to gather caring people together we're seeing results.

We need your help, if only a few hours of your time. Call us or come by. Most of all we need people. If you can't give yourself, dig into your pocket and send us a dollar. We're not trying to save the world — we're only trying to save one person.

Attorney for students

Brochure advises court defendants

Last year in conjunction with the League of Women Voters of Amherst, the Attorney for Students Office prepared a brochure for general use in the District Court. Since then, volunteers from the appropriate language departments of the University have translated it into Spanish, French, Portugese, Italian and a Polish translation is in progress. The text of the brochure follows. If you are ever in a court as a defendant it would serve you well to consider the material about pleading. It is important to remember that no matter what you plead (including "Nolo") if you are found guilty you do have a record of conviction.

Whether you received a summons or were arrested and released on bail or personal recognizance, you have been told to come to Court to answer to the charges.

You should report to the Probation Office by 8:45 a.m. Do not leave court until the clerk says you may go.

In the District Court room defendants sit in front of the railing (see diagram on back page). If you have any questions ask the Court Officer (in uniform, usually standing near the gate of the railing).

When the Judge enters, stand up until he is seated. He will announce that all defendants have the right to a lawyer and explain the proceedings.

When the clerk calls your name, stand up. He will read the charges against you. If he asks if you have a lawyer, the charge carries a possible jail sentence. Listen Carefully: If you do not hear or understand, ask him to explain. He will ask you how you plead to each charge.

PLEADING

1. NOT GUILTY: This may mean "I didn't do it." But, it does not matter whether you did whatever is charged or not! Pleading NOT GUILTY also means "I want time to talk to a lawyer or someone else." The Court might enter a not guilty plea for you, even if you want to plead something else, because the judge is concerned for your rights and knows that you need time. Most defendants are urged to plead not guilty at first. (If you are a minor under the law, this plea will be entered by the Judge for you, and you will be required to return with a lawyer or a parent.)

2. NOLO: The Latin phrase "nolo contendere" means "I don't want to argue about it, it's all right with me if you find me guilty and make me pay a fine." The court does not have to accept the plea of nolo. Unless you are represented by a lawyer, the Court won't let you plead Nolo if you are likely to risk a jail sentence or a high fine.

3. GUILTY: This means "I did it." It also means "No-one must prove that I did it." Except for minor traffic violations this plea should definitely not be made unless a lawyer has talked to you first. The Judge will not accept a plea of guilty when there is a possible jail sentence unless you are represented by a lawyer or have waived your right to a lawyer. You cannot waive your right to a lawyer until the judge has explained the possible jail sentence.

Unless you are very sure of what you are doing, plead not guilty and consult with an attorney of your choice or the Public Defender, if appointed, before making any other plea. You may always change your plea later.

If you plead not guilty ask the Clerk to set a date for your return to Court for trial when you can be sure to be there (usually two or three weeks ahead). Your lawyer can arrange to change the date later, if necessary.

YOUR RIGHT TO A LAWYER

You always have the right to hire your own lawyer. If you are penniless and without property, and if there is a possible jail sentence for the charge against you, the Court must appoint a lawyer (Public Defender) for you without cost. If you think you might be eligible, apply.

1. To apply for the public defender go back to the Probation Office and fill out the Public Defender application form, giving information about your financial situation.

2. Be sure to call the probation office before the day of your trial (584-8417) to see if the Public defender has been assigned to you. (The Court may decide that your application shows you can afford to hire your own lawyer.)

3. If you decide not to have a lawyer, you must sign a paper called a "waiver" (saying you give up your right to have a lawyer).

BAIL

If bail is set for you in Court, and you feel it is too high, you have the right to be taken to Superior Court for a bail reduction hearing. The forms to be filled out are at the Court and at the Hampshire County Jail - ask for them. Make sure your lawyer knows you are going to have a hearing.

BENCH CONFERENCES

The lawyers and police sometimes go up to the Judge's seat so that the Judge may talk with them freely about the case. No evidence is taken against you in a bench conference, but if there are circumstances which make the offense seem less serious, the Court prosecutor and the defendant's lawyer may make informal recommendations or suggestions for disposing of the charges promptly on a plea of guilty or nolo, or a continuance without a finding.

FINES

If you cannot pay all of a fine, tell the Clerk what you can pay now and arrange to pay the rest as soon as possible (usually in a week or two;. You won't go to jail because you have no money to pay the fine, but you will be required to pay it in the near future.

YOUR RIGHT TO APPEAL

In all criminal cases you have the right to a trial by jury in Superior Couut if you are not satisfied with the District Court decision. The Clerk will inform you of this right, and You must file you appeal immediately. If you have pleaded guilty you cannot appeal for a jury trial unless the Court allows you to change your plea. You can appeal for a lighter sentence in Superior Court, but you may run the risk of an increase in the sentence as well.

Our sources say...

(What would campus administrators say if they didn't fear for their jobs and reputations by speaking out? COLLEGIAN reporter Mark Vogler finds out, beginning today with a new weekly column printed here -- Editor)

By MARK VOGLER

University spokesmen maintain that the resignation of Thomas B. Campion as Vice Chancellor of Administrative Serives did not come in the wake of a Whitmore shake-up.

However, our sources say the resignation was not part of the normal administrative process-but was due to Mr. Campion's incompetence on three major fronts:

--the "low" manner in which he fired Joel Stoneham as director of Food Services.

--the $80-thousand-plus loss in dormitory inventories

--the Campus Center Fee blunder

As suggested last week in a Collegian news analysis, Food Service sources feel Stoneham's firing was uncalled for and that the former director was merely used as a scapegoat for the department's problems which Campion had direct oversight responsibility to.

Several sources close to the scene said that virtually no communication existed between Stoneham and his boss. If this is true should Stoneham have been to blame for a $500-thousand deficit cited in the department's budget late last summer?

Campion handled the firing of Stoneham as if "the guy were a flunky," said another source. It was this person's view that Stoneham was a "well respected man in the community and highly competent administrator who was unjustly maligned."

According to Stoneham, his boss never gave a "definitive" reason why his contract would not be renewed.

"He told me that he and the students had lost confidence in me, but never told me why," Stoneham told the Collegian.

Some sources in Whitmore have suggested that Mr. Campion had a bad habit of forgetting things. Perhaps this could be the reason why the administration has expressed a concern for reported losses in dorm inventories.

Robert W. Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, says that $2,000 worth of sewing machines have disappeared--this representing part of what Student Senate sources call "the $80-thousand plus loss in dorm inventories."

Sources in the computer center mention the possibility of embezzlement, but strictly deny Campion was involved.

Whether fraudulent or not, any loss of inventory coming under Campion's domain should be his responsibility. And if the books are not straight, he as Vice Chancellor and overseer should duly be held accountable.

Other sources surmise that Campion failed to address himself to an inefficient Campus Center which was costing the students thousands of dollars.

Campion failed to see the problem until the Arthur D. Little Consulting Firm of Cambridge predicted that C.C. fees for students (presently $52.50 a year) would skyrocket to $90 in order for the University to pay off the principal in July, they said.

The provision stated in the original loan financing the C.C. was that UMass would pay interest on the money until Fiscal '75. Thereafter, the University would pay back on the principal.

Unless the University can prompt the Legislature to delay payment, students may be stuck with the bill.

As one source said, "the people of Whitmore are so concerned with making this school a national leader, it's ironic they only succeeded in making UMass number one in the cost of fees."

Another source indicated that "tremendous friction" existed between Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Campion--this clearly spelling out the reason for the resignation.

However, Bromery has offered only compliments for his colleague "who performed with great dedication in his role."

Changes in Campion's office were needed to exercise better management control and to reduce the scope of the office of vice-chancellor for administrative services, Bromery said.

While rumors and inuendos were being dispelled over intercession about the eminent turmoil growing in the Chancellor's office, no confirmation was given that Mr. Campion would eventually step down.

One source in the Physical Plant tells us that a job was in the offing with a salary cut for the outgoing vice chancellor. Another said "Things are too messed up in Physical Plant without inviting Mr. Campion to make matters worse."

Campion was also reportedly offered a position in the Alumni office.

Meanwhile the UMass spokesmen told us all was rosey and Mr. Campion was "only on temporary leave of absence."

Why all the silence? What's the big secret? Why not be open about the whole thing?

It's unfortunate for Mr. Campion and the rest of the University that official spokesmen resort to concealing the facts, forcing the campus to gather its own information at cocktail parties or through the grape vine, our sources say.

A source in Whitmore says that Chancellor Bromery recently dispatched memos to various department heads urging a decrease in help from 20 to 30 per cent. The source told us that "many" employees--a large percentage being students--would be laid off in the coming weeks.

Olvers raps utility profits

WILLIAMSBURG (AP)-A state senator has warned that high profit margins allowed to utilities pose a serious threat to Massachusetts manufacturers.

Sen. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, made the remark at a protest meeting here Wednesday. About 60 residents attended the session, called to air grievances over high electric bills.

Olver told the group the state must have a Department of Public Utilities that represents the consumer.

"The present DPU cannot afford the expertise which the utilities can buy a will, passing on the high costs to the consumer," he said.

"We are in serious danger of losing all Massachusetts industry, which is now operating on a 3 or 4 per cent profit margin."

The balance must be made up through the fuel adjustment charge.

'UMass-South' a community with housing problems

(Outreach, a campus continuing education program, sends thirty-seven UMies to Washington each spring as interns in Congressional and executive branch offices. Former Collegian Editor-in-chief Steven G. Tripoli is one UMie who has gone to Washington as part of the program this semester.

In the first of several reports to be published irregularly through the semester, Mr. Tripoli describes the program and the views of some of the students in it. — editor)

By STEVEN TRIPOLI
MDC Correspondent

It's been nicknamed "UMass South" by some people, and some want to get a Massachusetts flag to hang outside or a sign proclaiming it the Embassy of the Massachusetts Nation.

It's across the street from a Russian trade mission, complete with a 24-hour guard.

The address is 1515 16th St. NW, Washington, D.C. and the building is the home of thirty-seven UMass students working in Washington offices this semester as part of the Outreach program.

The UMies are the only inhabitants of the building, an apartment house estimated to be about 40 years old by its owner. There have been a larger than average number of moving problems in the old building, especially problems with roaches, with whom a continuing war is being waged, and the overall dirty and rundown condition which the inhabitants found the building in when they arrived the first weekend in February.

The roaches have been a particularly annoying problem, and have ranged in the thirteen apartments from only a few a week to a barrage of fifty to one hundred a day. The students originally tried their own methods for coping with the problem, but the owner of the building has since moved in with a more powerful roach killer after complaints became frequent and loud. The University and Outreach Director Bill Burke have had contact with the owner on the problem also.

Other problems have been solved with some old fashioned elbow grease and a few repairs, and "UMass South" is now turning into a very cohesive community. Apartment doors are often open when the students are home, and the atmosphere is characterized by Kevin McConnell, formerly of 623 Webster at the University, as "Probably a lot tighter socially than a lot of dorms I've seen."

That statement appears to have a lot of validity. When the students were moving in a few weekends ago everyone pitched in to help everyone else. Those students who were a little squeamish about the insects inhabiting their kitchens and bedrooms (everyone is used to them now, and some claim to even be on a first name basis with a few roaches) could always call on someone to rout the creatures. Dawn Carmen, formerly of 200 Field House, told the Collegian that even though the building has its problems "The people have been very supportive of each other. I'm glad I'm living with people from UMass."

While people do spend time by themselves or with a few people with whom they've established close ties, the house does do quite a few things as a group. Last weekend 26 people got together and invaded the local Greek restaurant on Saturday night, and the same number turned out Sunday night to watch the Boston Celtics lose to the Capital Bullets 99-95 at the Capital Center just outside of the city in Maryland. Everyone agrees that the people have been an asset, and the group, at this writing together as a group only a little more than two weeks, is very close already.

Incidentally, the house is already planning a trip to New York City should the UMass basketball team make it to the NIT. So if you see a banner there proclaiming the presence of UMass South, don't wonder. It's your sisters and brothers from the nation's capital.

Thirty-seven UMass students live in this stately Washington, D.C. mansion as part of the university-run Outreach program. The structure is plagued by roaches and is generally run down, a student correspondent says.

FBI agent testifies on AIM takeover threat

By JOHN LUNDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A second FBI agent who admitted he spied on the American Indian Movement (AIM) in western South Dakota last year was called to testify Thursday about alleged threats by the militant group to move onto the Pine Ridge reservation by force.

Charles Stevenson, who said he has been with the FBI three years, appeared at the trial of two AIM leaders, Dennis Banks and Russell Means, charged in the 71-day takeover of Wounded Knee last year.

Stevenson followed Stanley Keel, 32, to the witness stand. Keel had identified himself as being seven-16th Chickasaw Indian with nine years FBI service.

Stevenson told the U.S. District Court Jury how he was ordered to Rapid City a year ago Thursday and, with Keel, posed as AIM sympathizers from Oklahoma. Stevenson said he used the name Charlie Light Foot, while Keel went as Richard Roundtree.

Stevenson said he wore blue denims, an old jacket and worktype shoes when he and Keel did surveillance at the Mother Butler Center, a Roman Catholic hall AIM was using in Rapid City.

When he told AIM leader Vernon Ballecourt he had been released recently from the military service and had served in Vietnam, the witness quoted Bellecourt as replying: "Well, you fought one war, now you've got one more war to fight for your people."

He also quoted Bellecourt as saying: "We've got a real thing coming off here tomorrow," adding that 50 to 60 AIM members were planning to go to the reservation to observe impeachment proceedings against Oglala Sioux President Richard Wilson.

Political spying charges disputed

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A Navy admiral accused by a young subordinate of fostering military spying inside the White House said yesterday the allegations represented "the grossest and most irresponsible distortion of fact."

Adm. Robert O. Welander testified that his attempts to close off leaks of highly classified material to the press in 1971 were somehow twisted into accusations that he spied for the military Joint Chiefs of Staff.

No less a White House figure than John D. Ehrlichman, formerly President Nixon's domestic affairs adviser, believed he was guilty of "political spying," the admiral testified in a closed-door session of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

In prepared testimony made public by the committee, Welander said Ehrlichman wound up an investigation by the White House plumbers unit by calling the admiral to his White House office and presenting him with "a prepared statement on White House stationery for my signature."

"This statement would have had me admit to the wildest possible totally false charges of 'political spying,' " he said.

When he refused to sign the statement, Welander said, Ehrlichman interrogated him at length about the allegations of Yeoman Charles E. Radford. The Yeoman has testified Welander praised him for his work in secretly collecting files from Henry A. Kissinger.

Welander indicated he declined to answer some questions because of the high security classification of the answers.

"Ehrlichman's questions were all either directly attributed to statements made by Yeoman Radford or based on knowledge that only he could have had of certain aspects of my duties," Welander said.

Those allegations, Welander said, "had apparently served to shift the focus of the investigation away from the original matter of the columnist Jack Anderson leaks and on to my own duties. It had and retains the appearance of a very clever retribution against the one who had initiated the investigation of the leaks."

Radford, 30, a 10-year Navy veteran with duty in various sensitive jobs, has testified Welander and his predecessor, Rear Adm. Rembrandt C. Robinson, carefully encouraged the Yeoman to procure anything of interest to the nation's top military leaders.

Adm. Thomas H. Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Welander insist there was no need for military spying because of the free flow of information between moorer and Kissinger, Nixon's former chief national security adviser and now the secretary of State.

Radford testified earlier that he gathered the highly sensitive documents on three trips to Indochina with White House aide Gen. Alexander Haig and a fourth with Kissinger part way on the diplomat's first trip to mainland China.

A prototype, but never to be repeated

Last fall, The Boston Globe's architecture critic Robert Campbell travelled to UMass and reviewed the multi-million dollar fine arts center. The complex, which is yet to open, is pictured here by Collegian photographer Woei Chin.

By ROBERT CAMPBELL
c. 1973, The Boston Globe

Of all today's architects, the one who always seems to come up with the biggest, boldest, most original ideas is Kevin Roche, the designer of the new Fine Arts Center soon to be opened at the University of Massachusetts campus at Amherst.

Roche got his start under the late Eero Saarinen and shares with that master the unsettling habit of trying to make every building a complete new departure. In the manner of an Oscar Wilde epigram, he often does this by taking a conventional idea and turning it upside down or inside out — literally.

For example, at one new office tower in Manhattan, Roche floats the building 120 feet in the air on stilts; at the Oakland Art Museum, on the other hand, he buries it underground. At the Ford Foundation headquarters in New York, the standard tower-in-a-plaza is turned inside out: the building wraps around the plaza. At the Knights of Columbus building in New Haven, the building itself is inside out: the service core, normally at an office building's center, is split four ways and pushed out to the corners.

It's an approach that puts a lot of emphasis on coming up with that vital new twist, then stating it as boldly, as uncompromisingly, as possible. Every building becomes a prototype — but a prototype, paradoxically, that is destined never to be repeated.

At UMass Fine Arts Center the concept is as bold as ever. A boldly sculptured bridge of art studios, 650 feet long, runs the length of the site one story up in the air. Lining it on one side, like barges moored at a pier, is a varied mix of auditoriums, offices, theaters and workshops.

The whole thing is then sited in such a way that the bridge of studios becomes a kind of gateway to the campus: you pass beneath it, walk between two of the auditoriums, and emerge on the edge of the pond that forms the center of the campus.

Urbanistically, it's a brilliant concept. The straight line of the bridge gives a firm edge to the central campus and ties together the varied sizes and shapes of the auditoriums and theaters, which in turn reflect the variety and scale of the older buildings nearby.

Yet one can't be completely enthusiastic. The building suffers from a quality that if often pointed out in Roche's work. Entirely made of concrete, which is hand rubbed to make it as uniform as possible, the building is completely lacking in detail or texture.

A building like this raises the whole puzzling question of how a human being, looking at a building, senses a relationship to it, understands it as something more than an inert mass of material. It helps of you can see where you can go in, or where, if you were inside, you could be looking out; if you can perceive, from the shape and detail of the exterior, what some of the activities are that take place inside; if, as you move toward the building, you can see a gradual unfolding of smaller and smaller details that step the building down to you in scale — from the whole building, to the room, to the window, the brick, the texture of the brick. All these things help you to understand the building as a container of human activity, as something different from outdoor sculpture.

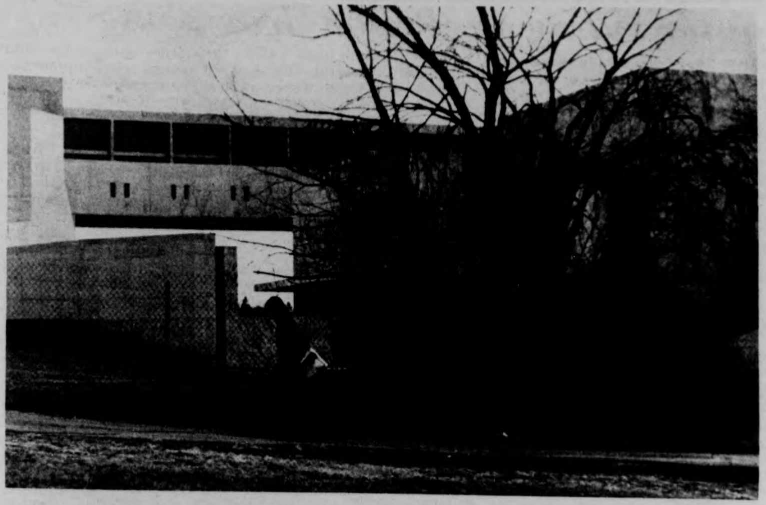
Enough of these qualities are missing in the UMass Fine Arts Center to leave it with a curiously blank quality. It it isn't too anthropomorphic to say it, you get the feeling that when you look at the building, it isn't looking back. It's faceless.

But even with this caveat, there remain many pleasures and lessons to be experienced in this complex. Great attention has been paid to realizing the potential of every interior space. The large auditorium, with balconies sweeping forward instead of back, is a wonderful space; so are the art studios.

Compared to the rest of UMass Amherst, a jumble of unrelated personal monuments that looks more like a world fairgrounds than a campus, Roche's work is in a class by itself.

Yet one comes away wishing he could relax his search for singularity enough to fill in some of those small but vital missing links that would make a more human architecture.

Reprinted with permission from Boston Globe.



A pre-formed concrete walkway connects two wings of the center and provides gallery space for exhibitions above the ground level.

Computer ruling

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts House asked the Supreme Judicial Court Thursday to rule on the constitutionality of legislation to create a computer system for executive, legislative and judicial branches of government.

The questions posed with the court had been raised in the message from Gov. Francis W. Sargent recommending the bill. The governor said if these are "satisfactorily answered, this legislation should be of top priority."

The court was asked if the enactment of the proposal would violate either the home rule amendment to the constitution or the separation-of-powers guarantee.

Inmates captured

SOUTH WINDHAM, Maine (AP) - All eleven Men's Correctional Center inmates who escaped Wednesday night through an unlocked gymnasium door were back in the prison here by Thursday afternoon, officials said.

Supt. Edward Hansen said four were picked up in Gorham, about five miles from the minimum security facility, at 2:30 p.m. Thursday.

The other seven were apprehended in Portland and Westbrook the night before, hours after escaping during an evening recreational period and scaling a 12-foot chain link fence topped by barbed wire.

Hansen said an investigation is underway to determine how the gym door came to be open. Officials said it could have been left open inadvertantly during renovations underway in the gym.

Mayoral challenge

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Providence Public Safety Commissioner Francis Brown formally announced today that he will challenge Mayor Joseph A. Doorley Jr. in the Democratic mayoral primary this fall.

"I am a candidate, and have so informed the mayor; Lawrence P. McGarry, Democratic city chairman; and the entire membership of the Democratic city committee," Brown said.

The 42-year-old former probate judge said he intends to remain in office until mid-March at the latest, unless Doorley calls for his resignation or fires him sooner. Brown was appointed to the $20,000-a-year post by Doorley 10 months ago.

"A new face, new ideas and new approaches to problems" are needed in Providence, Brown said, referring to Doorley's 10-years as mayor.

Four of the city's 13 ward committees already have given Brown their individual endorsements.

His announcement came at a Biltmore Hotel news conference.

Prison drug abuse

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Drug abuse among inmates at several New England prisons exists largely as a result of poor medical record keeping and follow-up, according to study by a Harvard professor. In her study of the use of behavior modifying drugs in the prisons, Dr. Phyllis Cath of the Massachusetts Mental Health Center at Harvard found "drugs are being abused by neglect almost, not by intention."

The prisons studied were maximum security facilities in Windsor, Vt.; Walpole and Norfolk, Mass.; Cranston, R.I., Somers, Conn., and Thomaston, Maine.

Dr. Cath said it wasn't that drugs were being dispensed improperly by prison staff, but that "nobody knew if the prisoners were actually taking the drugs.

"In some cases prisoners were not dealing honestly with the doctors," she said. "They were 'palming' the drugs or selling them or giving them to a buddy so he could get high."

Police need help

BOSTON (AP) - State police issued an appeal Thursday for possible witnesses to a November 1973 accident which caused some $250,000 damage to a turnpike bridge over Massachusetts 128 in Weston.

All investigative leads have been exhausted, according to a spokesman for the state police. The accident involved a piece of heavy construction equipment or a crane which hit the bridge about 7 a.m. last Nov. 19.

Witnesses to the accident are asked to contact the Framingham state police barracks.

Mushy tomatoes

BOSTON (AP) - Tired of those supermarket tomatoes that are hard and yellow on the outside, and discolored and mushy on the inside.

Well, a professor at Northeastern University says this is because of presently used shipping and storage techniques and he says he's invented a way to keep this from happening.

Dr. A. Karim Khudairi, a biology professor, says he has produced the perfect tomato-red and firm when ripe-that can be stored for more than two weeks and still come out perfectly.

Using two natural hormones that can inhibit or hasten ripening, Khudairi says his method can give marketers much more control over the ripening process.

Khudairi's technique involves dipping, spraying or injecting green tomatoes with gibberellin, a hormone that slows ripening, and shipping them to faraway markets. During storage, he says, they would not have to be refrigerated, just kept cool.

Energy head leaving

BOSTON (AP) — The New England head of the Federal Energy Office said Thursday that he would go back to his old job in the Labor Department because the energy position was temporary.

Lawrence Rogers said that "in the next week or so" he would return to his former job as assistant regional director of the Manpower Administration in Boston, which he had left to be on loan to the new energy office.

Rogers, reached in Dallas where he was attending a labor conference, said he was upset at published reports that he was leaving because of a disagreement with federal energy chief William Simon.

"That's irresponsible. It's incredible. People at the national level may have been very accessable and responsive," Rogers said.

He chose this time to leave the energy office, he said, because "we're winding down for the month of February. The office is in pretty good shape."

Bill Holmburg, the energy office director of regional affairs in Washington, said Rogers has made no secret of his desire to get back to his old job.

"Rogers is a highly honored employe of the FEO, and we have been struggling mightily to get him to stay on," Holmburg said.

Hugh Saussy, Jr., Rogers' deputy, will take over as acting regional administrator, his office said. Saussy, who originally was with the Office of Economic Opportunity, is one of the few staffers in Boston to become a permanent employe of the energy office.

Transexual loses job

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A state appeals court has upheld the dismissal of an elementary school teacher who underwent a sex change.

The Appellate Division of Superior Court ruled on Wednesday that Bernards Township school officials were within their rights in firing Mrs. Paula M. Grossman on grounds her presence in the classroom would cause emotional disturbance to pupils.

The court also said its ruling, upholding a decision by the state Board of Education, would not bar Mrs. Grossman from seeking a teaching position elsewhere, presumably where pupils would not be aware of her sex change.

Mrs. Grossman, 54, was dismissed in 1971 after undergoing a sex change operation. Before the surgery, she had been teaching as Paul Monroe Grossman, was married and had three children. She has continued to live with her family.

Man waits for heart

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Canadian broadcaster Bruce Marsh is waiting for a different kind of "cue" these days, a phone call to tell him his new heart is ready.

Stanford Medical Center cardiologists have told the 48-year-old veteran of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. he may have only a few weeks of life left unless his own heart, ravaged by three attacks, is replaced.

His fingernails are a bit bluish from poor circulation and his breath is wheezy from an accumulation of fluids in his lungs, but his complexion is ruddy and he's quick to deal out a gag.

Through three months of waiting Marsh has managed, despite some periods of depression, to hang onto his humor and cheerful outlook.

Marsh said he is not afraid to die, but he said he has no intention of departing this life without a struggle.

"Don't let me kid around with you," he said. "Don't go away with the impression that I don't have some bad days — I'm being kept sitting in the waiting room and I thought I had an appointment, and no one's come to get me."

President responsible for overall conduct of executive branch

"He must take care that the executive is so organized and operated that this duty is performed," it says.

The brief also says the duty of a president to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution includes the duty not to abuse his powers or transgress their limits - not to violate the rights of citizens, such as those guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, and not to act in derogation of powers vested elsewhere by the Constitution."

Albert E. Jenner Jr., chief minority counsel for the committee, said the standard for impeachment set by the memorandum was "very, very high."

"It must be conduct so grave that it amounts to a subversion of the system of government and the Constitution itself," he said. "It comes very close to criminality."

With the memorandum to guide it, Rodino said the committee was now ready to seek evidence from the White House. A request listing specific tapes, documents and logs is being prepared, he said, and will be sent to the White House no later than early next week.

If the request is not honored, Rodino said, the committee will turn quickly to the use of its subpoena power. But it appeared that could lead to a partisan split in the committee.

Hutchinson, who has joint subpoena powers with Rodino, said he would not join in any request for White House material that did not relate to what he regarded as an impeachable offense.

In a related development, Democrat Richard F. VanderVeen said Congress should view his victory in the Michigan congressional election as a sign for action on Nixon's possible impeachment.

Nixon requests stiffer drug penalties

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress Thursday for new minimum jail sentences for narcotics traffickers.

"More than a quarter of those who are convicted of narcotics trafficking do not serve a single day behind bars," Nixon said. He asked Congress in a written message to close that and other "loopholes in the criminal justice system."

The minimum jail sentence of three years for a first offender was, however, less than Nixon requested last year in his crime message.

John Bartels, administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, said this softening reflects changes in the pattern of drug traffic, including less involvement by organized crime than a year ago.

Nixon also asked for a three year minimum sentence for repeat offenders in non-narcotics drug trafficking, which includes dealing in amphetamines, barbiturates and marijuana. And he requested that judges be empowered to deny bail in certain drug trafficking cases.

Bartels told a White House news briefing that major French drug groups "have been at least temporarily destroyed," and that less heroin is now coming into the country especially along the East Coast.

But a higher proportion of drugs is now coming from South America and Mexico, he said, often carried in quantities of two to five pounds by aliens who are recruited for a trip but do not have criminal backgrounds.

Bartels said the minimum sentences were sought "to provide certainty of some punishment."

Nixon asked for these specific penalties:

Narcotics trafficking, first offense: three to 15 years and up to $50,000 fine with no possibility of suspended sentence or probation. Present penalty is up to 15 years and $25,000 with suspended sentence and probation possible.

Narcotics trafficking, second offense: 10 to 30 years and up to $100,000 fine with no possibility of suspended sentence or probation.

Sonny and Cher and other TV news

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The big question is whether CBS' top-rated "Sonny and Cher Comedy Hour" will survive the marital split of its two stars this week.

Sonny Bono, 37, said through a spokesman he's seeking a legal separation from Cher,27, the singing partner he married in October 1964. He cited irreconciable differences as the reason.

According to CBS-TV's Programming chief, Fred Silverman, the couple only has one more show to tape for the current season. But he said he didn't know yet if it'll be back next fall.

He added that a decision will have to be made by the end of March because "we're going to set our programming schedule" for the 1974-75 season in the week beginning March 18.

"The Sonny and Cher" show, now in its third season, first aired in August 1971 as a summer replacement series on CBS-TV.

Paul Duke, an NBC News correspondent in Washington for 10 years before taking the plunge into public TV three weeks ago, says the transition is going well, generally speaking.

The biggest problem "is getting used to doing things at a different pace and on a longer-range basis," said Duke, 47, now a correspondent for the National Public Affairs Center for Television.

"By that, I mean I've been an old-fashioned journalist who's been used to the daily deadline all his life," said Duke, one of the few top broadcast newsmen with both a wire service and newspaper background.

His current deadlines are for three weekly half-hour NPACT shows-"Washington Week in Review," "Washington Straight Talk" and "Washington Connection."

An attempt to explain and elaborate on the phenomena of the 16-year-old Maharaj Ji-he's known in some circles as "The Perfect Master"-is coming up Sunday on public TV.

The show, called "Lord of the Universe," centers on the three-day happening the guru held last November at the Houston Astrodome. It's videotape verite from San Francisco's Top Value Television crew.

Alas, it's not their best effort, although I must admit I saw the show.

Third World women plan active week

Third World Women have an active week planned.

Dr. McLaughlin, a poet, and Mente Lema, an Ethiopian student, will speak in Thompson 104 from 8 - 11 p.m. Monday. Themes included are present day myths that linger on in American Society and the transition from matriarchy to patriarchy. Three films will also be shown.

The Black Woman in Slave Society will be the theme for Pearl Bowser's speech. From Chamba Productions in New York City, Bowser will discuss the stereotype of the Black woman as portrayed on the screen. The speech will begin about 8 p.m.

Bowser will also conduct a workshop that afternoon from 1 to 3 in room 315 of the New Africa House. She will incorporate films and slides.

The following day, Ms. Bowser will conduct another workshop, this time in room 310 of the New Africa House. She will speak at 8 p.m. in Thompson 104 of Revolutionary Images of the African Woman.

Johnetta Cole will speak Thursday in Thompson 104 at 8 p.m., on The Woman in Cuba, Vietnam, and the United States. Three films will also be shown.

The week will be concluded Friday with a film titled My Country Occupied, in Thompson 104.

There will be no admission charge for any of the events. Concessions, however, will be served with the proceeds going towards the New World Day School.

Neglected women writers

Arlyn Diamond and Margot Culley of the University English Department will present a joint lecture Sunday at 8 p.m., titled "Unknown Voices, Neglected Women Writers," as part of the spring semester Project Ten speakers series, "The World of Learning." Both women have been active in the study of American literature from a feminist perspective and seek to suggest in their Sunday lecture an insight into the state of women's studies and literary criticism today.

Arlyn Diamond recently joined with her colleague Lee Edwards, also of the English department and editor of the special issue of the Massachusetts Review, "Woman: An Issue," in editing the recent collection of American fiction written by "neglected women writers," American Voices, American Women.

In that work, an anthology of fiction exploring life on the prairie, in cities, and in New England villages, Diamond and Edwards wrote that "More and more, students of American literature are coming to see its fiction as centered on love and death. They are right, but their depositions state only half the case. The women American men were rushing to the sea and the woods to escape... also had fantasies of escaping, if necessary, over the dead bodies of the men who thought their women really preferred tatting and waiting. A cry for help echoes in all these works."

Mike Best from the Economics Department, will speak March 10 at 8 p.m. on "Galbraith and Socialism: The Unconventional Wisdom." He will use the recent publication by John Kenneth Galbraith, the Harvard economist and former U.S. Ambassador under President Kennedy to India, Economics and the Public Purpose, which Best is currently reviewing for the American Quarterly, The Partisan Review.

All events in the series meet in the Pierpont Main Lounge, and the public is invited.

Sex killer nabbed

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A convicted sex killer from Rhode Island was captured here late Wednesday during an armed robbery, police said today.

He was identified as Thomas Richard Knott, 28, taken into custody when police broke up a robbery at a lingerie shop in the central business district. He was charged with robbery in that case and also was charged with the robbery of a tie shop the day before.

Police said Knott, who was serving a life term in the sex slaying of a Pawtucket, R.I., woman, escaped from the Cranston Institute in Rhode Island on Feb. 6 with two other prisoners. The other two have been captured.

Millionaire milkman determined not to be unhappy

WINCHESTER, Mass. (AP) — How many millionaires who drive a milk truck do you know?

There's a millionaire like that in this Boston suburb. He's one of the instant variety who won his million in the Massachusetts state lottery. And he's determined not to be unhappy just because he's rich.

"We were very happy before all this happened to us," said Robert Taylor, 41, a father of three. "And we're not going to let a lot of money spoil that for any of us."

Taylor, a ruddy-faced man, drives a milk truck for less than $10,000 a year. That's what he did before he won the lottery one year ago and started receiving $50,000 annual checks. He can't see any reason to change his lifestyle.

"After 19 years on the job, I like it," he said.

Of course, there have been purchases. The biggest was construction of a $35,000 house on a lot they bought on Cape Cod a few years ago. And there's a new color television set in their home here.

But that's about all. "I didn't even buy myself any new jigsaw puzzles, said Taylor, a puzzle fan.

Now that he has the summer home, Taylor says he plans to stick to his philosophy: "Nobody should spend a lot of money just because he has it."

"You can say that again," his wife Sue chimed in.

Student group offers tours and jobs

English pubs and inns, and hotels and restaurants in Wales and Scotland are offering summer jobs to American college students.

Paying summer jobs are also available in lakeside resorts and city hotels and restaurants in Austria, Switzerland and France.

Irish homes are open to American college girls who would like to live and work for their keep in traditional Ireland with a traditional Irish family, according to the Student Overseas Services (SOS).

Any student may apply, and the jobs are given on a first come, first served basis. Jobs, working papers, room and board arrangements, and other necessary paperwork are processed in advance on a non-profit basis by the Student Overseas Service-a student run organization which has specialized in student help and student work projects for the past 16 years. Although standard wages are paid, SOS says the free room and board is the biggest advantage for students.

Many students are signing up to combine a summer job in Europe with a bicycle tour of Europe. This means students will be taking to the roads to bicycle around Europe before or after working at a paying job in Europe to earn back most of their trip costs. SOS has organized a number of different bicycle trips. One tour is through the Champagne country of France, ending up in Paris with its intoxicating sights, history and excitement.

Interested students may obtain application forms, job listings and descriptions, and the SOS Handbook on earning your way in Europe by sending their name, address, name of educational institution, and $1 (for postage, printing, handling and addressing only) to either SOS-Student Overseas Services, Box 5173, Santa Barbara, Calif. 93108, or to S.O.S., 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg, Europe.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.
It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

STOP DRIVING DRUNK.
STOP KILLING EACH OTHER.

Send us a letter . . . BUT make sure it's:

1) typed, double-spaced, 60 spaces,

2) signed,

3) includes address and phone,

4) less than two pages.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Dear Aggie...

(Do you have social, academic or personal problems? Tell them to Aggie, The Collegian's exclusive gossip and advice columnist.

Send letters to: Dear Aggie, The Collegian, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002. Or you can drop them off at the Collegian office, on the second floor of the Student Union building.)

By ROBERTA SIEGAL
MDC Staff

Dear Umies,

This is my letter to all of you paranoid-schizophrenic, psychopathic, dirty-dealing, all around wierdos representing the UMass academic community. (Whew!) In any case, I'm here to answer everything-you-always-wanted-to-know-about-UMass-existence-but-were-afraid-to-ask. Serious or insane, I've got the answers if you've got the questions.

So, my first word of advice to you is — Save those wrappers and keep those cards and letters coming! Just send them to: Dear Aggie, c-o Collegian Office, UMass., Amherst or just drop them in the box at the office.

The following letters you are about to read are true — only the facts have been changed to protect truth, justice, and the American way. So here goes!

Dear Aggie,

I'm a second semester sophomore; not beautiful, but O.K. as far as looks go. I was pretty popular in high school. Everyone knew me probably because I was a cheerleader. But since I've been at UMass., I just can't meet any guys and that's what I came here for! The whole reason I'm here is to find a husband, but there's no major in it.

Academically Unfulfilled

Dear Ac,

There's a great program on campus, which lets the student create his-her own academic program. And you're just in time to get into it. It's called BDIC, but for you it would be DICB — Degree of Individual Concentration for Bachelors (Heh! Heh! Just thought I'd throw that in!) Why don't you try it and tell me how it goes?

Dear Aggie,

I've been going out with this girl now for a whole week and she still won't go to bed with me. How can I convince her of my sincerity?

Sincerely Frustrated

Dear Sin,

Take two aspirin, a cold shower every day for another week and try again. If it still doesn't work, get a waterbed, fill it with wine, lie on it naked with the door open when she's due to arrive. If you still have the same problem, drop her — she's not worth it and give me a call.

His graduate work was completed at Ohio University where he received his M.F.A. degree in 1969. Before accepting his position at Butterfield House, Tom taught at the University of Maine, the Print Club of Philadelphia, and Philadelphia Museum of Art.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo arouses envy in many; this is a sign that sparkles with life-giving energy and also flashes bright right into the eyes. Leo provides warmth and annoyance. Leo is affectionate and overbearing. Leo is not easy to take but harder to leave alone. Leo is the sun and the Fifth House and creativity and chance-taking and the gamble of dramatic situation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Face issues you previously ignored. Get behind the scenes. Maintain independent stance. Closed door meeting could be on agenda. Visit one confined to home or hospital. Replace immaturity with enlightenment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent is on friends, desires and fulfillment. You are able to time moves. Professional efforts pay dividends. You receive meaningful compliment. Aquarian could play significant role. Social activity accelerates.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasize goal. Deal directly with one in authority — get to heart of matters. You will be given green light to obtain needed material. Sagittarian could play key role. Perceive potential. Be optimistic about future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with more communication, writing, ability to evaluate and to better know yourself. Do some remodeling. Check details. Get ready to rebuild. Let the past go — the future awaits. Welcome it!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Remember resolutions concerning charm, understanding in connection with those closest to you. Be free with compliments and gracious in accepting them. Gemini, Virgo individuals could be in picture. Relationship intensifies. Don't play childish games where emotions are concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lie low; play waiting game. Permit mate, partner to lead the way. You do best now by gathering thoughts, information — by filing facts for future use. Emphasis is on joint effort, cooperation, building goodwill.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stick to what you do best — perform vital services. If this you do, you will profit. Keep health resolutions. Keep medical, dental appointments. Avoid self-deception. See situations, individuals as they are, not merely in romantic haze.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov 21): Creative urge is highlighted. Your own style is expressed. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Be authoritative. Accept responsibility. Make commitment. Study Leo message. People will take you at your word — and they will remember.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Conclusions are reached; you finish projects. Relationsship is tested — it lasts or breaks apart. You will keep what is worthwhile. As for anything else, let it go. This may not be easy, but is necessary for your emotional and financial well-being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New Moon position emphasizes brothers, sisters, short trips, ideas. Key is to permit concepts to develop — don't be panicked into rushing, pushing, chiding and alienating those who care the most for you. Leo, Aquarius individuals may be in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent is on payment and collection. Money is spotlighted, along with personal possessions. Protect assets. Build on solid base. Take nothing for granted. Get promises, agreements in writing. Value your time and work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New Moon in your sign highlights independence, new starts, fresh contacts, creative expression. Be conspicuous. Wear bright colors. Sagittarius, Gemini persons are in picture. Make personal appearance. State case directly, frankly. Don't pull punches.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you finish major project this year and August could be your most important month. You were on your own early; your spirit is revolutionary. You are an innovator, willing to tear down in order to rebuild. Scorpio individuals play significant roles in your life. You were speareted physically or psychologically from parents while a youngster.

Female hotshot shoots for varsity letter

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Emily Rush, a straight-shooter, might become the second girl to win a varsity letter at the University of Alabama.

She is a member of the school's rifle team, and a good one.

"I'm not a women's libber at all," she says. "People are always teasing me about it since I'm the only girl shooter on our team. But I like all the courtesies a girl should get."

Still, she performs in a role generally reserved for men.

She ranks second in accuracy among the eight shooters on the team, and has been the top shooter in 4 of the 11 matches Alabama has won this year.

"My teammates have all been very helpful to me and they are really encouraging," she says.

"The first time I really shot a decent score, they got all excited and started running around and yelling. That made me feel great."

"She has come up with some incredible scores this year," Capt. Gene New, her coach, says. "The only shooter we have that has beat her is Ralph Cabiniss, a senior, averaging 267 points a match, and he's been shooting for six years."

Miss Ruch, a sophomore from Memphis, Tenn., is only in her second year of competition.

"I had enjoyed shooting at a summer camp, so I just had to give it a go last year," she recalls. "But I hadn't shot all the positions and my scores weren't that good.

Sabres' Horton dies in car crash

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — "He's in his 40s but he's got the body of a 20-year-old," said the doctor who gave Tim Horton his physical examination last year.

Horton, 44, underwent the test to determine whether he could once again take his defensive post for the Buffalo Sabres of the National Hockey League this season.

Horton passed the exam easily and as late as Wednesday night took the ice, against his former team, the Toronto Maple Leafs.

He was killed early yesterday when his sports car crashed out of control and overturned at St. Catharines, Ont.

Constable Michael Gula of the Ontairo Provincial Police said he was trying to stop Horton for speeding. Gula said he clocked Horton traveling at more than 100 miles an hour.

Horton, the second oldest player in the NHL, had been given permission by Coach Joe Crozier to drive to Buffalo following a visit with his family in a Toronto suburb. The team came here by bus following its 4-2 loss against the Maple Leafs.

Crozier was summoned to St. Catharines to identify Horton's body and was unavailable for comment.

Seymour H. Knox III, sabres' president, said "The loss of Tim Horton to the Sabres is nothing in comparison to the loss of Tim Horton to his family and friends as he was only greater in one thing than being a hockey player and that was being a fine human being."

Punch Imlach, Buffalo's general manager and for whom Horton played when Imlach coached the Leafs, noted that he had been associated with Horton on many Stanley Cup championship teams.

"He was the backbone of our team in Buffalo," Imlach said. "He was not only an all-star defenseman, but was a great person, too. His death is a great loss to hockey, and a greater loss to his family."

Horton was hit in the face by a puck in Wednesday night's game and played only briefly in the final period.

Dick Johnson, Buffalo Evening News hockey writer, said Horton was quiet in the locker room following the game. He was given an injection to numb the pain, but played down the injury.

"It's no worse than a hangover," Johnson quoted Horton as telling him.

The Sabres met the Atlanta Flames in Memorial Auditorium last night.

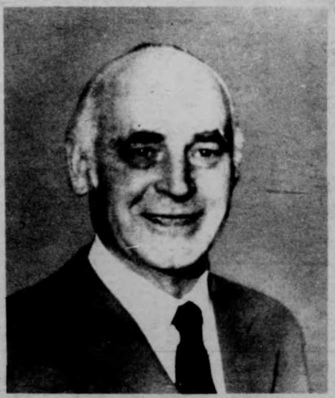
Sabres' public relations director Paul Wieland said the team would wear black armbands and that a moment of silence would be observed before the game begins.

A matter of life or death

OAKLAND (AP) — Baseball, hockey, basketball — they aren't games to the volatile, on-the-move Charles O. Finley. They're a matter of life or death.

And that's just why Finley, who turns 56 Friday, is getting rid of his vast sports holdings.

A near-fatal heart attack last August and assorted other ailments make the Chicago insurance executive literally fear for his life.



"I want to live, more than anything else in the world," he said this week. "That is my No. 1 goal, and I have to see my doctors for a complete checkup as soon as I return to Chicago."

Controversial doesn't come close to describing Finley, one of the most colorful men in the history of sports.

-The Athletics' mascot, Charley O. the mule, has walked through hotel lobbies and attended indoor victory celebrations.

-Finley chastised baseball's stagnation in 1971 and advocated a change to three balls for a walk.

-He tried to get baseball to adopt orange baseballs and bases.

-He never went a season without firing his manager until Dick Williams came along and directed Oakland to two consecutive World Series titles.

-He helped design the Athletics' garish yellow-and-green uniforms.

-He spent more than $7 million, including the cost of the franchise, to bring Oakland its first world championship. Yet he fought bitterly about giving pitcher Vida Blue a raise at contract time.

-He "fired" infielder Mike Andrews after two World Series errors.

-He staged all sorts of promotional gimmicks to hypo fan interest, including special days where persons wearing hot pants got in free, bald persons got in free, etc...

Through this incredibly active baseball life, Finley managed to immerse himself in two other sports ventures, the California Golden Seals of the National Hockey League and the Memphis Tams of the American Basketball Association.

Now the Finley trend toward bigness is reversing itself.

Last week he sold the Seals back to the NHL. "I expect to have the Tams sold before the first of March," he added.

"It will break my heart if I have to get out of baseball, but if I have to get out to live, I will."

Still, Finley maintains a fast pace, keeping close personal track of details other owners might leave to attorneys.

Finley said his heart attack is the only reason he's leaving his sports enterprises behind.

Shirley, his wife of 32 years and mother of their seven children, came up with the slogan, "One more in '74," and Charlie admits that would be the ultimate. He reportedly has turned down lucrative offers to sell the club.

He just wants to hold on for one more year. Then, perhaps, Charles O. Finley, the Don Quixote de la Mancha of baseball, will get down off his mule and relax.

Hockey seeds for Div. One postponed

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) - The selection committee for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Division I hockey playoffs has postponed naming the top four seeded teams.

Committee chairman Andy Morradian, New Hampshire athletic director, said Thursday action was postponed until Monday because six teams still are running for the fourth berths and first round home ice advantage.

He identified the six as Boston University, Cornell, Harvard, New Hampshire, Providence and St. Lawrence.

The top four-seeded teams will be host to the next four in quarterfinal playoffs March 5. The semifinals and finals will be played at Boston Garden March 8-9.

Mooradian said only three teams - Boston College, Colgate, and Yale — have been eliminated from the playoffs. Still in contention for the field of eight are Dartmouth, Clarkson, Penn, RPI, Princeton, Northeastern and Brown.

Marichal to report late

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Juan Marichal, a veteran right-handed pitcher purchased from the San Francisco Giants in December, was given permission Thursday to report late to the Boston Red Sox training camp.

"General Manager Dick O'Connell has given Marichal permission to report March 1, and it's okay," said Darrell Johnson, the Red Sox' new manager. "Juan has been pitching all winter and I'm told he's in great shape."

B. Robbie signs with O's

BALTIMORE (AP) — Brooks Robinson signed his 20th contract with the Baltimore Orioles Thursday and said he's eagerly awaiting the start of spring training.

"It's tougher pushing yourself during the winter, doing things you didn't have to do 10 years ago," Robinson, now 36, said in a telephone interview, "but mentally I feel like I'm just starting out. I feel that's a big factor, because a lot of guys quit after burning themselves out."

The star third baseman received an estimated $105,00 last season, and is believed to have agreed to a slight raise after two contract talks with General Manager J. Frank Cashen.

"I hope I can hit for more distance this season," Robinson said. "I've averaged about 18 home runs a year since 1960, but I hit only nine last season and eight the year before that."

A winner of 14 consecutive Gold Glove awards as the best fielding third baseman in the American League, Robinson was named the league's Most Valuable Player in 1964, and won similar awards in the 1966 All-Star game and the 1970 World Series.

Wottle aims for indoor's 1st sub-4 mile in 1974

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Dave Wottle will try to become the first runner to post a sub-four-minute mile in the 1974 indoor season in the U.S. Track and Field Federation's Midwest Championships Friday and Saturday at Ohio State.

Wottle, the famed Bowling Green State University runner who won the 1972 Olympic 800 meters, is scheduled for his mile test Saturday.

Seaver signs for record $$

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Tom Seaver, twice the National League's Cy Young Award winner, became the highest paid pitcher in baseball history Thursday, signing with the New York Mets for an estimated $172,500.

Seaver said he telephoned General Manager Bob Scheffing Thursday morning after failing to reach an agreement Wednesday. "I gave Bob another figure," Seaver said.

"The figure he gave me was agreeable," Scheffing reported. "No pitcher in baseball is making as much money."

Seaver reportedly had been seeking $175,000 and the Mets offered $170,000. The 29-year-old right-hander earned an estimated $150,000 last season when he posted a 19-10 record and won the Cy Young Award.

He also led the league with an earned run average of 2.08 and 251 strikeouts, the third time he won both those titles in the same season.

Seaver said he brought up high salaries in basketball during Wednesday's meeting with Scheffing.

"Salaries in other sports have skyrocketed," he said. "Salaries in baseball had to come up. Salaries in other sports put pressure on baseball owners to pay more."

Top trackmen meet at Storrs

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Sports Staff

Tough competition... some thrive in the midst of it, and others crack under the pressure caused by it. In Saturday's New England Championships, 24 UMass trackmen will be competing against opponents who represent the best in the region.

Three members of the UMass squad, Toney Pendleton, Ken Adamson and Randy Thomas feel that the high level of competition will help the team and their individual performances.

Pendleton believes that tough opponents will help more than hinder him. The freshman speedster has everything to gain, with three years of track ahead of him. Pendleton indicated that he is ready for the New Englands after the big letdown last Saturday in the Yankee Conference meet. The letdown was not an individual one, but a blow to a UMass team that had high hopes of beating UConn.

Pendleton said that he likes competition and feels that the team is "mentally and physically ready." The freshman standout stated that consistency will be a key factor in his performances. In expressing his feelings on what it will take to come out victorious in the dash, Pendleton noted, "The winner will have to run at least 6.1."

Randy Thomas will be up against Tom Smith and Dan Moynihan, both "typical road runners", like to work the second half of the two-mile. This may cause a problem for Thomas, because as he concedes, "I'm weaker than them in the second mile." Thomas will have his work cut out for him in the first mile when he will have to take the lead, and hopefully be able to hold off Smith and Moynihan.

There is a possibility that Charlie Duggan of Springfield and Mike Buckley of Northeastern will run the two-mile. If so, these two will be the men to beat. Thomas will be trying to finish ahead of these top performers, as well as run his best time of the season to insure qualification for the IC4A's.

Ken Adamson agrees that the competition will help the squad and himself. Adamson explained that the competition hasn't been that good so far this season and Saturday's meet will provide plenty of opposition. The freshman jumper pointed out that Abe Davis of Springfield is the favorite in both the long and triple jumps. Individually, Adamson will be going for his best jump of the year, and possibly an exceptional jump will put him right behind, or even ahead of Davis.

A total of 38 teams will be competing at UConn's Field House. Dartmouth and Brown will be competing in the Heptagonal meet rather than in the New Englands.

Bob Adamson will see action in the long jump. Because of a painful heel injury, Adamson will be concentrating on one event. The injury bothers Adamson in the triple jump, so Mike Geraghty and Peter Ryan will see double duty in the long and triple jumps.

Dan Grigus is the sole entry in the pole vault. Grigus cleared 14' on his last vault.

Jim Hennessy and Curt Stegerwald face extremely close competition in the hurdles. Only tenths of a second separate the top hurdlers and sprinters who will be going against each other in the meet.

Barron Littlefield is the only runner entered in the 600. Littlefield, who has a great capacity to come back, is a smart, experienced runner. Littlefield's talent as a good come-from-behind runner should prove advantageous for him.

Others who will be running in the meet include: Chet Mysliwicz, Harry Kelley and Jim Hunt in the 1,000; Bill Gillin in the mile; and Tom Wilson, John McGrail and Tom Maguire in the two-mile.

UConn and Northeastern should battle for the title, with BC a strong bet for third. UMass and Springfield will be ready to grab third if the Eagles falter

Women gymnasts win as easy as "1-2-3"

By CANDY GROSS
MDC Sports Staff

Wednesday night's lopsided gymnastics meet saw the UMass women placing one, two, three in every event and accumulating a total of 100.60 points to Boston State's 77.05.

Boston State's all freshman team has only been in existence three years. Taking this into account, they should be proud of their performance against the defending National Champs.

In vaulting UMass only entered four gymnasts and took the top four places. Jeannine Burger, high scorer in every event, earned an 8.9, followed by Marian Kulick's 8.65. Third and fourth went respectively to Linda Nelligan and Heidi Armstrong. Boston's high scorer, Karen Fleming was .6 points away with a 7.2.

Bars was dominated by UMass' top two placers, Jeannine Burger with an 8.85 and Linda Nelligan with 8.4. Both women added a new twist to their dismount, giving the needed flair to the event. Third place went to Gail McCarthy, swinging a nice routine despite an unfortunate slip near the start. UMass's first performer for the event, freshman Carol Roger's, who scored a 5.6 shows promise of being a fine competitor for future meets.

After the two events the score was UMass 49.95 to BS 35.25. At that point UMass was mainly interested in the total outcome, hoping to break 100 points.

The beam brought out some long-awaited performances from the UMass women. Jeannine Burger, taking the event with a 8.7, was steady as a rock throughout her whole routine. Another solid performance from senior Heidi Armstrong earned an 8.35 and second place. A bad fall for Anne Vexler cost her some points, but she finished strong for a third place 8.1. Fourth place went to Marian Kulic, who, settling down after a fall, had no difficulty manipulating the beam.

Floor exercise produced the high individual score of the evening when Jeannine Burger earned a 9.2 with some of her cleanest tumbling this year. Second place went to All-Around gymnast Marian Kulick's 8.3, followed by Alicia Goode's 8.0. BS's Lynn Lacascia displayed some new dance combinations which earned her a well deserved fourth place with 7.45. The event total, Boston State's best for the night, came to 22.15 to UM's 25.50

Final home basketball game vs. Maine

The graduating seniors and game preview

By EARLE BARROLL

Al Skinner had nairy a hint of his contemporary Afro and Rick Pitino, Peter Trow and John Olson were still showing their ears when they were first introduced to Curry Hicks Cage and its 5,000 plus on the same billing with Julius Erving.

That was December 2, 1970 when these four along with Art Levine, who has since retired to academia, riddled St. Anselm's, 85-69, in the first of 15 wins along with a single loss that carried them to the number six slot in the nation among freshman teams.

Skinner had a big night -- two points and fouled out only minutes into the second half. Trow had 23 points and 13 rebounds, Olson 14 rebounds and Pitino 20 points and ten assists.

"The one thing that I remember about that night was the crowd," said Trow a couple of days back. "Being from a small school, I never played before more than a couple of hundred fans.

"We were upstairs in the lockerroom and they told us the place was filled. And then when we finally came out on the court the place erupted. I was so nervous I didn't loosen up until five minutes into the second half."

Rick Pitino

"If anything this group changed the style of basketball at Massachusetts," said coach Jack Leaman. "Up to their arrival the only fast break was a one-man show by Julius Erving. They added the dimension of speed and quickness and turned the fast break into five men working as one."

Rick Pitino became the trigger man for this potent attack. He came out of high school with a sore wrist and a scoring average that hovered around 30 points per game. So when you see him today with no points, fewer shots and nine assists a game you can understand the metamorphasis his game has undertaken.

"I guess the other players made me into a passer," says Rick. "Somebody had to do the job I'm doing. The other four guys on the court can all shoot and if I decided to get my share of shots we probably wouldn't have been as successful as a team."

His change from shooter to ball-handler on the court has been accompanied by an even greater change from Rick Pitino-freshman to Rick Pitino-senior. Simply: he has grown up.

"Ray Wilson assistant coach taught me how to be a man," he says. "He gave me a different outlook on life. How to get along with every type of person and how to deal with all situations."

Al Skinner

"The toughest thing for Al Skinner," recalled Leaman, "was to follow Julius Erving. We asked a 6'3½" sophomore to do the things Julius did for us the two preceding years."

"Personally," says Al, "I never considered myself in the same mode as Julius." Even when they played together Al noticed that while Dr. J was physical enough to look for the jumper first and then drive, he was dictated by finesse -- look for the drive and then the jumper.

"It didn't bother me that the coach asked me to do so much," he says. "The thing that did bother me was that my teammates didn't allow me to be Al Skinner. Most of them had played with Julius the year before and just put me in his place on the court."

What is an Al Skinner? You cannot define him in statistics. Sure, you expect his 18-20 points and dozen or so rebounds. But Al is more. He is a concept in fluid motion, he is a scintillating moment. He is a factor by his mere presence on the court. He is, as Jack Leaman demands, "the second best player to ever play at Massachusetts."

Peter Trow

"When we recruited Peter Trow," said Leaman, "we had an 'in' being that his coach Roger Twitchell (Old Rochester Regional) had played for UMass."

Would you then believe that UConn was the first choice of Peter Trow? "That was Dee Rowe's first year at Storrs," he says. "He knew my parents, but that program was in such limbo at that point that I felt UMass was better for me. Anyways I was impressed with coach Broaca (then, freshman coach), the thought of playing with Julius Erving and the good phys ed program they offered at UMass."

Peter started for the first half of the year, then a collarbone injury at Boston University sat him on the bench and left a void in his psychological bondage with the team. After a season of football this past fall he again came out a week before the opener, played some against Harvard and is now playing the best ball of his career.

"There were two reasons why I came out," he says. "Mainly I didn't have anything to do during the winter. And I also want to play in Europe next year and I thought it would look better if I put in another year."

John Olson

"John Olson came here as a baseball player with some interest in basketball," said Leaman. "He contributed immensely to our freshman program, took two years off and is finding it difficult to get his legs back for basketball."

John Olson couldn't agree any more. "I've enjoyed the year, but I wish I could have contributed more. If anything it's been a great experience for me." Professional baseball?

"If everything works out and I can have a good year and the right offer comes, then yes, I'll get into the pros."

And so it is now four years since this group first met on the tar courts of Orchard Hill; and exaggerated their exploits in high school, and went from a 15-1 freshman year to 14-12 to 20-7 and NIT to 18-4 so far and who knows what else.

"This group far exceeded what we expected of them," said Leaman. "I thought they'd be good players, but through hard work and effort they became exceptionally talented athletes."

They've had many glorious moments as varsity players, but perhaps none can excede their freshman victory over Boston College, February 10, 1971. The final score was 87-67. And Al Skinner slam-dunked during layup lines setting the Cage in a frenzy that carried through the varsity's beating of the Eagles.

"Rick told me to jam before we went on the court," admits Al. "Then when we got out there I just didn't feel like it. Rick told me again and seeing that nobody else would do it, I went up and stuffed it."

With it the 5,000 plus were sucked into a vacuum of unlimited fall out, hand slapping, screaming and other sundry expressions of delight and disbelief. Come to think of it, this pattern of emotions has followed the seniors, who'll be honored tomorrow night at the Cage, over the past four years.

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Another era in Cage history come to an end tomorrow night.

The Minutemen make their final home appearance of the year against Maine, and it will be the last time Al Skinner, Rick Pitino, Peter Trow, and John Olson will don their white uniforms to perform for the Cage fans.

Their record in the past speaks for itself, but, in many ways, their biggest challenge may still be yet to come.

A victory tomorrow night would give the Minutemen their second straight Yankee Conference crown. Another tournament berth is almost assured at this point, maybe in the NCAA. And, if the Minutemen manage to beat both Maine and New Hampshire, they would be the first team ever to win eleven conference games in one year.

Tomorrow night's contest boils down to, according to Jack Leaman, "Our quickness and experience against their size and strength."

And certainly Maine is big and strong. Their front line measures 6'7, 6'6, and 6'6 and they are very aggressive off the boards.

The pride of the Black Bears is sophomore forward Bob Warner. Last year's conference rookie of the year, Warner has been among the nation's leading rebounders for most of this season, and no less a basketball authority than Red Auerbach has called him the best collegiate player in New England.

But Red might get an arguement from many UMass fans on that point. According to the latest figures, Al Skinner has a scoring average of 18.5, a rebound average of 11.3, and his field goal percentage of .633 ranks him sixth in the nation in that category.

The Minutemen are coming off one of their better showings of late, an 89-61 battering of Vermont.

"Our offense got untracked a little bit in that game," remarked Leaman. "We showed a great deal of initiative."

But it is not the Minutemen offense that has been winning games. "We're winning with defense," assured Leaman.

Indeed the figures bear Leaman out. UMass is presently rated the 17th the best team in the country defensively, giving up an average of only 63.3 points per game.

More impressive is the fact that the Minutemen are currently the number one, yes I said number one, team in the country in rebound margin. UMass has managed to pick off 12 more caroms than their opponents.

FURTHERMORE: The tournament picture, at least in New England circles, became a little clearer over this past week. Connecticut had their hopes jolted by losses to Georgetown and Rutgers. Boston College also suffered a blow to their NCAA aspirations by bowing to St. John's.

UMass is still very much alive, and still has an outside shot at the big one. The NCAA usually invites three eastern independents to participate, and at this point, only two teams have asserted themselves in that direction. Pittsburgh looks like a sure bet along with the class of New England, Providence. Beyond that, the picture is cloudy.

St. John's certainly deserves some consideration, but Syracuse has not been playing well of late, and could drop out of the picture entirely. So that third berth is still open and the Minutemen could sneak in there.

"People tend to say that one win or loss at this point decides whether a team gets a tournament bid," said Leaman, "but I think the entire season dictates whether you go or not."

UMass gymnmen win by 1

By WALT POWERS
MDC Gymnastics Writer

The score was close, but it didn't tell the story of the meet.

Sure, the Springfield gymnasts dominated both the high bar and still rings. Sure UMass scored below potential on both the pommel horse and high bar. Sure the Springfield Chiefs had beaten the Minutemen in 13 out of sixteen previous encounters. Sure the meet was held in Springfield where UMass had won but once before. Sure.

There never was any real doubt that UMass would win this meet. The Minutemen jumped out to a 26.65-26-40 lead on the floor exercises and were never passed en route to their first victory since 1968 in Memorial Hall. Though the Chiefs mustered enough brawn in the high bar and still rings to make last nights meet a close one, UMass constitently got the high scores when they needed them.

The meet was effectively over at the end of the pommel horse, where UMass outscored the Chiefs by the eventual winning margin of 1.10. There was nothing pretty about this event, and UMass won it mainly because they had three performers who managed not to fall off the horse. Steve Scuderi, sprained ankle and all, was the high scorer with an 8.65.

Springfield was a constant threat after that, and actually outscored UMass by .05 over the final four events. UMass however, always got clutch high scores when Springfield seemed on the verge of an upset. At two points of possible collapse, the still rings and high bar, UMass got 9.15 from Gene Whelan and a 9.10 from Steve Scuderi to stay comfortably ahead.

Individual heros were legion.

RICH SIEKUNAS UMass co-Captain led UMass to first win over Springfield at Springfield since 1968.

Gene Whelan was Gene Whelan, winning the all-around for the umpteenth time this season, and breaking Springfield's back every time they ran up a high score. Important individual performances were elicited from specialists like Steve Clabhy (8.8 on floor) and John Braddon (8.8 on vaulting, as Jack Fabricante's replacement) Overall, depth played a greater role last night than in any previous meet this year.

With almost certain victory awaiting them next Saturday at Cornell, UMass finishes the season in fourth place in Eastern League Dual-Meet competition.

FREAK OUT!

BELOW THE SALT INTERVIEWS FRANK ZAPPA

by Steve Feld

Frank Zappa's been around for a while. He, along with the band that is synonymous with him, The Mothers of Invention, released his first record in 1966, an avant-garde, aberrant album called Freak Out. It established a niche in the minds of many for Zappa: that of the intellectual madman, the depraved genius who has since become a powerful force in the recording industry. He's quick-tempered and often contemptuous, yet alone in his music acumen and sociological insight vis a vis rock music.

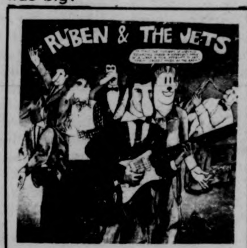
MOTHERS
ABSOLUTELY FREE

It's been attempted before, I'm sure, but Zappa really is unlike anyone before him. He is a composer in the purist-purest sense of the word. One never knows what to expect when something new is released by him. Whereas most people categorize music into blues, jazz, rock et. al., Zappa sees no dividing lines. "It's more fun that way", he says.

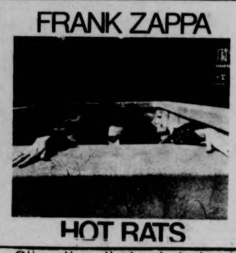
I approached Zappa with a combination of trepidation and exhilaration. His feelings toward the media are not flattering: he dismisses it all as "jive", filled with half-truths and outright lies. David Walley, a Los Angeles-based writer, released a biography of Zappa, No Commercial Potential, amid shouting matches and threats of legal action. He refuses to talk to Rolling Stone because of something they once printed, and calls it a "shitty paper". And when Frank makes one of his infrequent appearances on TV talk shows or FM radio stations, broadcast licenses are in a state of constant jeopardy.

LUMPY GRAVY

With him throughout our conversation was his bodyguard Smothers, a tough bronze-skinned bald-headed behemoth from Baltimore. He was hired after a disillusioned fellow climbed on stage at a Mothers' gig in London and pushed Zappa into the orchestra pit seven feet below. Frank broke his leg. He later found out the man's motive: his girl was spending too much time with her Zappa records and not enough with him. So he attacked Zappa. And Zappa hired Smothers, who hates his music but loves him, and insists Frank is in no way "only in it for the money". Smothers sits no more than four armlengths away from Zappa while he performs on stage and wears a set of headphones that blocks out the noise. Offstage, he brags to aspiring reporters that he has been a bodyguard to the Beatles, the Stones, Dylan and anyone else "... who was big!"



By the way of straight information, Zappa said his next album will be called Apostrophe. Partially recorded in London, it will feature Jack Bruce and other "names". The rumored nine-record set from the Mothers has been postponed indefinitely due to the vinyl shortage, but when it finally gets released, it will be as three three-record sets. And The Groupie Papers, Zappa's hand-written account of the sordid details of many groupies' lives, still doesn't have a publisher and Frank is still "getting it together".



Other than that, what struck me as particularly noteworthy were Zappa's shoes: hand-painted, with huge heels, and, in bright, swirling colors, were such cute sayings as "Big Tits", "Hot Lips" and "Kiss My Ass".

JEAN-LUC PONTY
PLAYS THE MUSIC OF FRANK ZAPPA

The rest speaks for itself.

MOTHERS
BURNT WEENY SANDWICH

Why did you involve yourself with the new Ruben and the Jets?

It seemed like a reasonably good thing to do. I produced four albums while I was laid up with my leg: JUST ANOTHER BAND FROM L.A., WAKA-JAWAKA, GRAND WAZOO, and their album, FOR REAL. They played the Shaefer Music Festival in New York last summer and blew Deodato off the stage. I've heard they're breaking up, but there should be another album out which I had nothing to do with.

FRANK ZAPPA

Do you plan on producing any other groups?

No. When I do, I act as a babysitter, peacemaker and watchdog. Every group comes into the studio unprepared, thinking they're the Beatles. It's a waste of time and energy.

Were you pleased with Just Another Band from L.A.?

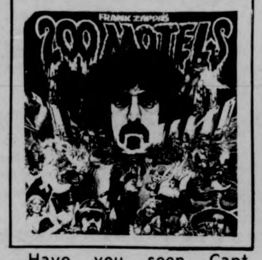
Fairly so, although I'm never completely satisfied with anything I've done. "Billy the Mountain" had to be shortened, but the long instrumentals were edited. The narrative remained intact.

Did Volman and Kaylan influence you to sing more?

They haven't influenced me in any way.



Have you seen Capt. Beefheart lately?

No, he's an asshole.

What do you think of Billy Graham?

He's alright; he pays his bills on time.

Have you ever heard anything by Todd Rundgren?

No. He once called me up wanting to know some bass players. I gave him a few names.

What record of yours has sold the most?

HOT RATS or 200 MOTELS, I'm not sure. My favorite has always been LUMPY GRAVY. I got to use an orchestra on it.

Will Uncle Meat ever be completed?

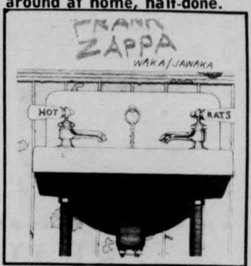
I hope so. It's just sitting around at home, half-done.



A lot of your records have been reaching the bargain bins. Any comment? Every record ends up there sooner or later. Either there or the record clubs.

Are the rumors about Freak Out and Absolutely Free's making the Top Ten Album Charts true?

No. ABSOLUTELY FREE did get up to about 40 on the charts, and FREAK OUT! never did get any chart action.

How well did those albums sell?

No way to check on that, as Verve is such a crummy label.

THE GRAND WAZOO

Do you need an instrument to compose?

No, I write anytime. The hardest part is teaching the band. The only songs I do live are the ones I teach them, and it takes too long to teach every one.

more ZAPPA being read by you

When does your contract with Warners expire?

In four years. No comment as to whether or not I'm satisfied with them.

Do you think the music industry is corrupt?

It's no more corrupt than, say, the garment industry.

FRANK ZAPPA
HOT RATS
AT THE OLYMPIC

Are there ill-feelings between you and Rolling Stone?

It's a shitty paper. They ran an interview with me by Jerry Hopkins in one of their early issues that was little more than a compilation of press releases.

You're married aren't you?

Yes. I have a daughter six years old named Moon Unit. She goes to private school and takes music lessons.

Why did you change the name of your record label from Bizarre to Discreet?

It's a whole new deal. More profits.

Can it be said that the earlier part of your career was "bizarre" and now it is more "discreet"?

What do you mean by "bizarre"?

"What's the ugliest part of your body? — I think it's your mind."

How does the dictionary define "discreet"?

Prudent.

No, it can't be said.

If touring drives you crazy, why do it?

I like being crazy. This tour has been a lot of laughs. Besides, I never said that. I said "touring can make you crazy".

Will there be a follow-up film to 200 Motels?

It's in the planning stages now. No comment as to what it's going to be called. I can tell you there'll be a monster in it.

What will it be called?

No comment.

censored

Is it true, as Howie Kaylan says, that 200 Motels made money?

No.

What are your plans for the immediate future?

After tonight's show, we fly back to L.A. for two nights at the Roxy on the Sunset Strip. Next month I'll attend a music publishers' convention in Paris ... I got to go to work now.

One final question: are you ever afraid you'll turn people off by being offensive?

If people are offended by what I am, they shouldn't listen to my music. I can't be any other way. My music is an extension of me; you can't separate them.

Anaximander, an early Greek, believed that the earth was a stubby cylinder suspended in a hollow sphere containing the fixed stars!

NOTES FROM THE UNDERGRAD

by E. Patrick McQuaid

A young philosophy student from Heidelberg once interviewed the late Professor Heinrich Guttermensch at his luxurious 54th-floor apartment in Berlin. The Master (as he is often referred to by his admirers) was growing increasingly irritated because he had a pressing appointment with von Bismarck, then Chancellor of Germany. One of the annoying questions was where could one find truth and peaceful harmony; a typical topic among novice philosophers.

Guttermensch led him to the balcony where he told him to look out upon the splendors of the earth. While the youth scanned the horizon, the Master quietly slipped his hand behind him to a night table. Grasping a marble paperweight he struck the student squarely on the back of the skull. After casually brushing off his lapel, he raised the body to the rail and allowed it to roll off the edge, plummeting to the streets of Berlin.

"Iz dat peace enough for you, dumkopf?"

He chuckled lightly as he straightened his tie and departed hastily to catch the 9:36 for Dusseldorf.

Goals of the Gay Line

Gay people are an oppressed minority and an unknown number of them deal with their oppression by "passing." "Passing" means pretending to be straight, heterosexual. The advantage of doing that, of course, is insuring all of the rewards, the economic benefits, the career opportunities, the social acceptance this society has to offer.

Nevertheless, one of the most important needs a human being has cannot be fulfilled in "passing," the need to love deeply and be loved with the full depth of one's fullest potential for communication. Even though society rewards them in other ways, gays who pass have some very lonely times to contend with.

A chief goal of the gay line is attempting to meet some of the loneliness while preserving the anonymity desired by the person who has still chosen to pass. Only the individual can make the decision of whether or not he or she must continue to live within the acceptable boundaries of the straight world or wishes to bear the burdens of "coming out" as gay. Gay organizations such as the Student Homophile League may indeed campaign for the desirable goal of a totally open and honest society but nevertheless respects the decisions individuals must make about their own capabilities.

The gay line tries to offer support and communication where it is possible to give it to those trying to satisfy or contend with their gay tendencies. At the same time it is committed to the privacy and anonymity which those seeking it may desire.

The gay line also offers information to anyone, gay or straight, desiring it: homesexuality in general, events in the gay community in particular, and on counselling which is available. Probably most important, however, the gay line offers the opportunity simply to talk to another gay person. The line is open 8-11 p.m. every night except Wednesday and Sunday. Number: 545-0154.

Vietnam Continues

(or, Didn't You Know)

Preface by Garuman Gomes
Text by Tom Hayden care of ROLLING STONE

PREFACE

So you thought the Vietnam business was done with, huh? Surprise! IT'S STILL HERE kids! Yes, the same men who brought you endless atrocities are doing it again, and with as much zest as ever.

You didn't really think it was over now, did you? If you did, you show a helluva lot of gullibility for the same crew who were saying they knew all about Watergate. Well, people? Are you going to feel the pain of the tiger cages as they KILL US every day ...

And the pity of it is that this isn't being "brought to you in living color." Which states another point, I think — would there have been an anti-war movement in the U.S. if our own men hadn't been sent over? And now that we've got those gooks doing the killing with our money, will anybody react?

TEXT

by Tom Hayden in the Feb. 28 ROLLING STONE:

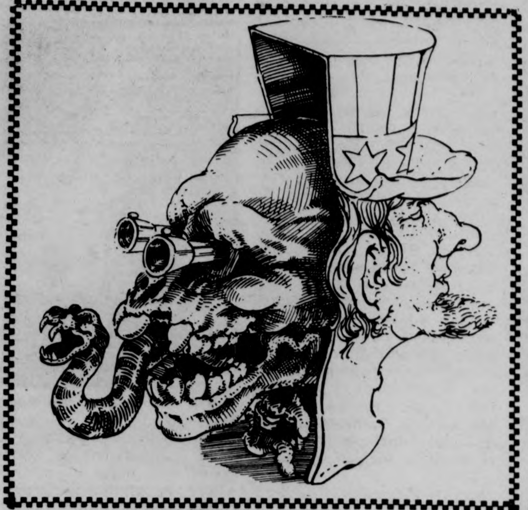
Remember Vietnam?

That it is a war, an old war in new form, is impossible to deny after many months of wishful past-tense references.

In South Vietnam, more than 50,000 people were killed in fighting in 1973 — higher than any rate except during the 1968 and 1972 offensives, and about ten times the number killed in the more-publicized Middle East war of October. In December Thieu declared there would be no general election in South Vietnam as called for by the Paris ceasefire agreement, then changed the Saigon constitution to allow himself a third term. Even within his tightly-rigged assembly, this latter act was met by outraged objections from more than 50 legislators, some of whom shaved their heads in shame. Then he ordered his troops to attack the Vietcong in their own territory because, he said, the Vietnam War had begun again. In bombing the mainly rural zones under Provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) control, whose existence is allowed by the Paris Agreement, Thieu has committed an act equivalent in gravity to the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam in February of 1965.

While regularly threatening to resume bombing, the U.S. already has sent military aid to Saigon far exceeding the "piece for piece" replacement permitted in the Agreement. The most ominous escalation is the planned introduction of a new fighter-bomber, the F-5E, as part of a supplemental-aid package sought by our Saigon ambassador Graham Martin.

The December congressional decision to send $3.5 billion in aid — 85 per cent of it military — to its client regimes in Indochina was higher than aid to Israel, our next highest recipient. The $1.7 billion earmarked to Saigon supports the third largest air force and fourth largest army in the world!



An extraordinary police state, combining the most sadistic passions with the most advanced technology, is being erected in Saigon. By comparison with the much-publicized repression in the Soviet Union, South Vietnam is the bottom of hell. Estimates of the number of political prisoners — who should have been released in accordance with the Paris Agreement — range from 100,000 (Amnesty International) to 200,000 (Committee to Reform the Prisons of South Vietnam, a Catholic organization U.S. advisers are in every prison, part of the 25,000 Americans still in South Vietnam. American firms continue to profit from the war. Tiger cages have been constructed by a Houston-based firm. Smith & Wesson sends the handcuffs. Computer Science Corporation provides the computers for the Saigon police to keep efficient files on 11.5 million people, the entire adult population.

Our culture hhs produced a new kind of terrifying American presence for Vietnam; the administrator of torture.

Coryell's 11th (and full) House

Live Music:
Larry Coryell and the Eleventh House
at the Rusty Nail, Feb. 13-15

The new group, made up of the genre's superstars, is rather incredible to behold. Alphonse Mouzon is a literal blur upon the drums, and his playing is incredibly fast and tight. I don't think his playing is as energetic as it was when he was in McCoy Tyner's group, but he is one of the most imaginative drummers around. And powerful — extremely powerful. Now he can bash to his heart's delight, something he did in McCoy's group, but if you were on the wrong side of the stage, you couldn't hear McCoy. When he and Danny Trifan got together on the rhythm section deal, it was some of the tightest, yet polyrhythmic work I've heard. Al is also a damn good composer for this stuff and this type of group atmosphere fits him well.

Randy Brecker, ex-B, S & T, Deodato, Dreams, and other assorted horrors, showed with an electronically-altered trumpet, and played the hell out of the wahs, leaving scattered electric debris over the hall.

But, best of all was Mike Mandel, blind synthesizerist-electric pianist. Mike's been playing with Larry since both were about fifteen, and Mandel is the strongest writer for Coryell. As well as doing the nicest synthesizer work I've heard outside of Sun Ra, he's got a sense of humor when he improvises, snatching melodies from children's songs and the like. He was heard to best advantage in his solo venture entitled "Untitled", with strange synthesizer Stockhausen and a ventured German lesson ("Ich bin ein Sheisskopf; ich bin ein grosse Scheisskopf" which means "I am a shithead; I am a great shithead.") Educational and entertaining.

So, this is the way it sums up; from preliminary reviews, this reporter found out that Coryell was tired by the third night. I saw him, and the entire group, play much better at Amherst College this past semester. The group's nice, and all are superb players. When we get to hear them on wax, we'll be sure that the concert was true, I'm hesitant, because Larry still has some weaknesses, but nothing that could prevent the Eleventh House from becoming one of the finest groups around, filling in the gaps that the late Mahavishnu Orchestra left in its demise, and opening up new channels on the set as well.

How I Sat in Front of Larry Coryell Nearly the Whole Time and Hardly Saw a Damn Thing or How I Found God and Turned Atheist

With a few more windows and a folding door the Rusty Nail would make a decent phone booth. No, that's not a good comparison; a phone booth is a place of privacy where, hopefully, one person communicates with another. How about this: With earthen walls and a hole in the top the Nail would make a passable anthill. It was bad enough when it was Standing Room Only, but we must have broken at least a couple of the laws of physics when we all sat down: One cannot, theoretically, put more into a container than it will hold. Still, there was a sort of art to it and outstanding sitting will seat you in good standing...er.

Mike Mandel

A Wanderer was sent unto me — No, that's not true: He was sent onto me, with both feet. In my ignorance I thought him a common drunk and merely helped him to sit down. He immediately stood and, in an attempt to communicate more clearly, flung himself full length upon me, muttering to me in tongues I could not comprehend. Again in my lack of understanding, I only helped him to sit. Even after Shiva, Goddess of Flying Elbows, had been materialized directly behind my spinal column I remained unhearing. Finally the Wanderer rose and one more flung himself upon me, this time extinguishing his cigarette in the middle of my forehead. And then I understood: It was time to leave.

Putsus, No Putsus

BRIGHT MOMENTS— RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK (Atlantic SD 2-907)

Is there any truth to the rumor that Rahsaan Roland Kirk has mellowed? Only if there can be such a thing as "mellow but powerful", and only if one speaks in reference to Rahsaan's apparent selection of more "traditional" material for this particular recording.

RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK
BRIGHT MOMENTS

For example, tunes by Duke Ellington, Bacharach & David, and Rodgers & Hammerstein are included in this double-album set, in addition to original compositions that seem more restrained than some of Rahsaan's previous endeavors.

Almost paradoxically, however, the flamboyance for which Rahsaan Roland Kirk has gained notoriety is quite evident (perhaps because this is a LIVE recording). On the opening tune he is doing his "sax duet" — blowing separate melody lines on tenor sax and manzello simultaneously. And on "Fly Town Nose Blues" he plays the entire eight-minute and 52-second melody on (what else?) nose flute.

Rahsaan introduces the concert and the album with these words: "We want you to come on and go with us on this trip...we're going everywhere."

The terrain is varied. There's the bossa-nova pulsing of Bacharach's "You'll Never Get to Heaven", the dynamics of Ellington's "Prelude to a Kiss", then a synthesizer accompaniment to Rahsaan's nose flute. Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz" is saluted after a rendition of "IF I Loved You" (from the musical "Oklahoma") that is played with such feeling, such ferocity that can make the hairs on your scalp tingle. Rahsaan also experiments with a quasi-New Orleans style sound on "Dem Red Beans and Rice."

Rahsaan Roland Kirk is so much of a virtuoso in every sense of the world that it goes without saying that the musicians who accompany him are impressive at the least.

I could go on and on about Bright Moments...."isn't it time you found out why?" Pick up a copy and hear for yourself.

THE SIEGEL-SCHWALL BAND-953 WEST STREET & WOODEN NICKLE BWL1-0121)

953 West Street is one bustling with many tales of inner city blues. We are led down the urban stretches of roadway and find ourselves looking at the many images which make up life in the city. Fights, love, hate, joy, grief, etc. are the many emotions touched upon. That is not to say that this little walk of ours is opening up any as yet uncracked doors or is approaching life in any sort of novel way. We can sense only the small area which our feet have traversed as we are lead by the melodious sounds about us.

A wooden nickel sits surreptitiously in the corner, as the band slides smoothly through their euphonious songs spiced with evenly flowing instrumentals. Light blues laced with comic relief provided by the lyrical delivery makes for an ease of listening on both heads and tails. We hold this light object in our hands flipping it and wondering whether or not to accept or give it back. You know the tales told about wooden nickels? This wooden nickel; if bitten, would probably break most peoples teeth.

ON THE THIRD DAY — ELECTRIC LIGHT ORCHESTRA (United Artists UA-LA188-F)

Originally conceived to make all else in rock obsolete, Electric Light Orchestra have now realized that they're not able to annihilate all of their musical competition and have settled to join it. The grandiose plans which called for an entire orchestra with soloists (not unlike England's elitist Centipede assemblage) have been refined since the days when the Move breathed their last, to an ensemble of six.

Jeff Lynne, who has climbed the ranks from second guitarist in the Move to (with Wood's departure) leader of the Orchestra, has, in the past, proven his capacity to write in a variety of different styles. Compare the rockin' pseudo-hit "Do Ya" with the exquisitely eclectic "From the Sun to the World" from ELO II.

On the Third Day demonstrates Lynne's continued writing versatility and the Orchestra's increasing playing ability. Judging from these criteria, the record is excellent, yet what is wrong is the conspicuous absence of total originality. Their rock interpretation of "In the Hall of the Mountain King", from Grieg's first Peer Gynt Suite, doesn't do the original justice and certainly adds nothing to it. "Ma Ma Ma Belle" was undoubtedly written with the Stones on the brain, "Daybreaker" has a Four Seasons riff in it, and "Showdown", which should have been the single of 1973, is a hybrid between "Brother Louie" and "I Heard it Through the Grapevine". What it comes down to is that ELO's imagination transcends their propensity for doing anything really new and different. Like his former cohort Roy Wood, Lynne and the Orchestra put being outrageous before being innovative, which isn't bad, but won't cause existing rock to become obsolete in a world which is blessed by the likes of Strawbs and Genesis.

— David Sokol

GONE CRAZY-GRIN (A&M SP-4415 time 39:39) Their first two albums were fresh, beautiful declarations of life and love, and were a sheer joy to listen to. Their last two (All Out and this) sound like parodies of the first two. The songs aren't as good, but they aren't that far removed from the originals. The difference is that, besides our being overly-familiar with Nils' basic song structures, all the little tasteful tricks used so successfully on Grin and 1+1 turn out just awful now. Mawkish female choruses, insipid singing, putrid playing really stop things cold.

I think Nils Lofgren (their main man) has got only four basically different songs in his head, so he did two versions of each (one each side) (one, "Beggar's Day" is from the four years' old Crazy Horse album) and inflated all of them up near the four minute mark to make enough album time. Lead balloons. C

COAST TO COAST OVERTURE AND BEGINNERS — Rod Stewart - Faces (Phonogram SRM-1-697)

What exactly is the need for a live album? To recreate a concert-like atmosphere? To hear a scream in your favorite part of a song? Either way you look at it, you yourself can recreate a concert like atmosphere right here at UMass! You can even do it with your very own corridor; just round up your odd neighbors, shove as many as will fit into a closet, put on any Rod Stewart-Faces album and have them scream, yell, clap and rant obscenities of their choice, then you will have no need to purchase Coast to Coast, Overture and Beginners.

There is an underlying purpose, I suspect. This is the first recorded effort of Ronnie Lane's replacement, Tetsu Yamauchi. Which leaves the group untouched, no major change from the days with Lane.

It all makes you wonder if Faces is hard up for money or why exactly are they selling themselves cheap with this? Maybe they should tour again.

HYMN OF THE SEVENTH GALAXY - (Polydor PD 5536)
PIANO IMPROVISATIONS, VOL. 1 - (ECM 1014) CHICK COREA

Still another jazzman leaps aboard the 'hard-jazz' boogie bandwagon. Return to Forever sounds like a slightly watered-down Mahavishnu Orchestra, especially since Corea himself seems to be going out of his way to sound like Orchestra keyboardist Jan Hammer. But just the fact that they can be compared to the Orchestra should tell you that they're not all bad, just a little late in arriving. If you like McLaughlin-style boogie you'll enjoy this almost as much. I particularly recommend a cut called "After the Cosmic Rain".

An entirely different perspective of Corea, and perhaps a more honest one, can be gleaned from the quiet depths of introspection in his first volume of solo piano improvisations. Here are two sides of dreams and musings in black and white, an album to have on while you watch the snow fall or while sharing your feelings with someone. But listen to it with someone — I'm not kidding — Alone, it hurts

HOTCAKES — CARLY SIMON (Elektra do-be-do-be-do)

If you put it on in the morning (up widda cock), you can go about your routine (get washed, brush teeth, take a crap or read Collegian). You can make it loud 'n still hear the toonz (nice lady).

I was gonna play Hotcakes right when I got it, but I decided to wait (save best for last). When the time was right, so was I (another big one). Where there was silence, there now was music: the kind only Carly can make. 'N now I feel like I know her better. That's the thing about this record: whether you wash, take a crap, or jes' sit 'n listen (O.K. too), the time you spend with Carly isn't ill-spent. When you hear her on the car radio ("Mockingbird"), you'll know what it sounds like live on record (better). 'N if you read the reviews ("Title cut needs syrup"), you'll know what all dem big-shots (not me) are talkin' about.

But if ya jes' like Carly (not music), get No Secrets (nipples on cover).

Yes, they're together again; tightly, and with a lot of room to spare...It's hard to get reviews in on time when you're typing with one hand and scratching your head with the other...

The thought progressions of any average human being, if shown on a graph, would probably be a series of curves, one thought flowing gracefully into the next. The Firesign Theater is not only a group mind (which isn't supposed to occur in human evolution for quite some time), but apparently each thought of theirs is at right angles to the one on either chronological side of it. The Alice-in-Wonderland super-logic, the constant twisting of mental associations, the puns (Oh God, the puns!)...If ever there was a polluted stream-of-consciousness — "Oh listen, it's ticking." "No, it has ticks." "Ticks? Then we must flee (flea)!" — can there be any question of its whereabouts?

It's been said before, but I think it bears repeating: If someone were to select the contents for a time-capsule to represent our generation to the future, anything more than the now six existing Firesign albums would be supplementary. Neither the Whole Earth Catalogue or even Reader's Digest come close to capturing all the nuances of the concerns, interests, and hang-ups of middle-class America of the 60's and 70's the way these little black microcosms with the hole in the middle seem to, and neither of them is so artistically insane (although 'Humor in Uniform' is a definite runner-up).

You may have noticed by now that I have avoided discussing the album's contents: It's a Sherlock Holmes mystery, Firesign style. If you've never heard anything by the Firesign Theater, no further explanation will elucidate. If you're already into the Firesign, none is necessary.

—Your Sacred Cowboy

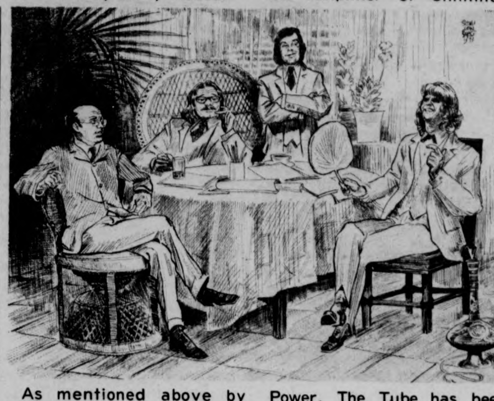
"What about all this animal imagery, sir? Does it have any meaning?" The Firesign Theatre's new album will come as a pleasant surprise to those who, expected unadulterated comedy, were alienated or otherwise put off by I Think We're All Bozos On This Bus and Not Insane. For The Tale of the Giant Rat...is written and performed basically in the humorous style of "The Further Adventures of Nick Danger" and the "High School Madness" sequences of Don't Crush That Dwarf...which is to say it is very funny indeed.



As mentioned above by Mssr. MacKenzie, this is the Firesign's version of a Sherlock Holmes story, one that was in fact never told by Watson but only referred to, in "The Final Problem". It also takes off from the "fragmented details given by Watson in the (Basil Rathbone) film, Pursuit to Algiers (Tom Gedwillo, Chromium Switch, October '73)". To try to describe the plot would be a somewhat Herculean task in this limited space, but briefly it centers on Hemlock Stones' search for the Seppelin Tube, the Amplifier of Unlimited Power. The Tube has been stolen by a mysterious character named The Electrician (remember him, friends?), and Stones' search for both it and him involves a wide variety of confederates and compadres. Notable among these are Dr. John Flotsom, O. D., His Biographer and Companion; Violet Dawn Dudley, An American Ingenue; Frank Acne, Jr., America's Action Hero; Jonas Acme, the Pharoah of American Industry; Harold "The Hawk" Lungett, Famous Criminal and Nice Guy; and Willard.

The imagery on this album is complex and surfaces in a lot of marvelous puns and Joycean wordstrings. Rodent imagery, coke imagery, "bawdy" body imagery, (of course) Electrical Power imagery...Marshall McLuhan has said that with the acceleration of communications technology, people increasingly make use of old cliches, transforming them into new archetypes for the purpose of fresh statement-making. The Firesign Theatre has been doing this for years, and The Giant Rat is crammed full of these old-new images. But find them yourself — it's not hard and it's fun.

And what of the Zeppelin Tube, the Amplifier of Unlimited Power, and object closely resembling the Lord of the Rings in its potential? Who does it belong to? Not to you, not to me, not to Them and not to the Man — but to the Sumaratrans. Chew on that, fellow rats...

Live Music:
Pharoah Sanders with Leon Thomas
Jazz Workshop, Boston
Feb. 16

It surprised me to find Leon Thomas, the jazz vocal pioneer of a few years ago, back with the group in which he first made his mark, that of Pharoah Sanders. After a series of progressively commercial albums on the Flying Dutchman label, Leon was last heard on Santana's Welcome LP and disappointed many with his lack of originality. Having returned to his roots with Pharoah, Thomas was evidently trying to establish a direction for himself last Sunday at the Jazz Workshop. He soloed vocally over the rhythm section, much like Pharoah's sax, sometimes singing a lyric, often yodeling, crying out or even laughing. His voice has beautiful range and tone, but his musical ideas were repetitious and ineffective.

Pharoah, however, is still Pharoah, a saxophone talent unto himself, with a personal, totally singular way of playing.

Blowing over a new rhythm section anchored by veteran Joe Bonner on piano, Sanders mixed his tenor sax bellows, shrieks and eruptions with lovely rhythmic passages and even took a couple of unaccompanied solos, showing him to be very concerned with melodic ideas.

None of the pieces were familiar, though all were of the general Sanders — Thomas style. At the end of the set, Sanders movingly quoted the unmistakable final bars of Coltrane's Naima. Thank you J.W. Coltrane. And thank you, kind cocktail waitress, for letting me avoid your outrageously expensive drink miminum.

Passes, No Passes

An Open Letter to Wendy Cole:

We've always thought the reason for giving passes to photographers and writers as not being for the purpose of promotion, but rather for writing a story on what does happen, and printing pictures of how it happened. At least that's how the major leagues play.

But when you are advised to print an article before the concert, it becomes clear that it is for publicity. Just reprinting old news is silly, absurd and impossible. We're not here to sell, we're here to tell.

We'd like to play it like in the real world and give an account of what really happens, with pictures of how it happened, rather than handing our more culturally-minded students instructed, prefabricated, promotional crap; that is if Wendy Cole would give us the passes.

The Famous Name — Below The Salt Music Staff

Ed's Note: The above brouhaha resulted when Smith College's Wendy Cole refused one of our reporters access to Saturday's Richie Havens Concert.)

A LEGENDARY PERFORMER — ELVIS VOL.1 (RCA CPL1-0341) time 34:11

Quite a package here. Ol' El is a 'legendary performer' now, and still in his first volume. And all things considered, these mid-to-late fifties tunes are still the best he's ever done. What makes this collection more (or less) than another Worldwide Hits are the five previously unreleased live, imported or newly-discovered takes proudly presented here. Even the full-blownness of the record and its package is justifiable, as Presley's importance should be recounted for the newborn. But to slap this 'legendary performer' on warping, hissing, creaking vinyl undoes the idea, the package and, most of all, the man. Not to mention the Historic $7.98 price tag. A for conception, C for execution.

SAINTS & SINNERS — JOHNNY WINTER (Columbia KC 32715) time 37:39

Johnny Winner's Saints & Sinters is a winter, er, winner, as producer Rick Derringer has got Johnny to take some time and modify the relentless but ultimately empty raunch attack that made Still Alive And Well so unsatisfying. In terms of taste, this is up to the Second Winter album, but it doesn't drown in it, as the Johnny Winter And piece did. Johnny still fires off a-plenty on here.

And let's not forget Johnny's armpit on the cover, without which he undoubtedly could not have woven the splendid versions of Allen Toussaint's "Blinded By Love" nor Edgar's "Rollin' 'Cross The Country" nor Lieber-Stoller's "Riot in Cell Block No. 9" nor Van Morrison's "Feedback On Highway 101"B+

— Mike Kostek

MONIUM - (Columbia KC 32579) JEREMY STEIG

Nothing spectacular or original here, just a good old-fashioned get-down albumful of riffiness. Flautist Steig and his three-man back-up (bass, drums, congas) show a lot of clean, fine energy throughout, and one composition, an Eastern textured piece called "Djinn Djinn" is striking. A worthwhile addition to, if not the future pride of, your collection.

In Concert:
Yes
New Haven Colosseum
February 15

Nowadays one does not attend rock concerts so much as one endures them. In order to experience one's favorite musicians in the flesh, one must tolerate, among other things, barnyard-like sports arenas, tens of thousands of drugged-up high schoolers who shriek "rock 'n roll!" at the drop of a drumstick, seats several football fields from the stage, the Superstar Image (an icon worshipped by everyone, including the Superstar), and perhaps worst of all, 150 decibels worth of ear-shattering electronic mind-rape. Then why go? The answer is because in some cases, such as John McLaughlin, Jethro Tull, and last Friday night in New Haven, Yes, it is most emphatically worth it.

Actually, the band is not so very different live than they are on record, because with both the music is the ultimate end-all. Don't be fooled by the superb light show and the flashy clothes; this band is there to play. Not that the live act is unnecessary, however: what it lacks in razzle-dazzle and loses in distortion, it more than makes up for in enthusiasm and visceral tension. Unfortunately, improvisation is also conspicuously absent: this is a show, and don't forget it. Not that that's bad, of course.

They started with both sides of Close to the Edge (good, though uninspired), but the concert's focal point was the new album, a ninety-minute, four-part suite entitled Tales From Topographic Oceans. It became immediately obvious that this was what they wanted to play, and what they played best. What was tedious on vinyl became brilliant, and what was already brilliant on vinyl became spectacular. Sparked by an electrifying bass solo, the band performed the beautiful fourth section, "Nous Sommes de Soleil" (We are of the Sun"), with perfectly-executed mastery, framing Anderson's exquisite vocals with compelling force. The encore was, predictably, "Roundabout".

As on the new album, the musical emphasis has radically shifted from a democratic organization where each musician contributes equally, to a creative diarchy featuring Anderson's consistantly poignant melodies and Howe's contrapuntal classical guitar, which cannot be described as anything less than incredible. Wakeman, Squire, and Alan White (third only to Ringo and Charlie Watts-his-name in percussionary inadequacy) have all been relegated to primarily background functions. All in all, however, a hardly less than unbelievable concert, and I would highly recommend their date this Saturday at Boston Garden. Indeed, for the true Yes freak, attendance should be considered no less than compulsory.

TALES FROM TOPOGRAPHIC OCEANS-YES (Atlantic SD 2-908)

Is it true that this album was inspired by a lengthy footnote on page 83 of the memoirs of Cecil B. DeMille?

'Closer to the Edge'? 'Over the Side'? 'Band Overboard'? I'm not really prepared to say. Reviewing this album after only two weeks' listening is like writing a book review of the Encyclopedia Britannica in the same amount of time. I don't like to review an album until my ear has become used to it; that is, until I know the album — and I've played this one all the way through at least six times without having heard it all. I can't get inside of it, at least not as a whole. I've heard segments that struck me as impressive in some places, well-composed if somewhat repetitious in others, and tending towards 'filler' status in others, but I'm hesitant about criticizing the album on that level lest the whole turn out to be greater than the sum of its parts. If "Roundabout" was a suite and "Close to the Edge" a concerto, then "Tales" is about as much of a symphony as pop-rock-jazz-blahblah is going to produce and as such deserves a longer period for evaluation.

"Yes. Hmmm . . . Weren't they the group who wrote a song about how they didn't have any bananas?"

Time, Justice and an "American Verdict"

An American Verdict
by Michael J. Arlen
Doubleday and Company,
Garden City, New York
196 pages

reviewed by Kevin Mack

An American Verdict examines a certain incident of violence that occurred in Chicago during the last month of the 1960's; a decade which seemed characterized by an excess of national soul-searching and a vague sense of imminence. On Dec. 4, 1969 heavily-armed members of the Chicago Police Force, lead by State's Attorney Edward Hanrahan attacked that cities headquarters of the Black Panther Party. The early morning raid claimed the lives of two Panthers — Fred Hampton, the chairman of the Chicago chapter, and Matt Clark. Four others, including Hampton's pregnant girl friend, Deborah Johnson, were wounded.

Arlen's book looks at the subsequent police cover-up of the incident and the trial of State's Attorney Edward Hanrahan. The cast of characters includes Hanrahan, Mayor Daley, the Panthers, and Barnabas Sears, the singular, Darrowesque Public Prosecutor, who fought for almost three years to bring Hanrahan and Company to justice. He lost! The main character, however, is none of these people. It is Justice — blind and evasive. And it is the American variety of justice.

The trial, with its grey-suited lawyers and tedious testimony makes up the core of the book. Arlen illuminates this core with terse, perceptive, portraits of the city; its people and its visitors. He describes the carnival-like Chicago Policemen's Recognition Night, an affair featuring Don Rickles and Bob Hope, not to mention Mayor Daley, who is always good for a laugh when he said: "No one is more deserving of respect than the police. We're not perfect. Nobody's perfect. But if we've made mistakes we'll remedy them. We will remedy them with Love." There is Mr. Arlen's insightful view of the Panthers — a tiny group of serious revolutionaries, whose strength lay more in the effective use of guerilla theater; rather than in any powerful organization. Their shotguns, sinister uniforms, military discipline and sincere dedication to their people aided several hundred Black Panthers in scaring the hell out of millions of white Americans. Unfortunately for the Panthers, they were all too successful in inciting the mass paranoia! The myth of the coming Panther Revolution became familiar coffee-table conversation in the late sixties: J. Edgar Hoover even called them the most dangerous threat to the nation's internal security.

Mayor Daley

Hanrahan's trial was long and drawn out. In spite of the weight of the evidence, it ended in acquittal. The tired, beaten prosecutor, Barnabas Sears said after the acquittal, "Respect for the law and maintenance of our Judicial system is essential for our survival as a free society." Evidently he hadn't lost his faith in the possibility of Justice.

Arlen's book seems to imply otherwise. His American Verdict is a verdict on the nation itself. The author does not pretend to judge. Instead he states his case and he draws — (between the politicos and the people, and between the courtroom melodrama and the hustle of city life.) All of this serves to advance an unfavorable verdict in the reader's mind. In the particular case which the book examines, justice was betrayed. Whether or not Justice is possible in America, Michael Arlen only hints.

His story ends with a description of the neighborhood around the apartment on 2337 West Monroe Street where the shootout occurred. It is winter, three years later. The area is still decrepit and the bullet holes in the apartment remain. Hampton's girl friend is living elsewhere with his child. Edward Hanrahan is no longer State's Attorney — he lost an election.

And Justice? The passage of time has its own sense of justice which the decrees of Law can neither contradict nor promulgate.

A Case of "Machismo"

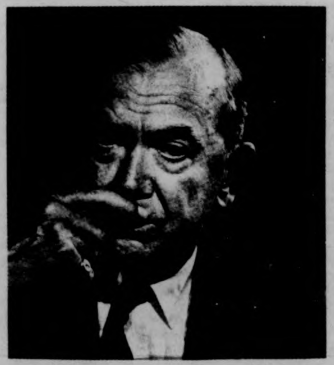
The Honorary Consul
by Graham Greene
$7.95, 315 pp., Simon & Schuster
Reviewed by Ed Smith

In a small, rather squalid Argentinian town across the river from Paraguay, Graham Greene has set a quite believable tragedy. The Honorary Consul is the story, quite simply, of how brutal just fate can be.

Dr. Eduardo Plarr, the son of an English revolutionary in South America, is the major character; a sort of anti-hero with a sometimes dislikable manner. He finds himself in the middle of the conflict owing to his childhood friendship with one of the men who has ineptly kidnapped the honorary British Consul instead of the American Ambassador. Dr. Plarr has been having an affair with the honorary consul's wife and is forced by his own sense of honor to attempt to negotiate his release. He is involved as well due to his conspiring with the kidnappers because of a sense of honor he felt toward his late father. In the end, his attempt leads to his own death, much in the manner of his father, who was shot attempting to escape from a Paraguayan prison.

Greene switches a third person perspective in the novel back and forth between Plarr and Charley Fortnum, the honorary consul. This serves to expose both these two characters and the kidnappers they are in contact with to a light in which the reader can assess their common motive. The reasons for action lose a great deal of their political rhetoric and the reader is able to see each character as a man at the end of his rope desperately trying to achieve a bit of notoriety, at least in his own mind. A great deal is summed up in the character of Dr. Saavedra, a second rate novelist, who is a friend of Dr. Plarr's. He is absorbed by and constantly talks about "machismo", that brand of courage which drives men to die for honor.

The characters Greene creates are by far the best part of the book. Though they differ in many ways, an irresistible situation sweeps them all toward a similar end. The only character who survives is the honorary consul, who goes back to being a melancholy drunk. Despite the fact that he knows the official account of the final shoot-out is a huge lie, he never had any sense of "machismo" and so spends his time trying to convince himself that his wife loves him.



Graham Greene

Clara, Fortnum's wife, is probably the most interesting personality in the book next to Dr. Plarr. Fortnum meets her in Senora Sanchez's brothel, one of the few social spots in town. The brothel is the only place Fortnum and as well, Dr. Saavedra, can find anything resembling love. Clara and Fortnum marry because of a desire on his part to have a child and someone to whom he can leave his money. Clara though has spent so much of her time acting out men's fantasies, that she finds it difficult to relate to Fortnum or, one suspects, to Dr. Plarr. In the end, Greene makes an attempt at showing her express a bit of true emotion, but by that time the reader is already too sure of her fate to believe in a change.

Overall, the book could be said to be depressing. It examines a small situation, one that even the high political figures in the book look upon as inconsequential. However, from the small, unpleasant happening, Greene draws out some figures which make the book quite a worthwhile piece.

The Big, The Bad, and The Bawdy

The Erotic Muse
An uncensored collection of the bawdy songs everybody knows, and no one ever wrote down before.
by Ed Cray

They've been sung by Presidents, Supreme Court Justices and even some censors themselves. They are the bawdy songs, set to traditional tunes that are scribbled on bathroom walls, and echoed through varsity locker rooms. Ed Cray, who serves as the director of publications of the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California, has done an extensive job of putting the words to many of these tunes on paper, and trying to document their origin.

By putting them down on paper, Cray has let these songs come "out of the closet" so to speak. Some of these are over two hundred years old, and survived despite energetic censors and other self righteous guardians of the public morals.

A large part of The Erotic Muse deals with undergraduate course. According to Cray, colleges and universities have played a large part in the preservation of bawdy sons, "the old songs are preserved and new ones created in academe."

For those who remember the "good old days" at the back of the varsity bus, or who are interested in the exact words to your favorite bawdy song that you like to sing at your favorite bar or "smoker", The Erotic Muse might be just what you are looking for. However, if you have never sung a bawdy song, or heard one sung, or are anticipating joining a monastery and never hearing one in the future, The Erotic Muse might be an interesting, and enlightening book to read through, giving you a taste of a significant cultural influence, that until now has remained a "private" sort of thing......to most everyone.

Feiffer's "Visions" Worth Watching

by Frederic C. Weiss

In 1970 when The White House Murder Case by Jules Feiffer first appeared off-Broadway, the Cambodian bombing missions were known by only a select few; the Watergate was a brand new Washington hotel; and a "plumber" was someone who you called when you were having troubles with your drains. However, in this satirical attack of power in high places, and the tendency for the United States to get involved in military misadventures, Feiffer has shown visionary foresight in the age of "Watergate".

The White House Murder Case centers around two related plots. The first deals with the United States "latest" military action — the invasion of Brazil, and the subsequent catastrophe when a Lieutenant Cutler orders the use of CB97 (a brand of newly developed nerve gas) to wipe out the "Chicos" (the South American equivalent to Vietnamese "gooks"). The CB97 is released against these "Chicos", but a change in wind direction blows it back against the U.S. troops, killing 750 and paralyzing another 90. The rest of the battlefield scenes deal with the adventures of the wounded and somewhat neurotic Lieutenant Cutler; his "companion" Captain Weems, a C.I.A. agent posing as an Army Medic, and their physical and mental reactions to the nerve gas.

The second plot deals with the reaction within the White House to this "catastrophe". In the Oval Office, President Hale, meets with his Cabinet to discuss this very sensitive issue to "National Security". The small coterie reviewing the situation consists of a sinister Attorney General; less than brilliant Secretary of Defense Parson (complete with a Kissingeristic German accent); a tedious "good liberal" research Professor named Sweeney, who prides himself on "working for Peace" from within, while working very actively to develop CB97; and Postmaster General Stiles, whose position is due less to competence than electrical power — he is the head of the President's party.

Joining the group, is General Pratt, straight from the Brazilian front, and very much paralyzed from the nerve gas itself. All seem to agree; six weeks before the elections, the truth is bad for national security.

Adding levity to the situation is the President's wife, Mrs. Hale. Despite her husband's lethargic and convenient principles, Mrs. Hale is considered to be a "left wing activist" who spends most of her time "picketing the Pentagon". Her character is portrayed as very Martha Mitchellish, and adds quite a contrast to the rest of the crew.

To tell you much more about the plot would ruin what promises to be a great night at the Theatre for anyone who has the time and money to go. However, I will add one crucial element that would help you better understand the possibilities of plot development. While sitting at her husband's desk, and getting ready to call the Washington Post to inform them that the "Official Explanation" for the gas warfare ("that Brazilian Guerillas exploded our own gas capsules behind our own lines") is a hoax, the First Lady herself is murdered in the Oval Office.

Who killed the First Lady? From here the plot takes on a temporary Agatha Christie angle. For reasons previously explained I will not name the killer. I will however highly recommend The White House Murder Case to anyone who enjoys Jules Feiffer's cartoons, and wouldn't mind reading a whole bunch of them in a row. The play is very much Feiffer in style, politics, satirical humor, and quality.

The performances are for the most part excellent. Armand Assante as the neurotic, wounded, and confused Lieutenant Cutler is the Star of the Show. His performance does more than enough to justify such classification. While going through the Brazilian swamps and absorbing myriad quantities of CB97, Cutler goes through various stages of change. His big desire is to die "All Balls". ("If you only take one chico with you, you're not even a man. If you take 10 or more you're doing good, but if you can take up to 50, you're doing real good. Anything more than 50, you're all balls", he muses). Curt Williams, as Cutler's companion, Captain Weems, also gives a standout performance.

Left to right: Joseph Aufiery as Colonel Dawn, Armande Assante as Lieutenant Cutler, and Max Gulack as General Pratt in THE WHITE HOUSE MURDER CASE.

Ed Bordo, gives a fine performance as Postmaster General Stiles, as does Harry Ellerbe playing the part of Professor Sweeney. Max Gulack is superb as General Gulack, and Martin Rudy is all that and more as Secretary of Defense Parson. Maury Cooper, could have been more credible as President Hale, but he did nothing to hurt the production. I got the feeling that he looked and acted more like a "big city liberal lawyer" than the epitome of middle American moralism in the office of the President. Betty Williams is just fine as Mrs. Hale, and if her part demanded more perhaps she would have left a greater impression in my mind.

The White House Murder Case deals with all the things that make the newspapers so dreary these days (except the energy crisis, that is). Yet what is "dreary" in print, is exciting and quite funny on stage (thanks to the quick wit of Jules Feiffer). The show is really worth seeing; if you get the time try and catch it.

+++The White House Murder Case by Jules Feiffer will be playing at the Stage-West in West Springfield now through March 2nd.

Luther: Does The AFT Filming Technique Work?

by Stuart Sojcher

Luther, with Stacy Keach in the title role, is the fifth in the series of play adaptations for the screen as presented by the American Film Theatre. Directors and stars worked for minimal salaries: thirty-thousand for top directors like Tony Richardson and John Frankenheimer and twenty-five thousand for stars like Katherine Hepburn and Laurence Olivier plus a percentage of the grosses.

Certainly the opportunity to have such distinguished actors, actresses and directors working together on plays by Pinter, O'Neil and Chekhov is a fine one but the basic problem is in filming the play which explains the failure of Luther.

The question arises: is the intent of the filmmaker simply to film a play and present it as such or to film a play and use camera techniques to present a more effective filmic version? One is very aware when watching Luther that one is watching a play, not a movie.

Essentially the play is a strict photographic adaptation shot mostly in medium and close-up shots. The play takes place in a cathedral which was specially built for the production to solve the problems of light and sound control. Though the film calls for changes in place and time a knight-narrator is used to convey the changes. Unfortunately the set itself is to confining, especially for a film. The camera is always focused upon the characters speaking. Reaction shots are few. In some sequences this works well but when off-screen yells and screams of peasants are heard one never sees the people involved. When a Dominican monk comes to "sell indulgences" to the populace, the camera only focuses upon his figure, never to the people to whom he is speaking. Later as Stacy Keach is giving an important speech the camera again only concentrates on him. Is he just rehearsing? As one critic put it "A few shouts and one portable corpse don't suffice for the whole Reformation and fail to convey the rebellion that's taking place."

In the original version of the play by John Osborne more is dealt with Luther's concern with his physical ailments — constipation and excrement, drawing an almost one-to-one correspondence between Luther's intestinal discomfort and his theology. In the film version less emphasis is placed on these problems and more so on Luther's self: the hesitation, doubt, fear and brilliance of a man who played such an important role in the Protestant Reformation. At times half of Keach's face is bathed in light while the other is in darkness capturing the indecisiveness of his character.

Mr. Keach, a distinguished stage actor, doesn't need any 'technical help' to convince us of his character due to a superb acting performance. As the film progresses so does Keach's character from one of weakness to one of growing confidence and strength, yet still permeated by doubt. When Keach speaks or gestures one can sense the anguish that is gnawing at him. The best scene in the film is the confrontation between Luther and his father. Both try to hide their anger and hostility at each other but fail; the father disappointed with Luther for not becoming a lawyer and Luther trying to explain his position. (Yet even here the scene has been shot in deep-focus to emphasize the physical and spiritual barriers between father and son, it would have been that much more effective.) Through their confrontation one senses their distress at not getting along with each other but neither can change — they are worlds apart. All of the characters are well acted, especially Patrick Magee as the father and Hugh Griffith as the mercenary priest.

The next presentation of the American Film Theatre will be Chekhov's Three Sisters directed by Laurence Olivier, in early March.

American Graffiti (1973)
A nostalgic look into the 50's where pop was tops and cars were boss. The plot is not a strong one but the music holds the film together. It is a series of episodes revolving around four high school boys, two of whom will be leaving for college in the East Coast the next day. The film is sheer comedy and enjoyment but states the confusion and trama every youngster has when its time to leave the coop. Playing for the second week at the Academy of Music, Northampton and Mountains Farms Mall.

Ash Wednesday (1973)
Barbara Sawyer (Liz Taylor) secretly flies off to a posh plastic-surgery clinic in Italy for a complete body uplift that transforms a 55-year old woman to a 35-year old woman, with the hopes of winning her husband back (Henry Fonda) from a 25 year old mistress. Director Larry Peerce gives us beautiful scenes of Italy and Liz's wardrobe. Playing at the Mountain Farms Mall.

Babes In Toyland (1961)
A goodie from Walt Disney based on the operetta of Victor Herbert. This film was first made by MGM in 1934 but was issued under 'March of the Wooden Soldiers'. Young kids will love Disney's visual trickery in the love story of Tom and Mary who are to be married but alas wicked Barnaby, (Ray Bolger), steals Tom away in hopes of marrying Mary himself. Bolger is enjoyable as the sly meanie whose humor shines, but not much can be said for Annette Funicello and Tommy Sands as the lovers. Playing at Smith College Sat., Feb. 23 at 2 p.m.

The Burmese Harp (1967)
Kon Ichikawa's long savage epic of the Burmese campaign of 43-44 centers on a soldier who, after horrifying adventures, sees that his vocation is to bury the unknown dead after the war, and who becomes a Buddist monk. Playing at Thompson 106, Fri., Feb. 22, 7 and 9:30 p.m.

Dealing, or 'The Berkley to Boston 40 Brick Bag Blues' (1972)
Plus a Pink Panther Cartoon
Based on a novel by Michael Douglas, it is the story about Peter, who uses his girlfriend Susan to act as a courier, smuggling 40 bricks from California to Boston, and getting caught in Boston. What follows is a nicely done suspense story, wherein a deal is made with the narc officer in exchange for Susan. Of course the 'good guys' win, but the battle is worth it. Barbara Hershy plays the too-perfect Susan, and Robert Lyons plays the too-unperfect Peter at the S.U.B., Sun., Feb. 24 at 7 and 9:30.

The Discreet Charm of The Bourgeoise (1973)
At 72, Brunuel still shines as a master of filmic comedy. The film is a comedy of manners that keeps changing into a surreal nightmare, back to reality, back to a dream, etc. The bourgeoise are a group of corrupt, sleek, gracious people who drive limousines, and are a testament to the power of respectability, as they have made their pile by smuggling heroin into France. Brunuel shatters their peace with one absurdity after another. Playing in the S.U.B. Thur., Feb. 28 at 7 and 9:30.

Don't Look Now (1973)
Nicolas Roeg succeeds with a modernistic style of filming in this thriller about a young couple in Venice whose drowned daughter may or may not be sending them messages. The father refuses to accept his psychic abilities and pays for it. The cutting 'tween shots gives the film a discontinuity, but have a profound effect on the audience. Julie Christie, as the mother, and Donald Sutherland as the father give superb performances, and the audience can expect to surely get their money's worth. Playing at the Campus Cinemas.

Heartbreak Kid (1972)
Written by Neil Simon and directed by Elaine May. A sentimental story of a guy who is attracted to another woman while on his honeymoon, gets divorced, marries woman no. 2 and then finds an attraction to the girl's mother at the wedding reception (and you thought you had problems!). Cybil Shepard is as usual nice to look at. Playing at Sage Hall, Smith College, Sat., Feb. 23, 7:30 & 9:30.

El Topo (1971)
El Topo (the Mole) is a story of a two-part search for truth, light and destruction, set against nature in its most unyielding form, the desert. The film is a total visual conception. Jodorowsky, the director, dazzles us with his ideas and his beautiful rendering of a mysterious tale of life and death at the Amherst Cinema.

Kapo (1964)
The horror of WWII concentration camps is the subject here that drives a young girl to betray her own people in a German camp. Susay Strasberg plays a Parisian Jewess who becomes a Kapo and falls in love with a Russian soldier, and in order to save the other prisoners, after realizing her wrong, sacrifices her life for theirs. The film is a bit soap-operatic, but is emotionally upsetting due to the knowledge that the details are true for that period. Playing at the Merrill Science Ctr. Amherst, Tuesday, Feb. 26, 8 p.m.

Magnum Force (1973)
A sequel to Dirty Harry where Clint Eastwood looks good, doesn't say much and wins in the end. If you've seen one violent, copper story you've seen them all. If not, you can catch this one at the Mountain Farms Mall.

Metropolis (1927)
Fritz-Lang futuristic fantasy, from a script by him and Thea Von Harbou, detailing the horrors of a mechanized utopia. The actual story is a struggle between capital and labor, but with great geometric sets imaginatively handled. At Lecture Room 3, Merrill Center, Amherst, Tuesday, Feb. 26, 8 p.m.

Modern Times (1936)
Chaplin's voice was first heard in this series of hilarious gags which comprise a sociological comedy about how to be happy though poor in the machine age. One of his most consistently funny films. As usual, produced, directed and starring him, with Paulette Goddard as the waif. Playing in Thompson Hall, Monday, Feb. 25. 6, 8 and 10 p.m.

Mississippi Mermaid (1970)
Directed by Francois Truffaut, one of the products and originators of the French New Wave. Playing at the Gamble Auditorium Mount Holyoke, Tuesday, Feb. 26, 8 p.m.

Papillion (1973)
Henry Charriere's autobiography of his attempted escapes. Steve McQueen plays a pimp who is framed (so he says) on a murder charge and sent to prison in French Guiana, whereupon he meets Dustin Hoffman, a counterfeiter sent out on the same ship, eventually becoming fast friends. At the Campus Cinemas. Both stars have won acclaim for their portrayals.

Performance (1970)
Stars Mick Jagger at the Globe, Northampton, 7 and 9 p.m.

The Point (1970)
Written by Nilson and narrated by Dustin Hoffman. A delightful cartoon about a little boy and his dog banished from their land due tc their unpointed heads that make them outcasts in society. The music is as good as the story, sung and written by Nilsson, at the CC Aud. Thursday, Feb. 28, 7, 8:30 and 10 p.m.

Putney Swope (1969)
A hilareous account of the rise of a black Madison Ave. advertising agency called Truth and Soul. Robert Downey has written and directed a funny, brilliant, obscene and relevant film. He makes manic attacks on all things absurd which defines its content. Putney Swope is the agency's black musical director, and shows how to transform the agency into a mad, black brotherhood that rocks with such successes as 'Face — Off, (adolescent skin creme), Lucky Airlines and the Get-Out-Of-Here Mousetrap.' It makes full use of four letter words, whereupon the vignettes of real-life depend simply upon them. The point of view is a nonsensical, comic, and all-around put down which can only delight us. Playing at the Amherst Cinema 7 p.m.

Robin Hood (1973)
A Disney film that is not of the calibre of previous year, but will delight nonetheless. Terry Thomas supplies the voice for Sir Hiss, a snake who soothes Prince John and is in charge of the royal treasury. Peter Ustinov makes a pleasing prince, all in good nature at the Campus Cinemas.

Savage Messiah
Playing at the Globe, Northampton, Feb. 22 and 23, 11 p.m.

The Sting (1973)
Two Chicago con men of the 30's take a big Irish racket boss from New York for a big bundle. Good dialogue with surprises, and a good job done by Paul Newman and Robert Redford. Playing at the Mountain Farms Mall.

Three Stooges Shorts
Come for a laugh at Thompson 104 Friday, Feb. 22, 7, 9 and 11 p.m.

The Trial (1963)
Orson Welles attempts to put Kafka on the screen. Filmed in a French railway station, offering some opportunities for bravura direction and photography. Anthony Perkins plays the young man, a victim of injustice, and Welles plays his lawyer. CC Aud. Sat., Feb. 23 at 7 and 9:30.

Waxworks (1924)
Directed by Paul Leni, who was an important figure of German expressionistic cinema. Waxworks studies three tyrants in a trio of linked stories. Playing at Thompson 102, Tuesday, Feb. 26, 7 and 9 p.m.

Wild Strawberries (1959)
Directed by Ingmar Bergman and starring Victor Seastrom along with Bibi Anderson. Bergman's quietly showmanlike film about old age, superbly written by him and photographed by Gunmar Fisher. Its movement from past to present and back is particularly well achieved and for once Bergman manages to make all his points explicit in this story of an old man traveling to the University of Lund, where he will be honored. During the voyage, he reflects on many events and phases of his life. He concludes that he was admired but never loved. Seastrom exquisitely plays the old man. Main Lecture Hall, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College 8 p.m.

Four hundred feet of the Northeast Utilities' Montague gased weather tower toppled to the ground this weekend, as an Amherst College graduate registers his rebellion against nuclear power plants.

Amherst college grad topples weather tower

By LARRY CARPMAN

MONTAGUE — A 27-year-old Amherst College graduate and member of a literary commune here has admitted to the Friday toppling of a Northeast Utilities owned weather tower that was collect atmosphereic data to be used in an application for construction of a nuclear power plant by the utility following Atomic Energy Commission approval next year.

Samuel H. Lovejoy, the Monatague resident who has confessed to toppling the Northeast Utilities tower, said yesterday he had been contemplating the act for a long time.

"It's not a very radical act, he said, rather it's civil disobedience.

The bright orange tower which originally stood at 500 feet was used to accumulate weather data for the proposed nuclear power plant to be built in the area. According to Charled R. Bragg, vice-president for public relations at Northeast Utilities, the tower and the meterological equipment were valued at $50,000 to $60,000. At present 100 feet of the tower still stands.

Lovejoy was arrested at 3:55 a.m. on Friday morning while he was walking along Montague Road. Turners Falls Police Chief Edward Hughes said Lovejoy gave him a four-page statement on how he sabotaged the tower.

(At his arraignment Friday, Lovejoy issued a four-page statement to the press detailing why he wrecked the tower. See related stories page 3 and 11.)

"With the obvious danger of a nuclear power plant, with the biological finality of atomic radiation, a clear duty was mine. Lovejoy says in his statement, to secure for my community the welfare and safety that the government has not only refused to provide, but has conspired to destroy."

In a Collegian interview Lovejoy said: "We don't have the political resources to stop the plants or the big-shot lawyers to get injunctions."

Lovejoy who has initially charged with malicious destruction of personal property is a graduate of Amherst College. He was associated editor of the Amherst Student and a member of the now defunct Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

A professor who has asked to remain annoymous said at the time he knew Lovejoy he "demonstrated a lack of patience." Lovejoy, according to this same professor, was "imaginative and striving but lacked the governing strength of moderation."

In the interview Lovejoy said: "I want a jury to go through the charges and see if they want to live next to a nuclear power plant."

The people who believe nuclear power plants are necessary to ease the current energy crisis are "duped" according to Lovejoy.

"Technology's promises are now technology's problems," he said. "The answer to the so-called energy crisis is to sit down and tighten our belts," Lovejoy said.

With the proposed nuclear plant Montague gets the money and Amherst gets the radiation, Lovejoy said.

With the proposed nuclear plant Montague gets the money and Amherst gets the radiation, Lovejoy said.

Lovejoy lives on a commune in Montague with nini other persons. The hidden farmhouse where he lives is about three miles from the tower site. At present there is a 24-hour police watch at the site.

Meanwhile, a Montague resident who lives closest to the tower said he wants the nuclear plant to "keep the town from becoming stagnant."

James Booker, also a welder at the Physical Plant, said: "I don't feel that a plant will hurt anybody. I know of no facts where nuclear plants hurt people," he said.

Charles Bragg said the tower would be replaced as soon as possible, but that he could not estimate how long it would take.

Lovejoy is the son of Mrs. John M. Lovejoy of Wilbraham and brother of Selectman John Lovejoy also of Wilbraham.

The 'streak' hits UMass

(AP) — The first reported incident of "streaking" at the University of Massachusetts here has resulted in a $25 fine for Brian A. Sangster, 23, of Beverly.

Sangster placed nolo contendre in Northampton District Court Saturday. He was the only person apprehended after ten youths were seen streaking — making a mad dash in public with no clothes on — across the streets of a residential campus area early Saturday morning.

Police identified Sangster as an unemployed visitor to the campus. He was staying with friends in a dormitory.

Boys will be boys...but some may never grow up. Saturday night in the Campus Center, again, was highlighted by a fight outside the Blue Wall.

GOP candidates advised not to ride on 'Nixon's coattails'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief strategist for House Republican candidates is telling them to get away from President Nixon's coattails if they have to and go after the landslide conservative moderate vote of 1972.

"The basic issues that people made a choice on in 1972 are just as alive today as they were then," Rep. Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., said in an interview.

Michel is chairman of the House Republican Congressional Campaign Committee.

Besides the obvious campaign difficulties of Watergate, the economy and energy crisis issues, he said, Republicans are getting only about a third of the big campaign contributions they did in 1972.

With that big a slice out of the $1 million fund for helping some 260 GOP challengers try to unseat House Democrats, Michel said, "I've got a real, real problem. And there's no use kidding yourself."

Michel refused to discuss how many House seats Republicans might lose in November, saying "that wouldn't do anyone any good."

But he said this year is comparable to 1958 when the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower was popular but the country was in a recession and Republicans lost 47 House seats.

"If I just look at the hard, cold statistics on what effect the state of the economy has on an election, why you know that scares me," he said.

"So that's why I keep making the point to the administration how important it is to preserve jobs," Michel said.

Michel said the strategy he is advising for Republicans is to keep Watergate and the economy from dominating their campaigns and stress that only a Republican can give the 1972 voters for Nixon the kind of representation they want in Congress.

The narrower a Republican congressman's margin of victory was in 1972, the more obviously he will have to run on his own record this year, Michel said.

"And if that means separating yourself from the administration and the President particularly, then I say go ahead and do it."

Michel said that "if you get a Congress with a margin on the Democratic side of even more than the present 50 votes, then you can really kiss the country goodbye. Then you've got George Meany running not only the Congress but the country."

Michel said AFL-CIO President Meany "already has too many members of Congress in his pocket."

Action taken to reduce burden on water supply

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Steps have been taken to reduce the burden placed by UMass on Amherst's water supply and sewer system, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has reported in a letter to Amherst Board of Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan.

The letter, dated Feb. 8 and recently made public, was in response to a letter from Sullivan urging the chancellor to consider such action in recognition of water and sewer problems in the town.

Letters were also sent by Sullivan to Amherst and Hampshire colleges. The three colleges are the town's largest water consumers with UMass accounting for 52 per cent, Amherst College five per cent, and Hampshire College 1.6 per cent of the town's water consumption. These figures were compiled by an assistant to the town engineer.

Bromery reports that the university's Energy Conservation Committee (ECC) will be taking up the issue of air conditioning on campus and ways for reducing its demand on town water supplies, and that an awareness subcommittee of ECC will campaign to reduce the university's over-all water consumption and shift use to non-peak hours.

In his letter, Sullivan had suggested the installation of special water-saving shower heads and float valves in the toilets. He also suggested that laundry rooms be locked from 8 a.m. to noon and during late afternoon hours.

Nikolais Dance: incredible!

By ZOE BEST

(MDC Photo-Roberta Martone)

Dancers from the Alwin Nickolais Company, performing in "Sanctum". Unusual lighting techniques added to the already superior skills of the dancers, in the Friday and Saturday night performances at Bowker Auditorium.

Alwin Nikolais and the Nikolais Dance Company appeared in Bowker Auditorium Saturday evening. The performance was no less than an incredible syncronization of choreography, sound, costume, light and stage sets designed by Nikolais himself. The techniques derived from technology and the access to technology (derivitives of empire surplus profits) were so finely integrated into form and content that the three suites were just as overwhelming as the first televised moon-landing.

The first dance sequence from "Sanctum" opened to a view of neon-wave rhythms backdropped by a horizon of abstract, organic projections. The dancers' corpuscular movements, enclosed and defined by most likely a space-technology produced elastic fabric, depicted an interior, cellular world that progressed to copulative-orgiastic pulsations which subsided into statue-like sculptures of tombstone figures.

The first duet, danced by Gerald Otte and James Tetters, vaunted herky-jerky, rat-race and sometimes hoydenish depictions. The sequel to this series of dance dramatizations in amplified urbanities hurled the dancers' bodies into a line-up of unitone people standing at attention hypnotized in a state of foreboding suspension.

The second dance sequence, "Scenario" elucidated even more precisely the pop-hip style of "modern" society. To oscillating electronic music and lights, dancers, first as workers emitted repetitive factory movements, then as over-worked workers, lurched into hostile and neurotic gesticulations, and as bureaucracy-slaves ran in nurse and secretary fashion from one cubicle to the next. Out on the street, young gangster-to-be males dove after an invisible nothing. The society, the city, the prison, the psychiatric ward, the couple produced grey ghosts of fears. Hysterical laughter punctuated the "scenario". Once the dancers froze. They had become targets. The people were projected as riff-raff; babbling, screaming, demanding, articulating nothing except "help" whereupon the great white sex symbol appears to offer salvation, strip.

This then was the anti-people message of this dance creation. The "potential as a revolutionary artist", the initial response to Alwin Nikolais and his dance company by John Martin in 1956, was not apparent, unless one would say that in reference to his use of technology and in deference to the content of his presentations. Perhaps since 1956, the U.S. State Department, the Guggenheim and Fulbright Foundations, the U.S. Office of Health, Education and Welfare and an appointment by Nelson Rockefeller were a succession of patronages which generated the venereal effects in the dance compositions.

The concluding dance of mannequins, mechanical toys, stripped of lyrical passion and still moving in syncopations to the electronic sounds, (pace-maker heart-beats), tried the subway as a bedroom for their non-harmonic encounters. The detached, joyless run-ins, grotesquely splintered into comical antics: The trials and tribulations of a midget in love who attempts to envoke a lover's response from a giant, a rigidified cadaver; and a quartet of guys and dolls, exuberant in pastel gaity demonstrated the failings in following Playboy "new happiness via new position" theory. The guys and dolls laughed. Most of the audience laughed.

The disciplined dancers provided superb continuity throughout the three suites.

The kinetic, optic overlay did not conceal the import of these dance compositions, that of the malignant sexual psychoses, an imperative ingredient for The Mass Psychology of Fascism. The final scene of "Foreplay" culminated in genital exposure (via the stage projectors) and led one to ask, "Is this the pornographic answer to the 'end'?"

Carnegie: women reaching higher

By VALERIE CLEMENT

The Carnegie Project recently opened its new office in Goodell 507, and its primary goal will be to "encourage more women to become full fledged professionals and leaders in fields that have traditionally been rarely chosen by women and by their example help make a wider range of opportunities apparent to women."

The "Faculty Fellows" of the Carnegie Project are Drs. Mary Barber and Joan Bean. Their research assistants, Carol Dersham and Ellen Wolf will be collecting data to determine why women become discouraged from entering professional careers.

Barber and Bean are both professionals who, through their own personal experiences, have encountered many of the barriers which confront women. They can therefore help women who are considering tradional non-feminine careers.

Along with the counseling program is an opportunity for students to serve as interns and "acquire technical skills and competence in fields now predominantly male." Two interns per semester will be chosen to receive stipends of $750 for working in their area.

The program will be supplemented by Outreach which will make an effort to place those who do not receive stipends. Dersham said she hopes "to encourage women to take a risk in an area not considered a known field for women". She says the program is "still flexible" and because it is so new all areas for expansion have not yet been explored. Eventually she hopes that the Carnegie Project can also "work with research and residential centers at the University".

The research team, Ms. Dersham and Ms. Wolf, will assist Barber and Bean in compiling data and drawing conclusions concerning the University community and its treatment of women in every category. Their research will cover areas from administrative positions to admissions and financial aid procedures for women students.

They will also try to determine how the University directs women in career choices. It is the consensus that women are channeled into careers such as elementary school teaching and social work, and are discouraged from entering fields such as engineering or medicine.

Student crafts create bazaar

By E. PATRICK McQUAID

Walking through the Campus Center on any weekday one is swept away to an archaic bazaar. The luring tones of a flute, the jingling of change, voices haggling over prices all set the exotic atmosphere of a Persian market.

What does it take to be a leather craftsman, a flute maker, or a fashioner of fine jewelry?

"Patience and persistence," says Dave Murray, a senior Philosophy major who's in the leather trade.

Dave has always had an interest in what he could do with his hands and after looking in enough store windows he decided to work with leather.

"I saw all these expensive things," he said, "Belts, wallets, and the like that looked fairly easy to make. So, I gave it a try."

In 1972 Dave began studying leather craft on his own through books and various periodicals. He did take a course at the YMCA but found it not to his liking.

"The instructor knew what he was doing," he continued, "But the class was mostly older people who wanted to work on simple leather kits. But, for twenty bucks I did learn some stamping."

Tool stamping is a method of imprinting patterns onto a material by simply hammering set designs from a metal device.

Working in a cellar off campus, Dave has evolved from a simple hobbyist to an accomplished craftsman. This is his third semester as a merchant and he feels quite confident of himself and his work. As he put it, "What I do I know that I know."

The Campus Center foyer is open to any student who creates his own merchandise and does not compete with the Book Store. There is a maximum of three days per week and each day the student must sign in at the Information desk. If he has not done so by 10:00 a.m. his table will be given away.

The area is free to all students but is also open to commercial business at five dollars per half day and ten for a full day's use.

"People think that because we're out here at tables that our merchandise is below the stores," said Dave. "This women once said she could buy a wallet at Zayre's for three bucks. Sure she could, but the fine quality is lacking. For what you're getting, the prices here are better than any retail store."

Leather is the biggest business down at the Campus Center, and Dave feels that he has cornered the market on wallets and wrist-watch bands.

"Like I say," he continues, "people don't look closely at things. These watch bands have been called everything from dog collars to belts!"

Competition at the Campus Center is less fierce than commercial business. Most of the merchants know each other — not all on good terms — but there is little if any friction between them. The tradesmen recognize each others' abilities and look upon one another as artists.

"I'd say that more than seventy percent of what's down here is above par," says Dave. "But, like any business, you've got to keep coming up with new things or you sink."

Down at the "Persian market" one can find posters, prints, jewelry, leather, flutes, and even politics. But most of all, and this can't be missed. one finds quality. Here is the difference, it seems, between an artifact purchased at an outside shop and one obtained at the Center.

The profits are not so high. Many of the merchants could be working for factories that mass produce the same articles, but they remain above the assembly line artists. As Dave puts it, "I'm doing my own stuff and I want it to come out decent. I'm working for me; they work for the man."

The scoop on the mall

Last August, Charles Schnier Enterprises of Bloomfield, Connecticut opened a nearly $5 million dollar shopping mall on Route 9 in Hadley.

With thirty-three stores within a mile of Amherst and a 1,200 parking lot, "Mountain Farms Mall" has already had a major effect on UMass and route 9.

Who gets the jobs in the Mass? How has it changed existing traffic pattern? What does it mean for the long standing stores in the downtown Amherst area?

Tomorrow, Collegian reporter and UMass student Larry Carpman examines these questions and others in a three-part series titled: "The Mall — What does it mean for you?" Don't miss it.

Gut courses may be passing fads, but Thursday's the last day for drops and adds.

Apply now for pilot training

Marine Officer Programs

College men who join the Marine Corps platoon leaders class don't do it for the money. They do it for the opportunity to develop their leadership abilities before they graduate. All the training is during the early or late summer only. Upon graduation you are commissioned a Lieutenant of Marines.

But the money can come in — and it can come in handy: besides pay during training you are eligible to receive $100 a month every month of the school year — up to a maximum of $2700 during a college career.

The PLC program also welcomes men who plan to continue on to law school. The PLC program lets you continue your schooling uninterrupted until your law training is complete.

Your college education could lead to a rewarding association with the Marine Corps. The PLC is a great way to start. For complete information see the Marine officer selection team that visits University of Massachusetts on Monday and Tuesday, the 25th and 26th of February 1974 to discuss officer programs that are available. The team visiting the Campus will be located in the Memorial Hall from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Information on Marine Officer Programs can be obtained by contacting the Marine Officer Selection Office, 135 High Street, Hartford, Connecticut 06101. Phone 244-2168 or 244-2169.

Bromery criticizes Collegian cartoon

UMass-Amherst chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday labelled as "racist, disrespectful and insulting" a cartoon printed in Friday's Collegian.

In the most outspoken reaction to a Collegian cartoon to date, chancellor Bromery said a Friday cartoon by illustrator and UMass student Don McGilvary "either had to be racist, or it had to stupidly childish."

Bromery made his comments through press spokesman Daniel Melley and later in a telephone call with The Collegian's managing editor.

(See related editorial, page 8.)

"I had probably a dozen people call me to say they regret that the thing appeared in The Collegian as unfortunate," Bromery said by phone.

Melley said in a statement: "The chancellor considers the cartoon racist, disrespectful to the office of the chancellor and personally insulting," adding, "strange but true, the cartoonist is a member of our own university community."

McGilvary was unavailable for comment last night. Friends said he had travelled to Boston for the weekend as was not due back until late last night, past The Collegian deadline.

Collegian managing editor Bill Densmore said: "I must take responsibility for the publication of any non-editorial material in The Collegian, but I certainly don't condone overt racism or disrespectful treatment of campus officials in print.

I share Chancellor Bromery's distaste for disrespectful and childish commentary, and I am sure the chancellor shares my conviction to print without interference whatever material we feel is of social value to the community.

Mr. McGilvary's cartoon Friday was in poor taste and represents just the kind of abuse of the public trust the new editors of The Collegian hope to avoid."

Montague tower incident evokes strong reaction

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Reaction to the destruction last Friday of the Montague environmental tower and instruments by Samuel H. Lovejoy has been one of general condemnation.

Ron Bogart, director of WMPIRG said, "We certainly don't condone that sort of activity."

Mrs. Portia Weiskel of the Hampshire-Franklin Committee to Safeguard Against Nuclear Dangers declared, "I don't believe this is the right dialogue. We certainly don't advocate it."

Montague Selectmen Chairman Joseph E. H. Bonnette said, "He's a nut. What else can be said about a person like that."

Donald H. Skole, another Montague Selectman, said, "I am pondering what Mr. Lovejoy would feel like if I decided to burn down his house because I don't like his way of living."

Seth Many, spokesman for the Nuclear Objectors, said, "Each objector will approach nuclear power differently. But, as with the Vietnam War and conscientious objectors, if each is willing to accept the consequences of his act and if each believes in the truth of his beliefs, then the act is justified."

Dr. Robert May, a spokesman of the Montague Nuclear Concerns Group, and a clinical psychologist at Amherst College, said, "While we can understand people having strong feelings, we think the action is unfortunate and regrettable." Ironically enough, both May and Lovejoy are members of the Chestnut Hill Commune in Montague.

Mr. John M. Lovejoy, Lovejoy's brother, and a selectman in Wilbraham, said, "I have no comment whatsoever. I had no knowledge of the incident. I have only spoken to my brother once since Friday." Lovejoy refused to comment on that conversation.

The 1500 acre site in Montague has been a scene of controversy since the Northeast Utilities Service Company first proposed construction of a 2300 megawatt nuclear power plant last December.

Debate by various citizens groups (Montague Nuclear Concerns Group, the Hampshire-Franklin Committee to Safeguard Against Nuclear Dangers), MassPIRG (Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group), Northeast Utilities, and Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO), has ensued concerning the safety and environmental suitability of the proposed plant.

Faculty Senate adopts rhetoric entrance exam

By FRED NOBLES

Joseph Frank, Head of the English Department, is not pleased with the outcome of the recent Faculty Senate. Their revision calls for the establishment of a "diagnostic exam" to be given to all incoming students to determine what Rhetoric courses would best fill their particular needs.

Rhetoric courses, he believes, should be "changed from required to advised." He sees little value in teaching Rhetoric if a student "feels dragged into class against his will."

Disturbed by what he referred to as Student Senate President Nick Apostola's "evasiveness" on the issue of required courses, Professor Frank prepared the following statement:

"I am disappointed but not surprised by Nick Apostola's actions at the Faculty Senate meeting last week: disappointed because he seemed again to go against the student desire to eliminate fixed requirements; not surprised because this is how I predicted he would behave when I appeared before the Student Senate last fall. Perhaps the Student Senate could speak for itself by passing a resolution that the Rhetoric requirement be dropped and then asking the Faculty Senate to reconsider its decision."

Dr. Frank noted that when both Dartmouth and Smith dropped their writing course requirements, "90 per cent of the students took writing courses voluntarily."

In place of a Rhetoric requirement Professor Frank would like to see "the establishment of a writing skills center that any student could be referred to at any time." He admits that such a "tutorial center" would be expensive but the benefits would certainly outweigh the costs.

As an example Professor Frank noted, "This University is currently underrepresented in Puerto Rican students; partly because they are Spanish speaking and partly because they are from poor schools." Professor Frank popes that the institution of a more individualized system will allow students to seek out specific help for their particular problems. He does not believe in the current practice whereby, "its easier if you're giving one hundred sections to homogenize them."

Of the various attractions at China Nite, a display of the five schools of Kung Fu was one of the more interesting demonstrations. Other performances included traditional Chinese dance and song.

Black Scientists Society holds second annual 'Minority Day'

By BILL NEMITZ

Demonstrations ranging from "Robots in Manufacturing" to "Lasar Communication" were among the highlights Saturday as the Second Annual "Minority Day" was conducted by the School of Engineering and the Black Scientists Society.

Approximately 150 minority high school students from the Boston and Springfield areas arrived here Saturday morning as guests of the two organizations.

The program began with welcoming talks by Chancellor Bromery, Trent Poole, co-director of the Black Scientist Society, and Dean Picha of the School of Engineering. A panel discussion titled "Why Engineering" followed, giving the students an opportunity to speak directly with both professional engineers and members of the BSS.

The rest of the day was devoted mainly to a series of demonstrations conducted by professors in the School of Engineering. Travelling in ten small groups, the students said they found the demonstrations both informative and enjoyable. Among the presentations of particular interest were "Robots in Manufacturing", by Professor Murch and "Computer Graphics", by Professor Ehrich.

Founded in the fall of 1972 by Dr. Rhody McCoy, CCEBS director, the Black Scientists Socitey is an RSO group affiliated with the National Black Student Science Society. According to its co-directors, Trent Poole and Greg Sommerville, the Society provides Black science students with the mans of organizing their particular interests and developing programs within those areas.

The School of Engineering, working through its Engineering Career Opportunities Program (ECO), is trying to provide opportunities for increased minority representation in the engineering field. The next major program on the agenda, according to ECO director Professor John Ritter, is a three week summer program for tenth and eleventh grade minority students. Expenses for the participants will be paid for with School of Engineering funds donated by a number of industries.

Farah strike ends; union recognized

NEW YORK (AP) — A bitter 21-month-old strike and nationwide boycott against Farah Manufacturing Co. ended Sunday with announcement of a settlement recognizing the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America as the bargaining agent for workers at the Texas firm.

The company, a major producer of men's trousers and slacks, decided to recognize the union and rehire the strikers after it was determined that the majority of Farah employes has signed union cards.

The ACWA informed the company on Friday that it has signed up a majority — 67 per cent — of the workers.

After this was verified by El Paso mayor Fred Harvey, who was named as an impartial third party in the dispute, Farah agreed to settle.

William "Willie" Farah president of the company, did not want to talk about losses incurred during the strike which shut down four plants. But he conceded the boycott had a "very vicious effect."

He said the plants — two in San Antonio and one each in Victoria, Texas and Las Cruces, N.M. — would be reopened and workers rehired as soon as possible. "We want to get back to our 23 per cent growth rate," he said. Five Farah plants have remained open.

The strike began on May 2, 1972, when about 2,000 workers, mostly Mexican-Americans, walked out in a dispute over union representation.

Farah, who had replaced the strikers with other workers from a large pool of Mexican-Americans in the area, contended that an election should be held among employes to determine union representation.

The AMCA claimed this could subject workers to intimidation and launched a boycott which was supported by the AFL-CIO, Catholic and Protestant clergymen, Jewish groups and a number of student and civic organizations.

The walkout at plants in El Paso and San Antonio had been sparked by claims from some employes that a group of workers had been fired for union organizing. A majority of the company's 9,000-plus workers had remained on the job.

Farah said the settlement was "not my decision; it's a process of law." This was a reference to the fact that the union signed up of a majority of workers at the company.

However, union sources pointed to two other factors as leading to the agreement: A sharply worded recent decision against Farah by an administrative law judge of the National Labor Relations Board, and the intention and ability by the union to continue indefinitely the strike and boycott.

FTC threatens agribusiness with antitrust action

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Federal Trade Commission says antitrust action against the food industry seems likely as the result of a broad investigation now underway.

Chairman Lewis A. Engman said in an interview he also expects further commission action in the engery field. The FTC already issued a complaint that the eight major petroleum companies are engaged in anticompetitive practices.

Engman said investigations in both fields are linked to his vow last July to help prevent inflation through "tough enforcement of the antitrust laws."

Engman successfully sought an additional $2 million in the new federal budget for the bureau of competition. He implied in the interview that this money will be aimed at enforcement efforts in the energy andfood industries.

But some, inculding the Food Action Campaign, have asked the commission to stage a broader, systematic attack on the food industry.

The campaign, a consumer action group, said that the food industry in recent years has fallen prey to the same bottom to top integration which the FTC says afflicts the petroleum industry.

Senate to vote on pay hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate may vote in this week on the issue the House is expected to duck: Whether to block a pay raise for Congress members and other top government officials.

A three-step increase in congressional salaries, at a rate of 7.5 per cent a year, is to take effect March 6 unless either the Senate or the House disapproves it.

It would give Senate and House members their first pay increase in five years, from the present $42,500 a year $45,700 this year, $49,100 next year and $52,800 in 1976.

Cabinet members and other high-level executive officials, as well as federal judges, also would have their salaries raised in the absence of a congressional veto.

The timing of a Senate vote is uncertain, but Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., the assistant majority leader, said it might be Thursday or Friday.

The Senate first may take up a far-reaching campaign reform bill that combines public financing with limitations on expenditures and private contributions.

In the House, floor action will center on a bill to reform private pension systems. A measure of this kind passed the Senate last year.

And more maneuvering is in prospect in the House in an effort to salvage an emergency energy bill that has been buffeted around in Congress in a dispute over oil industry profits.

The latest version approved by the Senate, including a price rollback for about one quarter of domestically-produced oil, suffered a near death blow in the House Rules Committee last week.

The measure also is threatened with a presidential veto.

The touchy pay raise issue was thrust on Congress in any election year by the budget President Nixon submitted earlier this month.

British election seen close; liberals may hold key role

LONDON (AP) — Insiders of both the ruling Conservative and opposition Labor parties are forecasting a photo finish in Thursday's general elections.

There are suggestions too that moderate Liberals under Jeremy Thorpe will realize their old dreams of a powerbalancing role if Prime Minister Edward Heath and Labor party leader Harold Wilson fail to achieve an over-all margin of House of Commons seats.

Most of the public opinion polls, some owned by pro-Conservative newspapers, make Heath the frontrunner. Most of them were proven wrong in 1970 when Heath snatched a stunning victory from Wilson against all odds.

But Heath is facing a minirebellion within his own party. Conservative maverick Enoch Powell hinted Saturday that Britons should vote for Labor as the only way to retain their sovereignty in the Common Market. Labor is pledged to renegotiate the terms of Britain's market membership if it wins the elections.

On Friday the government-appointed Pay Board torpedoed Heath's claims that striking coal miners' pay was relatively high and that they were holding the country to ransom over demands for an increase that goes above his anti-inflation guidelines.

Kissinger to tour Mid-east anew

Peace forces to be kept alive

WASHINGTON (AP) — In his new tour of the Middle East, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger intends to confer with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat about extending the life of the United Nations peace-keeping force in the Sinai Peninsula.

Kissinger's main task, as he heads out Monday, is to bring Syria and Israel together to negotiate a disengagement of their armies in the Golan Heights.

Sadat, in Lahore, Pakistan, winding up a two-day visit to the Islamic summit, was optimistic Sunday about Kissinger's mission and said disengagement on the Syrian front "will be a very good step" toward lifting the Arab oil embargo against the Untied States.

The summit on Saturday condemned the United States and other nations that support Israel. It also demanded major concessions from Israel, including unconditional withdrawal from occupied territoris and the restoration of Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty.

Kissinger's effort to keep the U.N. contingent in place between Egyptian and Israeli troops also is a key to keeping the peace in the Middle East.

The U.N. force was authorized for only six months. This ends on April 27. It would take a follow-up positive step by the Security Council to keep the force in the buffer zone.

Egypt so far is the only Arab state to work out even a partial agreement with Israel.

There is considerable anxiety in official Washington circles that unless Israel comes to terms with Syria and then follows quickly with a second-phase withdrawal in Sinai, Sadat may find himself so isolated in the Arab world that he might feel impelled to move against the Jewish state again.

Kissinger's primary concern at the moment is to maintain diplomatic momentum by bringing a so-far recalcitrant Syria into the peace process.

A senior U.S. official who declined to be identified, stressed that Kissinger would not be going to Damascus and Jerusalem after a stopover in London if he were not confident he could bring Syria into the peace talks.

Sudat sees force disengagement

LAHORE, Pakistan (AP) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat predicted Sunday that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger probably will succeed in achieving a disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces during his upcoming Middle East mission.

But the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Rai Al-Aam reported from Lahore that Syrian President Hafez Assad said he was not optimistic about prospects of reaching a military disengagement accord with Israel.

It quoted Assad as declaring his "irrevocable determination to obtain complete Israeli withdrawal" from occupied Arab territories.

Assad and Sadat were both attending the Islamic summit in Lahore.

"We are not optimistic about the situation on the front...and there is no single tangible move on Israel's side for the withdrawal," the paper quoted Assad as saying.

"Syria will never make any concessions" regarding the complete withdrawal demand, Assad said.

In Jerusalem, government officials said Israel has still not formulated any proposals for Kissinger to take to Damascus.

They said Israel continues to refuse to negotiate until Damascus hands over a list of Israeli prisoners it captured in the October war, and allows Red Cross officers to visit them.

Sadat's prediction for Kissinger's success in the Middle East came during a news conference at the end of a two-day visit to the Islamic summit.

The summit on Saturday condemned the United States and other nations that support Israel. It also demanded major concessions from Israel, including unconditional withdrawal from occupied territories and the restoration of Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty.

"If there is no disengagement on the Syrian front, there will be less chance, or no chance, of peace," he warned.

But Sadat expressed optimism about Kissinger's mission and said disengagement on the Syrian front "will be a very good step."

Accused Murphy kidnappers held in maximum security

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The two accused abductors of Atlanta Constitution Editor Reg Murphy were being held in maximum security yesterday.

Asst. U.S. Atty. William Gaffney said, "At this time I know of no reason to conclude that there were more than two people involved."

Murphy, who positively identified William A.H. Williams as his captor from photographs, said during his captivity the man told him three other men and a woman were also involved.

The group purported to represent the hitherto unknown "American Revolutionary Army," whose existence is now being questioned.

The 40-year-old editor said Saturday he is sure there were two persons, a man and woman, but isn't sure if more were involved. He was blindfolded during the 49-hour ordeal.

Murphy was led from his home Wednesday night by a man claiming to have 300,000 gallons of fuel oil to donate to needy causes. He said he wanted Murphy to help distribute it.

After they drove away, the man pulled a gun and ordered Murphy to tape his eyes.

Williams, 33, and his wife, Betty Ruth, 26, were being held on charges of extorting money from a firm involved in interstate commerce and failure to report a crime.

Murphy was ransomed for $700,000 Friday after being held for more than two days. He positively identified Williams as his captor Saturday from films and photographs.

The FBI said Sunday it still had not finished counting the "voluminous amount of U.S. currency" found at the Williams' one-story home near Atlanta at the time of their arrest.

Williams was charged with violating the Hobbs Act, which carries a maximum penalty of up to $10,000 fine or 20 years in prison or both. He is under bond of $1 million.

Mrs. Williams is charged with failures to report the crime. Gaffney said she could receive up to a $500 fine or three years imprisonment or both if convicted. She is being held under bond of $500,000.

The FBI refused to confirm or deny that Williams kept a diary, but CBS reported it has located a diary belonging to Williams.

Hearst waits for response after pledging $4 million

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) — Three weeks ago Monday night Patricia Hearst was dragged from her apartment by kidnapers. Sunday, the Hearst family waited for word from the terrorists on whether they would release their captive in exchange for a pledge of another $4 million in food for the poor.

The organizers of a $2 million food program already set up work to improve distribution techniques. They said there would be more volunteers and more distribution centers when the giveaway resumes Tuesday.

"A great many mistakes were made Friday," said A. Ludlow Kramer, Washington secretary of state who organized the program known as People in Need. "But they were mistakes we had to take a chance on, because we had a commitment."

Kramer referred to violence and confusion at several of the four distribution centers. There were about 30 arrests, but Kramer said that free food was passed out to several thousand persons despite the problems.

The program is operating with $500,000 provided by Miss Hearst's father, Randolph A. Hearst, and $1.5 million from the nonprofit Hearst Foundation.

It was set up in response to initial demands from the Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims to have kidnaped Miss Hearst, for food for California's poor. The SLA said the $2 million was not enough and demanded another $4 million from Hearst personally - a demand that the president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner said he could not meet.

Examiner publisher Charles Gould said the Hearst Foundation would put up another $2 million immediately if Miss Hearst is released unharmed and promised $2 million more in January 1975.

Gould's proposal was a departure from the conditions first set by the SLA in which the food giveaway was to be considered only preliminary to negotiations for her release.

Authorities have speculated that the SLA's ultimate demand, in exchange for Miss Hearst's life, would be the release of two men charged with the ambush killing Nov. 6 of Oakland Schools Supt. Marcus Foster. An SLA communique claimed responsibility for the assassination.

A tape-recorded SLA message last week, the fourth since the Feb. 4 abduction of the coed who turned 20 on Feb. 20, labeled the $2 million food givaway "a few crumbs."

The communique, received Wednesday night, said all communication would be cut off unless the additional $4 million was made available within 24 hours.

There has been no further word from the SLA, the FBI said Sunday.

Simon says rationing possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy chief William E. Simon said Sunday that if motorists were lined up on a widespread basis for two to three hours outside service stations to buy gasoline, "it would become necessary for me to recommend rationing."

But Simon stressed in a broadcast interview that he believes the three-week-old gasoline-allocation program will end the "suffering and hardship and inconvenience." He repeated his opposition to coupon rationing.

Problems of intrastate distribution of gasoline have made long lines and closed stations a driving characteristic mainly in urban centers, he said on NBC's "Meet the Press" program.

Simon acknowledged that the allocation program has inequities that will require time for resolution.

On Saturday, Simon announced that 90 per cent of the nation's stations may raise prices this Friday by an extra two cents a gallon.

He called the boost "a modest increase" as opposed to the "unmanageable" one operator sought.

The two-cent boost superceded a one-cent increase announced Feb. 16 for stations with less than 85 per cent allocation of 1972 supplies.

Simon said Sunday that the broader two-cent increase was thought to be "easier to administer and have less impact on the consumer" than variable rate increases.

The increase applies to all stations not directly owned by the major oil companies and is in addition to the monthly cost pass-throughs stations already are allowed. The pass-throughs so far have averaged two or three cents a gallon, officials said.

Simon said that he believes he has a "period of flexibility" during which he can tap gasoline stockpiles - as he ordered last week, to get supplies to severely hit areas. Inventories are now 1.5 per cent above the level of a year ago and refineries have begun the switch he directed toward producing more gasoline before the normal springtime increase in demand, he explained.

Other action during the past week included:

—The FEO said petroleum imports for the previous week were down slightly, to 4.79 million barrels a day, from the 4.9 million barrels daily that had been expected under the Arab oil embargo.

—Delaware and New York became the fifth and sixth states to announce mandatory gas plans that allow a motorist to buy gas only on odd or even-numbered days depending on whether his licence plate is odd or even. The New York plan had been voluntary.

—The Senate passed an emergency energy bill that would roll back domestic oil prices and give President Nixon the power to order rationing. A presidential veto has been promised.

—The Islamic summit conference of 37 Moslem nations discussed how to spend the increased revenues of oil-producing nations. Business International magazine said oil experts think the world's 11 oil-exporting nations could quadruple their 1973 profits to $100 billion this year.

Extra gas not due until early March

BOSTON (AP) — Motorists looking for the extra gasoline promised last week may not find it by the end of the month, say state and federal officials.

The state of Massachusetts was promised an extra 16.2 million gallons of gasoline to add to the February allocation.

Federal Energy Office officials in Washington said over the weekend that much of the additional gasoline may not be available to oil companies for distribution for two or three weeks, according to an aide of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Robert Burns, FEO coordinator for Massachusetts, said "I don't think anybody will be able to get all the extra gasoline out by the end of the month."

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said on Saturday he thinks Massachusetts has not been getting all the gasoline it is entitled to.

Kennedy, at a hearing of his Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Practices and Procedures, said other regions of the country are not sharing in the gasoline "belt tightening" that has been forced on Massachusetts.

John Weber, assistant FEO administrator, said allocation procedures are still being improved and that gasoline supplies in March will be distributed more scientifically throughout the nation.

Weber said there will be at least a 4 per cent gasoline shortage in the next quarter of the year even if the Arab oil embargo is lifted. He said if the embargo continues, as he feels is more likely, the shortage would be 16 per cent.

Witnesses at the hearing included two consumers, four gasoline retailers, Sargent, Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn, Weber and Lawrence Rogers of the Regional Energy Office.

One of the consumer witnesses, Henry Lash, said he and his wife drive about 60 miles a day to work and that he had come to the point where "I'm going to the gas station with my hat in my hand practically begging for a few gallons to get to work."

Robert McCarthy, who operates a service station in Boston, said he sometimes has to violate the rule about treating customers equally.

McCarthy said he once let a man go to the head of the line because his wife was in labor and he did not have enough gas to get her to the hospital.

Kennedy, the only member of his subcommittee at the hearing, called for a rollback of crude oil prices, increased unemployment benefits to people out of work because of the energy shortage and an across-the-board tax cut of $100 per person. He said that would make up for a $30 billion drop in the Gross National Product because of higher fuel prices which reduce consumer spending.

Energy crisis delays highway construction

State governments are cutting back on new highway construction and delaying repairs on older roads because of a decline in gasoline tax revenues, an Associated Press survey shows.

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations reported recently that gasoline tax collections this year would be 17 per cent below those in 1972 - the year being used as a base for figuring fuel allocations to the states.

The reason for the revenue drop is simple: Less gasoline is being sold. Jan Lundberg of the Lundberg Survey Inc. of Los Angeles, which keeps track of nationwide gasoline sales, said four billion gallons less gas was sold in 1973 than in 1972 - a drop of 4 per cent.

Areas with toll roads report an additional revenue decline since fewer people are driving and using the turnpikes.

So far, most of the gasoline revenue declines for December and January have been less than 5 per cent.

But officials expect sharper drops in February, reflecting shrinking gasoline supplies. They also note that state planners had expected the tax revenues to increase so that the actual impact of the drop is even more severe than it would seem at first glance.

The slack is being taken up in most states by budgetary belt tightening rather than by moves to impose new taxes or increase existing ones.

Construction projects have been delayed or canceled in seven of 27 states responding to The AP survey.

The energy crisis

Car will prevail over mass transit

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — A Washington attorney and author says despite the demand for improved mass transit, the automobile will be Americans' main source of transportation at least until the end of the century.

Donald Randall, author of "The Great American Auto Repair Robbery," also told a seminar sponsored by the Massachusetts Auto Body Shop Owners Association Saturday, that the car "will still serve 96 per cent of our urban travel needs," even with a crash federal program in urban mass transportation construction.

Randall, attorney for the Washington-based Automotive Service Council of America, Inc., urged uniform state licensing of auto repair shops and federal legislation that would force insurance companies to pay repair shops adequately for their work.

He also said independent garage owners should pressure the federal government to force big car manufacturers to design easier-to-repair and harder-to-destroy cars.

Power plants use less oil

BOSTON (AP) — New England's electric power companies significantly reduced their dependence on oil as a source of power, the New England Power Pool NEPOOL reported Friday.

Oil-fired generating plants produced 70.9 per cent of the electricity used in the area in October of 1973, but by last month, that figure had dropped to 56.3 per cent.

Switches to coal, nuclear power and hydroelectric power were credited for the drop.

NEPOOL officials also said that the region's supply of residual fuel oil needed to generate electricity remained stable this week. Utilities were able to maintain their 20-day reserve supply of residual fuel oil needed to generate electricity remained stable this week.

Smith security

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Smith College has stepped up security precautions for Yolanda D. King, Daughter of Dr. Martin Luther King and a sophomore here, a college spokesman said Friday.

The spokesman said the extra security has been arranged in the wake of the kidnapings of newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst and Atlanta Constitution Editor Reg Murphy.

Accused murderer to be arraigned

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — An unemployed Worcester man was scheduled to be arraigned Monday in District Court on a charge of murder in connection with the stabbing death of a woman.

Police arrested Daniel J. Redmond, 20, Saturday on a charge stemming from the death early that morning of Pamela Hurlburt, 29. Her body was found in her home.

Twelve hours earlier, Eileen Ferro, 21, was found stabbed to death in her Shrewsbury home.

Police said they felt there was no connection between the two deaths. Shrewsbury is about five miles from Worcester.

Police said Miss Hurlburt, the daughter of Worcester bank president H. Waite Hurlburt Jr., was apparently assulted during the night by an intruder who ransacked the house.

ROTC is out

WATERVILLE, Maine (AP) — Decreasing enrollment has been cited as a reason for an Air Force decision to discontinue its ROTC program at Colby College.

The liberal arts college reported Wednesday that the program, now in its 21st year, is being phased out.

The college was notified of the decision by Lt. Gen. F.M. Rogers, commander of ROTC headquarters at the Air University at Alabama's Maxwell Air Force Base.

In a letter to Colby President Robert E. L. Strider, Rogers said the decision was reached after "an intensive evaluation." He cited a decreasing enrollment in the program.

Smoking needs more research

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — More research is needed to determine the extent of the hazard cigarette smoke poses for non-smokers, a former U.S. surgeon general said.

Dr. Jesse L. Steinfeld, who held the federal health post from 1969 to 1972, listed Sunday several risks faced by nonsmokers:

-Buildup of carbon monoxide in smoke-filled rooms and cars "can lead to serious impairment of health" to non-smokers who have existing heart or lung conditions.

-Many of the 20 million Americans with allergies have at least some sensitivity to cigarette smoke and "even nonallergic non-smokers report discomfort and respiratory sysmptoms when exposed to tobacco smoke."

Yale library

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Yale, Harvard and Columbia's libraries and the New York Public Library are joining in a multimillion-dollar computer cataloging of their vast book collections.

The joint program was promoted by the increasing cost and difficulty of maintaining detailed information on their growing masses of literature, according to Yale librarian Rutherford D. Rogers.

GOP trouble

BOSTON (AP) — State Sen. John Quinlan, R-Norwood, charged Sunday that Gov. Francis W. Sargent is "raising money without adequate consideration" for the rest of the Republican party.

Quinlan said in a radio interview that Sargent is able to raise funds because the GOP is in a "psychological state" where it accepts defeat for everything except the governorship.

The senator said, "This has been a trend ever since World War II, governors and U.S. Senate candidates and attorney general candidates to grab all the money, leaving very little money for everybody else."

Sargent is "only the last in a series of Republican leaders who are doing the same thing," Quinlan said. "John Volpe did it before him."

Quinlan said he thinks the GOP "is on the verge of extinction" in Massachusetts.

Deformed infant dies

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Baby Houle died yesterday without a name but wanted by at least four families.

Born Feb. 9, the severely deformed baby underwent a court-ordered operation that attracted wide attention and at least three offers of adoption.

The baby, born without a left eye or an ear canal, and having several other deformities, died in the Maine Medical Center, a hospital spokesman said. The baby had been in poor condition since last Tuesday.

The hospital sued the parents, Air Force Sgt. and Mrs. Robert B. T. Houle of suburban Westbrook, when they reportedly refused to allow corrective surgery.

"Some people are calling us monsters because of this, and others are very sympathetic," said Houle, an Air Force recruiter. Later, Houle said they had no intentions of placing their baby up for adoption.

The baby's physician, Dr. Martin A. Barron Jr., had told the court: "We have passed the point where the correction....will be of any benefit to this infant."

But, Superior Court Justice David G. Roberts ordered the operation, saying the parents "have no right to withhold such treatment and that to do so constitutes neglect in the legal sense."

"The basic right enjoyed by every human being is the right to life itself," Roberts said.

The surgery implanted a food tube in the baby's stomach. A second operation to connect the infant's esophaugus to its stomach was to be performed next.

While the baby's plight led to a sympathetic outpouring for the parents, lawyers said the case could possibly be taken before the U.S. Supreme Court eventually.

John Mitchell, the hospital's attorney, said the Houle case posed a "highly difficult moral dilemna."

"The question here is if there is ever a point where a person may be denied life support. The court has said "no.""

If Baby Houle had lived, it possibly would have been blind, deaf, palsied and have never gained consciousness "as we know consciousness," Mitchell said.

Man in ladies room

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) — The next comfort station matron at City Hall's ladies' room may be a man.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination has turned down a request from the Holyoke Public Works Department to limit job applications for the vacant position to women. Under Civil Service law, the commission must approve any such restriction.

The commission voted unanimously earlier this month not to restrict the position to a female, Mayor William S. Taupier said Friday.

The job requires the matron to be in the rest room most of the time.

Kennedy Jr. tests OK

BOSTON (AP) — Children's Hospital Medical Center reported Edward M. Kennedy Jr. was released yesterday after a weekend of tests and treatment to prevent the recurrence of bone cancer.

The 12-year-old son of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was forced late last year to have his right leg amputated above the knee.

This is the second time he has been hospitalized for what the hospital said is a course of therpy and diagnostic tests to diminish the chances for a recurrence of the tumor that led to the amputation at Georgetown University Medical Center.

"No evidence exists at the present time for persistence of a tumor," said the hospital. The boy is to return every serveral weeks for an indefinite time to continue the tests and treatments.

Young Kennedy was hospitalized Friday after his grandmother, Rose Kennedy, 83, was released from a West Palm Beach, Fla., hospital after treatment and tests following a slight stroke.

Amtrak studies routes

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Rail passenger service between Chicago and Boston is the only one of 14 routes being considered by Amtrak which has "any real political support," says an aide to Sen. Robert Taft, R-Ohio.

William Lind said passenger service between Chicago and Boston will probably be restored this summer or fall.

Amtrak may decide this spring on restoration of service but no later than July 1, Lind told the Northeast Transportation Coalition on Saturation.

The run would link Boston, Springfield, Pittsfield, Albany, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, South Bend, Gary and Chicago, he said.

Track would have to be laid in Schodack east of Albany, where the Penn Central removed track needed for a Boston-Chicago line, Lind said. This would prevent restoration of service immediately after any favorable Amtrak decision, he said.

Simon says rationing possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy chief William E. Simon said Sunday that if motorists were lined up on a widespread basis for two to three hours outside service stations to buy gasoline, "it would become necessary for me to recommend rationing."

But Simon stressed in a broadcast interview that he believes the three-week-old gasoline-allocation program will end the "suffering and hardship and inconvenience." He repeated his opposition to coupon rationing.

Problems of intrastate distribution of gasoline have made long lines and closed stations a driving characteristic mainly in urban centers, he said on NBC's "Meet the Press" program.

Simon acknowledged that the allocation program has inequities that will require time for resolution.

On Saturday, Simon announced that 90 per cent of the nation's stations may raise prices this Friday by an extra two cents a gallon.

He called the boost "a modest increase" as opposed to the "unmanageable" one operator sought.

The two-cent boost superceded a one-cent increase announced Feb. 16 for stations with less than 85 per cent allocation of 1972 supplies.

Simon said Sunday that the broader two-cent increase was thought to be "easier to administer and have less impact on the consumer" than variable rate increases.

The increase applies to all stations not directly owned by the major oil companies and is in addition to the monthly cost pass-throughs stations already are allowed. The pass-throughs so far have averaged two or three cents a gallon, officials said.

Simon said that he believes he has a "period of flexibility" during which he can tap gasoline stockpiles - as he ordered last week, to get supplies to severely hit areas. Inventories are now 1.5 per cent above the level of a year ago and refineries have begun the switch he directed toward producing more gasoline before the normal springtime increase in demand, he explained.

Other action during the past week included:

—The FEO said petroleum imports for the previous week were down slightly, to 4.79 million barrels a day, from the 4.9 million barrels daily that had been expected under the Arab oil embargo.

—Delaware and New York became the fifth and sixth states to announce mandatory gas plans that allow a motorist to buy gas only on odd or even-numbered days depending on whether his licence plate is odd or even. The New York plan had been voluntary.

—The Senate passed an emergency energy bill that would roll back domestic oil prices and give President Nixon the power to order rationing. A presidential veto has been promised.

—The Islamic summit conference of 37 Moslem nations discussed how to spend the increased revenues of oil-producing nations. Business International magazine said oil experts think the world's 11 oil-exporting nations could quadruple their 1973 profits to $100 billion this year.

Energy crisis delays highway construction

State governments are cutting back on new highway construction and delaying repairs on older roads because of a decline in gasoline tax revenues, an Associated Press survey shows.

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations reported recently that gasoline tax collections this year would be 17 per cent below those in 1972 - the year being used as a base for figuring fuel allocations to the states.

The reason for the revenue drop is simple: Less gasoline is being sold. Jan Lundberg of the Lundberg Survey Inc. of Los Angeles, which keeps track of nationwide gasoline sales, said four billion gallons less gas was sold in 1973 than in 1972 - a drop of 4 per cent.

Areas with toll roads report an additional revenue decline since fewer people are driving and using the turnpikes.

So far, most of the gasoline revenue declines for December and January have been less than 5 per cent.

But officials expect sharper drops in February, reflecting shrinking gasoline supplies. They also note that state planners had expected the tax revenues to increase so that the actual impact of the drop is even more severe than it would seem at first glance.

The slack is being taken up in most states by budgetary belt tightening rather than by moves to impose new taxes or increase existing ones.

Construction projects have been delayed or canceled in seven of 27 states responding to The AP survey.

Extra gas not due until early March

BOSTON (AP) — Motorists looking for the extra gasoline promised last week may not find it by the end of the month, say state and federal officials.

The state of Massachusetts was promised an extra 16.2 million gallons of gasoline to add to the February allocation.

Federal Energy Office officials in Washington said over the weekend that much of the additional gasoline may not be available to oil companies for distribution for two or three weeks, according to an aide of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Robert Burns, FEO coordinator for Massachusetts, said "I don't think anybody will be able to get all the extra gasoline out by the end of the month."

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said on Saturday he thinks Massachusetts has not been getting all the gasoline it is entitled to.

Kennedy, at a hearing of his Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Practices and Procedures, said other regions of the country are not sharing in the gasoline "belt tightening" that has been forced on Massachusetts.

John Weber, assistant FEO administrator, said allocation procedures are still being improved and that gasoline supplies in March will be distributed more scientifically throughout the nation.

Weber said there will be at least a 4 per cent gasoline shortage in the next quarter of the year even if the Arab oil embargo is lifted. He said if the embargo continues, as he feels is more likely, the shortage would be 16 per cent.

Witnesses at the hearing included two consumers, four gasoline retailers, Sargent, Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn, Weber and Lawrence Rogers of the Regional Energy Office.

One of the consumer witnesses, Henry Lash, said he and his wife drive about 60 miles a day to work and that he had come to the point where "I'm going to the gas station with my hat in my hand practically begging for a few gallons to get to work."

Robert McCarthy, who operates a service station in Boston, said he sometimes has to violate the rule about treating customers equally.

McCarthy said he once let a man go to the head of the line because his wife was in labor and he did not have enough gas to get her to the hospital.

Kennedy, the only member of his subcommittee at the hearing, called for a rollback of crude oil prices, increased unemployment benefits to people out of work because of the energy shortage and an across-the-board tax cut of $100 per person. He said that would make up for a $30 billion drop in the Gross National Product because of higher fuel prices which reduce consumer spending.

Car will prevail over mass transit

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — A Washington attorney and author says despite the demand for improved mass transit, the automobile will be Americans' main source of transportation at least until the end of the century.

Donald Randall, author of "The Great American Auto Repair Robbery," also told a seminar sponsored by the Massachusetts Auto Body Shop Owners Association Saturday, that the car "will still serve 96 per cent of our urban travel needs," even with a crash federal program in urban mass transportation construction.

Randall, attorney for the Washington-based Automotive Service Council of America, Inc., urged uniform state licensing of auto repair shops and federal legislation that would force insurance companies to pay repair shops adequately for their work.

He also said independent garage owners should pressure the federal government to force big car manufacturers to design easier-to-repair and harder-to-destroy cars.

Power plants use less oil

BOSTON (AP) — New England's electric power companies significantly reduced their dependence on oil as a source of power, the New England Power Pool NEPOOL reported Friday.

Oil-fired generating plants produced 70.9 per cent of the electricity used in the area in October of 1973, but by last month, that figure had dropped to 56.3 per cent.

Switches to coal, nuclear power and hydroelectric power were credited for the drop.

NEPOOL officials also said that the region's supply of residual fuel oil needed to generate electricity remained stable this week. Utilities were able to maintain their 20-day reserve supply of residual fuel oil needed to generate electricity remained stable this week.

Smith security

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Smith College has stepped up security precautions for Yolanda D. King, Daughter of Dr. Martin Luther King and a sophomore here, a college spokesman said Friday.

The spokesman said the extra security has been arranged in the wake of the kidnapings of newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst and Atlanta Constitution Editor Reg Murphy.

Accused murderer to be arraigned

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — An unemployed Worcester man was scheduled to be arraigned Monday in District Court on a charge of murder in connection with the stabbing death of a woman.

Police arrested Daniel J. Redmond, 20, Saturday on a charge stemming from the death early that morning of Pamela Hurlburt, 29. Her body was found in her home.

Twelve hours earlier, Eileen Ferro, 21, was found stabbed to death in her Shrewsbury home.

Police said they felt there was no connection between the two deaths. Shrewsbury is about five miles from Worcester.

Police said Miss Hurlburt, the daughter of Worcester bank president H. Waite Hurlburt Jr., was apparently assulted during the night by an intruder who ransacked the house.

Black women: slave of a slave no more

Editors note; This article is reprinted from the Third World Women's Alliance newspaper "Triple Jeopardy released in November. The article was written by Fran Beal, well known activist in the Third World community.

By FRAN BEAL

Until quite recently, black people in this country have been denied their history or even worse, have been subjected to history books and sociological and anthropological treatises filled with distortions and lies either by commission or ommission.

The past ten years however, have seen a revolt on the part of the Afro-American against this continuing racist indoctrination. All across this nation, African and Afro-American studies programs have blossomed and much good work has been dongby black historians and other scholars in bringing to light or legitimate past and providing heroes and leaders with whom we can proudly identify.

Unfortunately, in relation to the black woman, the old myths and distortions are all too often still prevalent even among black scholars. Therefore, while we recognize that our primary fight at this stage of history must be against imperialism and all its manifestations, nevertheless, out of imperialism has grown racism and made chauvinism — two extremely destructive forces which the black woman must contend with.

While it is generally agreed that the black woman is expected to play several roles, what is quite distressing is the fact that whichever role we play, it is assumed that it will be a role secondary to our males. A revolution — a struggle waged for liberation — cannot be won if a segment of that revolutionary population is still enslaved under the guise of helping our men attain their "lost masculinity."

The backward ideas concerning the black woman that are still so prevalent among certain black nationalists today are extremely divisive to the overall struggle for social justice in this country. Many black women are turned off because of the blatant chauvinists attitudes exhibited by their brothers and become frustrated and disillusioned with so-called revolutionary organizations.

Since her arrival on these alien shores, the black woman has been subjected to the worst kinds of exploitation and opression. As a black she has had to endure all the horrors of slavery and living in a racist society: as a worker, she had been the object of continual exploitation, occupying the lowest place on the wage scale and restricted to the most demeaning and uncreative jobs: as a woman she has seen her physical image defamed and been the object of the white man's uncontrolable lust and subjected to all the ideals of white womanhood as a model to which she should aspire: as a mother she has seen her children torn from her breast and sold into slavery, she has seen them left at home without attention while she attended to the white-ruling class' children. Today she sees her children afflicted by dope addiction, the lack of a decent education and subjected to attacks by a racist society, legal lynchings, cannon fodder for America s imperialist wars of aggression, populating the prisons of this nation and on and on. And in her home she becomes the "slave of a slave."

As women, it is important to study in order to understand how the role of the black and other third world women in the home and in society fits into the general picture of third world people in this country and to fully understand how our struggle fits into the struggle against exploitation and oppression of all peoples.

But even more important, it is essential for women to take part in changing the reality of their lives. Theory alone doesn't do anything to change our daily existence. If we want to understand revolution, we have to take part in revolution. The task before us is to develop a sisterhood of women which stretches across all countries. A sisterhood that find within itself the resolve and strength to actively participate in all phases of the liberation struggles, while at the same time making sure that the role of women in the new society will be one which is not oppressive and will not be a continuation of the same kinds of stunting attitudes which are still in mode today, even among the most revolutionary of men. We must begin to study revolutionary theory and to study other successful revolutions to discover the general truths which we can apply to our struggle here in the U.S. against imperialism, against racism and against male supremacy. China, Vietnam, Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, North Korea and Albania have had or are in the midst of having revolutions where colonial and-or class exploitation and oppression have been elimanated. If you look at these examples, you notice that each has used socialist ideology and tactics to wage successful liberation struggles.

Another relevant fact about the above mentioned countries is of particular importance to women. The status of women has been elevated as a result of the introduction of socialism. Although there is still much to be done in relation to women, the economic foundation for the oppression of women has been eliminated and the doors to true emancipation have been opened.

It is now possible for women in these countries to unite and struggle to defend their rithts as citizens, mothers and workers.

The history of our people in this nation portrays clearly the prominent role that the black woman hasplayed in the ongoing struggle against racism and exploitation.

As mother, wife and worker, she has witnessed the frustration and anguish of the men, women and children in her community and on the job.

As revolutionary, whe will take an active part in changing this reality. The slave of a slave is creature of the past.

Letters To The Editor

Viet vets demand equal benefits

To The Editor:

Vietnam-era veterans account for over 10 per cent of the total student population on this campus. However, with the exception of sporadic special interest groups, the Vietnam-era veterans have remained relatively unorganized and silent. The UMass Vietnam-era veterans are not isolated in their lack of involvement; this apathy, if you will, has been nationwide. But things are changing; Vietnam-era veterans, realizing that they have been getting screwed, are organizing and lobbying for more adequate veterans benefits.

Some of the areas Vietnam-era veterans feel need improving are: educational allowances which presently are inadequate for meeting the expenses of attending college, job opportunities which presently are severely lacking, and disability ratings and benefits which presently are not commensurate with actual disabilities incurred by Vietnam-era veterans.

On January 28 of this year, President Nixon stated "We owe these men and women (veterans) our best effort in providing them with the benefits that their service has earned them....". Why then has the President asked only for an 8 per cent increase in educational allowances for veterans — this amount does not even keep pace with actual cost of living increases. This also means that educational allowances for Vietnam-era veterans will still not equal the real value of educational allowances available to veterans of World War II (such as President Nixon). The Vietnam-era veteran demands equal benefits for equal service!

On Tuesday, February 19, the House of Representatives voted unanimously to increase educational allowances by 13.6 per cent. The Nixon Administration will undoubtedly veto any increase above 8 per cent unless Vietnam-era veterans organize and demand the benefits which they have earned.

UMass Vietnam-era veterans, dissatisfied with present veterans benefits, are now organizing to demand "equal benefits". The UMass Veterans Club, as this organization will be known, will hold an organizational meeting on Weds., Feb. 27th in Room 908, Campus Center.

The Veterans Club already has the support of over 400 UMass Vietnam-era veterans, but expects all Vietnam-era veterans on campus to become active members.

The Vietnam-era veteran has earned these benefits — be there on Weds., Feb. 27th to demand you receive them.

Outreach undersold

To The Editor:

This is in response to Mr. Tripoli's column February 27, "Leave Us Alone."

As former intern who derived a great deal from the Outreach program, I think Mr. Tripoli sells academia a little too short.

Since I returned from D.C. I've approached my educational pursuit with an entirely different perspective from the one emphasized throughout Tripoli's shoddy piece of journalism--if one can label it as such.

"The course which he denounces is one offered by the American Political Science Association. Any polisci majors who feel overburdened by taking on the extra assignments and the two-hour once a week course either have marshmellos for brains or are belittling themselves.

Perhaps if any of the interns at 1515 16th St. NW, Washington, D.C. would like to enrich their internship this spring, I'd strongly advise sticking with the course. It's a great opportunity to learn from those who are many years experienced the vast complexities of life on Capitol Hill.

If you don't dig this, Mr. Tripoli, than you're only kidding yourself--and it's your loss alone. Please take my advice, even though I'm just a reporter and you are a former editor.

Tackeff: insulting, misinformed

To The Editor:

After reading Matt Tackeff's article in Thursday's paper, I was rendered (almost) speechless. While admittedly it must be difficult to turn out a column every few days, insulting and misinformed remarks such as those in that column really have no excuse.

Tackeff says he doesn't mean "to cast aspersions on anyone's beliefs, religious or otherwise," and then proceed to talk about the occult in terms of "The Exorcist", Charles Manson, and Adolf Hitler. While I am no expert on the occult, I am a student of astrology, and can give you a few other names associated with the occult: Augustine, Paracelsus, Jakob Boehme, Elizabeth I, William Blake, Henry Miller, Carl Jung.

I think I am fairly representative of most believers of astrology. I don't "follow a Zodiac chart when planning my daily activities," but I do use astrology as a tool to understanding myself and others better. My chart helps me to know who and what I am, and where I am going. I believe in astrology as others believe in psychotherapy--because it works.

While I don't know much about the other fields of the occult, I don't presume to judge them or people who believe in them. It is obvious that this is not a rational world, and to condemn anything that is not rational, logical, or "scientific" is to show a narrow mind that is out-of-tune with reality.

Oh, and by the way, several of those astrologers Hitler "consulted" predicted his eventual defeat. Hitler subsequently had all astrologers in Germany rounded up and sent to concentration camps.

If Tackeff forgets humility...

To The Editor:

In his column entitled "Back to hocus-pocus," Matt Tackeff, with his usual arrogant Matt-knows-best attitude discussed the field of mysticism. He started out saying: "I don't mean to cast aspersions on anyone's beliefs...," then proceded to do just that.

By the time he was through he equated the whole diverse field with everything from devil worshipers to the Spanish Inquisition.

Since Matt doesn't believe in talking to god or deceased relatives, it only follows those who do it need psychiatrists and have enshrouded themselves in darkness.

Unfortunately, inspite of his self professed knowledge of the field, he seems to have missed one of the important ideas that the great mystics keep stressing. That is of course humility.

Why I write sports

"Politics is dirty," I said to a friend, "and all politicians are no good."

"Why don't you take a positive attitude," he replied, "and look for good men."

It is impossible for me to look with anything but evil eyes upon politics, for as long as I've been able to comprehend written and spoken words what's been written and spoken has been negative.

"Politics has to clean up its act," I continued.

"But so don't newspapers," my friend replied, "and for that matter, so doesn't everything."

Quite true. But basically the little bit of dirt in everybody's act is a derivative of political dirt.

Make society into a pyramid. On the top is government, a force that in the past 40 years has been permitted to seep into every part of society.

Government and politics go hand-in-hand. When the political act is dirty, the governmental act is dirty. Obviously the governmental act is dirty.

The dirt has seeped down into every corner of society.

Obviously I don't like "Big Government." It is not desirable, but it may be necessary. Whatever, we're stuck with it.

But if government could do some housecleaning, the rest of society would follow. That's why the dirt in politics is so disgusting. It causes so much harm.

What can you do about it? God only knows and the only person he talks to is Charlton Heston. It's been the same no matter how far you look back, no matter whether you're dealing with town fence-viewers or the Senate.

The first thing to be attacked should be the campaign. It is the root of most of the evils. My ideal would be for people to walk into the voting machine, look at a couple names, and pick the best one.

Not a very good idea, really, but better than what we've got. It seems that the answer, if there is one, lies somewhere in between, in the vicinity of shortened campaigns and public financing.

And improvements must be made in the quality of the candidates. One Jack Davoren is enought, it would seem, but little Jackies still pop out of small town cemetery commissions and infect the system.

Finally, voters have to stop electing turkeys and crying about them two years later. Our Man in the White House, Mr. Davoren, James Michael Curley, and lots more typify voter stupidity.

What can you do? I've got some ideas.

How can you do it? That's the most discouraging part, and probably the reason why politics is so hopelessly disgusting.

The system must be changed, but is self-perpetuating. The only way to change things is through the system. Keep trying to figure a way out and you'll get dizzy.

And wonder why I'm a sportswriter.

Good riddance Euele Gibbons

By BARBARA VOORHEES

I'm really kind of glad that "natural" is going out of style.

Aaahh...nature, natural, naturalness.

I personally could never really get into it that much.

First there was the matter of food. In Amherst, up popped The Yellow Sun and the Whole Wheat Trading Company, and on campus there was a new "basic foods" line in the D.C. and the People's Market pushed the Science Fiction library up to the second floor of the Student Union.

Chewing on chewy, old, wholesome, whole-wheat bread was hard for me after chewing on that horror of horrors (it has additives!! and is refined!!) good, old, soft, middle-class, white bread for 18 years.

And to me, granola tastes like saw dust.

And honey. Before I was 18 I had eaten honey once when my Mom forced it down my throat when I had a bout with bronchitis. I found it to be so disgusting that I threw up. I love nasty, white, refined sugar. A no-no. As everyone else piled honey (which is 98 per cent sugar) on their whole-wheat pancakes, whole-wheat french toast, grapefruit and into their herbal tea I snuck teaspoonfuls of white sugar into my coffee. (Coffee was also basically a no-no but since a lot of people are coffee freaks it was accepted in polite society.)

And vegetables. I always hated them. I can remember in my youth sneakily stuffing handfuls of peas into my pockets and then exiting from the kitchen into the bathroom and flushing them down the toilet. And if worse came to worse I could swallow them with my milk feeling secure in the knowledge that they came out whole at the other end.

So when everyone decided to go vegetarian I was stumped. About as far as I could go was tossed green salad and maybe a few brussel sprouts. But then there was fish. It was acceptable! Unfortunately fish generally used to end up in the toilet too or else concealed under my mashed potatoes.

Along with food went the clothes and the hair. Natural.

For my four high school years I had been steadily accumulating the largest wardrobe of matching sweaters and knee socks this side of the Connecticut River. When my school dropped the dress code I was at a loss. I owned only one pair of pants.

In college my friends and I cut all of our dresses down to shirts and did a lot of washes at first so that our jeans would look "natural." When my friends caught me putting on eyeliner and with rollers in my hair I gave myself up completely to the natural look.

And suddenly everyone was into back-packing and mountain climbing and just plain being outside. I've already done all that. I climbed every tree in our neighborhood 50 times, climbed every hill and cliff in the area of my house 100 times, crawled into every cave I could find and ran myself silly at least once a day when I was younger.

Yeah--the outdoors is great--but, for a little variety, I don't mind being inside once in awhile.

I just couldn't do it. No matter how much peer pressure was applied and no matter how hard I tried I just couldn't be "natural" so I gave up and went back to being myself.

Now it seems as if the "natural" trend is dying down and people are going off in all sorts of directions. There are a few hard core supporters left but maybe they are the ones who are "natural" naturally.

The ironic thing about the whole deal is that it was just those horrid, nasty, phony old merchandisers and advertisers that everyone is down on who created "natural" in the first place.

Now I see a lot of people wearing whatever pleases them, eating whatever suits their needs and tastes and doing whatever they wish to do with their time.

Somehow things now seem so much more, well...natural.

Simple Syphon met a student...

By JACKMAN WILSON

Dining Commons food czar William Syphon announced today that UMass faces a serious food shortage. In a speech delivered from the Bluewall stage, Syphon said "The era of unlimited food is over. We'll all have to tighten our belts." After the speech Syphon answered questions from the audience.

"Mr. Syphon, when did you first learn of this situation?"

"We've seen it coming for some time," Syphon said. "Last semester we were forced to phase out seconds. Now food imports are falling off. No more Swiss chesse or Swedish meatballs."

From the direction of the pinball machines came the question "Is rationing being considered?"

"At the moment, no." The food czar, noticing his pitcher was empty, waved for an attendant. "What we have in mind is an Oregon style allocation plan."

A squat old lady wearing a blue dress and a white apron handed Mr. Syphon a full pitcher of beer. "Tell 'em how it'll work, boss," she said.

"Simple," Syphon said, "even students eat one day and odd students the next."

"How will students know if they are odd or even?" someone asked.

"The odd students at this school already know who they are," Syphon answered with a wink.

"Mr. Syphon, what is this plan expected to accomplish?"

"It should eliminate panic eating," Syphon explained. "Many students are just 'topping off'. Under the Oregon plan students couldn't eat unless they were really hungry. The long lines at the Dining Commons should disappear."

"You have to be starving to eat that food!" screamed a drunken young man who was immediately hustled out by a pair of husky Bluewall bouncers.

"What other courses of action are being considered by your agency?" asked a sober-looking girl with pad and pencil.

"Eventually we want to replace food with some alternate form of energy. Coal, for instance. It's a lot cheaper."

An indignant murmur arose from the audience. "That's ridiculous!" "People can't eat coal!"

Mr. Syphon gulped nervously from his pitcher. "You'll have to get used to it. Aren't you people patriotic? It won't be as bad as all that. Add a little textured soybean and who'll know the difference?"

The audience calmed as the food czar rose from his seat, pitcher in hand, eyes aflame. Everyone knew a moment of inspiration was in the offing. "All I ever hear from you selfish bastards is how rotten a job we're doing. A year from now you'll think you had it good, God dammit!" Syphons speech became incoherent at that point, largely due to he two pitchers of beer he had consumed. The audience sensed that the interview was over and headed for the bar to get one last drink before dinner.

The death penalty-yes or no?

For the people

"For the people" is a weekly column dealing with political issues and state legislation of interest to our readers. Your reactions are welcome. If you become really angry over what is reported, remember that the most effective recourse is contacting your state legislators.

By BOB MAC KAY, JR.

Is the death penalty justified in certain instances of first degree murder?

In 1972, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled on capital punishment in the Furman vs. Georgia decision. The ruling struck down existing state capital punishment laws, but the ruling was close — 5-4.

Also, different reasons were given by the justices for their own individual decisions. One rationale offered by the justices was that the death penalty was "cruel and unusual treatment" under the terms of the Constitution. But, most of the justices ruled that the death penalty was unconstitutional because the state laws were applied in an "arbitrary and capricious manner."

In short, the Supreme Court as a whole did not formally rule on whether or not the death penalty itself was cruel and unusual punishment. Rather, the Court struck down state capital punishment laws because there was no uniform procedure for applying them. Consequently, those who usually received such punishment were the poor or oppressed.

Following the High Court ruling, the U.S. Dept. of Justice drew up a statute on the death penalty. The statute was never sent to Congress, but two states — Conn. and Florida — used the statute as a model for their own death penalty laws.

Now, Mass. is embroiled in debate over the capital punishment question. Last year, Gov. Sargent pocket vetoed legislation that included restoration of the death penalty. This year, the Mass. Committee on the Judiciary is again hearing legislation that would restore capital punishment in special cases of first degree murder. Some of the testimony heard by the Committee is as follows —

Sen. Jack H. Backman (D-Brookline) said that, "Our history shows that the death penalty has been unjustly imposed. We have put to death innocent people in the name of justice. We have failed to provide any deterrent to crime, but we have also failed to provide any mechanism for rehabilitation of committed offenders. Attorney General Robert Quinn, in an advisory opinion to the Supreme Judicial Court, stated that the death penalty was a cruel or unusual punishment. I believe the same."

JACK H. BACKMAN

"The U.S. Supreme Court found that the death penalty was unconstitutional due to the discriminatory way in which it has been applied by juries. As members of the Judiciary Committee you are considering ways in which the death penalty may be imposed in a non-discriminatory manner. Who can justly decide who should live and who should die?...I submit to you that no person can apply such a penalty in a just manner."

"Our emotions cry for vengeance in the face of a horrible crime. We become especially emotional when a law enforcement officer is the victim. But experience and reason tell us that killing the offender will not undo the crime, will not deter further crime. We must respect life, not cheapen it by retributive executions."

"The key to controlling violent crimes lies in the controlling of weapons. Controlling the possession of handguns and other dangerous weapons will deter crime. We have enough data to show that a death penalty will not."

Former State Rep. George L. Sacco (D-Medford), a candidate for Attorney General, has filed a bill based on the Justice Dept. statute. Under Sacco's legislation, a defendant involved in a first degree murder trial would first be declared either guilty or not-guilty by a jury.

If found guilty, the defendant then would receive a separate hearing to determine if the capital crime was commited under any of six "aggravating circumstances." (see table) At this post-conviction hearing, the prosecution would be bound by the evidence of the original trial and would have to prove any one of the six aggravating circumstances before sentencing the defendant to death.

AGGRAVATING CIRCUMSTANCES
(in brief)

1 — The offense (murder) was committed during the performance of, or flight from, a felony...And, the defendant had previously been convicted of that same felony

2 — The convicted killer had been previously convicted of one or more state or federal felonies or offenses of which the sentence is one or more years...AND the felony or offense involved serious bodily injury to another (such as extreme aggravated assault)

3 — The convicted committed the offense while knowingly creating grave risk of death to another person besides the victim

4 — The convicted committed the offense in an especially "cruel or depraved manner"

5 — The convicted procured the offense by payment, or promise of payment, or anything of pecuniary value (i.e., money)

6 — The convicted committed the offense as consideration for payment or anything of pecuniary value (i.e., anticipation of payment)

Meanwhile, the defense would not be bound by the evidence of the original trial. If the defense could prove any one of five "mitigating circumstances" (see table), then the defendant would receive a life sentence instead of the death penalty. Such alternate punishment would apply even if one of the six aggravating circumstances had been proved — provided that one of the five mitigating circumstances had also been proved.

MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES
(in brief)

1 — The convicted committed the act while he was less than 18 years of age at time of the offense

2 — The mental condition of the convicted was such that he was unable to conform conduct to the requirements of the law (i.e. mental impariment or emotional strain)

3 — The convicted committed the act under "unusual and substantial duress"

4 — The convicted is criminally liable for the offense of another, but participation was minor

5 — The convicted could not have reasonably foreseen that his conduct during performance of the offense would cause or create grave risk of causing death to another

On his legislation, Sacco said, "I would prefer the role of an abolitionist but I support the death penalty for what it is — a drastic measure for violent times."

"Consistently I have supported rehabilitative programs for the majority of offenders...I (previously) testified before this same committee in support of legislation I filed on Pre-Trial Diversion for youthful offenders. However, there exists a small minority of incorrigibles who have no personal regard for human life — who murder in cold blood. For those individual capital punishment serves as a reminder."

GEORGE L. SACCO, JR.

In his testimony, the former Medford legislator cited the 200 per cent increase in the Boston homicide rate over the past ten years and the 134 enforcement officers killed nationwide in the line of duty last year.

POL-LINE '74

By MARK VOGLER

Who does Bob Quinn think he's kidding? Certainly not the informed electorate on this campus. The Massachusetts attorney general is in town today--and for the record it is his first official visit to the University since March 2, 1972.

One strike against him: Why the big interval in between visits? Probably because this is an election year and Mr. Quinn is seriously eyeing the governorship.

So one can assume his mission is not merely one of participation on an energy crisis panel discussion this evening.

What seems to be the ultimate motive ot the attorney general is a vote grabbing endeavor directed at students. And what better way to test his popularity than in a liberal, politically hostile environment at UMass.

Strike two: For those of us who were here two years ago and have good memories, Mr. Quinn's last visit did not leave a very fine impression.

Mr. Quinn was verbally abased and blasted out of the student union ball room by Students Offering Support (SOS), an advocacy group for the mentally retarded at Belchertown State School.

SOS directly challenged Quinn on his concern for the constitutional rights of the mentally retarded. Quinn fought back by insinuating that SOS chairman Joseph Silvia was acting like a "protege" of student attorney Richard Howland.

Whether Mr. Quinn chooses to side step the Belchertown issue or not is incidental, because Belchertown has muchroomed into a political bombshell.

It would seem to be to the advantage of Mr. Quinn to address himself directly to the issue and rectify matters. He should take a lesson from the Sargent administration's fumbling of this issue.

Help for low-income students

There are 55,000 young people in Mass. who could potentially qualify for state-federal aid in financing their education. Yet, out of this 55,000 figure, only 1,000 are presently receiving any assistance. And, recent Federal cutbacks could soon deny even more low-income students an opportunity for advancement.

"The Nixon Administration has sharply cut back spending on many social programs, including financial aid to students. And the rhetoric that the states have the funds to compensate for lost Federal aid is false," said Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst).

Rep. Collins is sponsoring a bill that would provide special programs for deprived students. Also, the bill grants financial aid to another 1,000 Mass. low-income students.

"The bill is based on two general concepts," said Rep. Collins. "First, specific programs and grants would be directed to another 1,000 low-income students."

"Also, the bill establishes some general programs that hopefully would affect all 55,000 low-income students. These programs would encourage youngsters to finish high school and advise them about going to college or technical schools. Also, some of the programs would work with bilingual, tutorial, and remedial set-ups in the schools."

Lovejoy states his case

See Page One Story

Here is the statement of Samuel H. Lovejoy of Montague Center, charged in connection with the toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorlogical tower on the Montague Plains:

George Washington's Birthday.

In the long-established tradition of challenging the constitutionality of particular events, I readily admit full responsibility for sabotaging that outrageous symbol of the future nuclear power plant, the N.U. meteoroligical tower on the Montague Plains. The Declaration of Independence rightfully legisimates action "...whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends...of safety and happiness." The Massachusetts Bill of Rights further states, "...The people alone have an incontestable unalienable and indefeasible right to institute government; and to reform, alter or totally change the same, when their protection, safety, prosperity and happiness require it." With the obvious danger of a nuclear power plant, with the biological finality of atomic radiation (and their equally ominous problems), a clear duty was mine to secure for my community the welfare and safety that the government has not only refused to provide, but has conspired to destroy.

I held no malice toward the tower in itself; it was a beautiful engineering feat. Indeed I always dreamed of riding to the top to see the entire valley I am wont to love. Symbolically, however, it represented the most horrendous development this community could imagine. The very spectre of it oppressed us all.

Charles Bragg, a vice-president of N.U., said that local opposition, "wouldn't affect us. We would have to go ahead with it even if there was a protest movement mounted by the citizens of the area." When even the most learned physicists in the country continue to disagree, Prof. Inglis at UMass., for example, the citizens of the town were supposed to make a definitive judgment in a very few months on an issue that would radically alter their lives forever (or perhaps not occur at all!) Social blackmail! Such perverse logic is a usurpation of normal human rights and cannot be tolerated.

Mr. Charles Bragg also compared the development of nuclear power plants to the western expansion of the railroads. The only possible extension of his logic is to remember the liquidation of the American Indian, and thus realize the ominous repercussions for our own fragile little community.

Characteristic of the times; though, the corporate giants not only extort us by preying on the weakness of the local citizenry, but also they degrade us with bribes. The pleasures of money magnanimously offered in the same vein as the carrot (and the stick). Here, where the risks — the costs — are so devastating, the system has thrown the entire issue into the economic and political arenas. Economically for our little community, the proposed power plant budget is greater than Connecticut's entire state budget. Politically speaking, there is no democratic solution to a scientific problem. In a situation where unanimity is imperative, the opposite is true. There can be no trade-off here between money and public welfare.

The Massachusetts Bill of Rights declares, "No man, nor corporation, or association of men have any other title to obtain advantages, or particular and exclusive privileges, distinct from those of the community." And yet, are we not now only beginning to grasp how grossly the great corporations view their profit?

It was announced only recently (after much research, and then and only then admitted officially) that the relatively old Rowe nuclear reactor had not been the impeccably safe place it has been so eagerly billed by the avaricious power companies; indeed the plant had no emergency core cooling system at all until 1972! The ECCS is a rather simple water cooling idea much like a car — except it is supposed to control temperatures comparable to our sun! The AEC itself admits that all ECCS tests have been unseccessful. The industry says that the AEC did not require one until now! What! say I.

I have been living here in Montague going on five years now, and in the valley for another five. As a farmer concerned about the organic and the natural, I find irradiated fruit, vegetables and meat to be inorganic; and I can find no natural balance with a nuclear plant in this or any community.

There seems to be no way for our children to be born or raised safely in our community in the very near future. No children? No edible food? What will there be?

While my purpose is not to provoke fear, I believe we must act; positive action is the only option left open to us. Communities have the same rights as individuals. We must seize back control of our own community.

The nuclear energy industry and its support elements in government are practicing actively a form of despotism. They have selected the less populated rural countryside to answer the energy needs of the cities. While not denying the urban need for electrical energy (perhaps addiction is more appropriate), why cannot reactors be built near those they are intended to serve? Is it not more efficient? Or are we witnessing a corrupt balance between population and risk?

In a society only beginning to explore the philosophical implications of abortion, euthanasia and genetic manipulation, do we citizens allow the diunited and unconfident scientists to plop down heaps of high and low level radioactivity in our midst? We truly have not delved into all the repercussions of our actions, yet we seek to proliferate the construction of obviously lethal experiments in ever increasing numbers of backyards? I fear the monsters of infanticide and forced sterilization will raise their heads before this society regains its senses! Jesus begged upon the cross, "Forgive them Lord, for they know not what they do."

The energy crisis, so-called, is an obvious signal for the need for immediate and nationwide introspection and re-evaluation. We must give up those false and selfish notions of individual freedom there they impinge on the freedoms necessary for a wholesome and balanced community life. We must bring to an end the greed of the corporate state. We must see that profit, as the modus operandi of our society, is defunct. The American people surely had the power to control their own lives, and I believe they still do; but today it is a question of whether they really want control. "The times, they are a-changing," but it is the task of all men to understand and control these changes.

We must remove the dangerous and sensitive issue of nuclear plant development from the economic and political arenas, and put the issue to a more prudent and judicious test. One of man's highest achievements is the principle and right of trial by jury. In any trial, indeed only one juror need voice skepticism to create a hung jury and a mistrial. The issue that faces us is more horrible even than murder, for here we speak not of one but an exponential number of grotesque deaths and mutilations. Herbert S. Denenberg, insurance commissioner of Pennsylvania, states, "It may be that no one by God could write the insurance policy we need on nuclear reactors!"

It is my firm conviction that if a jury of 12 impartial scientists was empanelled, and following normal legal procedure they were given all the pertinent data and arguments; then this jury would never give a unanimous vote for deployment of nuclear reactors amongst the civilian population. Rather, I believe they would call for the complete shutdown of all the commercially operated nuclear plants.

Through positive action and a sense of moral outrage, I seek to test my convictions.

Love and affection to all my fellow citizens.

Durham pushes for controling refinery sites

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Opponents of a refinery proposed by Aristotle Onassis for Durham Point want a bill that would establish a site selection committee for refineries to protect local interests.

Most of the 30 witnesses speaking at a legislative hearing last Thursday asked the House Environmental and Agricultural Committee to amend the measure to allow Durham or any community the right to reject the project.

Onassis proposes a $600 million refinery attached by a pipeline to an offshore superport. His consultants claim it would be the largest refinery in the country.

Rep. George Roberts, R-Gilmanton, House majority leader and a cosponsor of the bill, said its main features are to separate refineries from public utilities and shorten the time required to obtain a construction permit from the state.

But some opponents said the bill stacks the deck in favor of oil interests by assuming the need for a refinery in the state.

Alan Pope of Rye gave the committee a copy of a report prepared by two University of New Hampshire professors, showing what would happen to oil spills in the Isles of Shoals.

"Whatever is leaked or spilled will wash up on our beaches and kill whatever sea life that is in the way," Pope said.

Consultants to the Onassis-owned Olympic Refineries, Inc., have said the superport they propose to build in the isles would be spillproof.

"They say there will be no leaks, but drips occur and it doesn't take much of a drip to kill lots of sea life," Pope said. "And the drips would become leaks and then spills."

Spokesmen for Olympic said they basically support the bill, but raised objections to the financial disclosure section.

A spokesman for the state attorney general's office said the bill's omission of adversary proceedings might be a violation of due process.

Joseph Bonasia, a consultant engineer to Olympic, said he objected to the adversary proceedings because they were used to harass expert witnesses.

But most of the other persons testifying said the cross-examining was needed to allow the public to have its say.

Frederick A. Goode, an aide to Gov. Meldrim Thomson, said Thomson supported the bill in principle, but asked that the provision allowing the attorney general to represent the public at hearings be deleted.

Goode said the attorney general should represent the state "without getting involved with the general public."

Also opposing the bill were commercial fishermen, who said a refinery would ruin the state's fishing industry, and Save Our Shores SOS, a committee of Durham residents opposed to Onassis' plans.

SOS proposed a drastic alteration of the bill, including three amendments, which would require:

—A $25,000 nonrefundable application fee.

—A surety bond to pay for restoration of the site in case the refinery failed.

—A provision allowing the committee to control the refinery instead of just being able to police it.

David C. Hamblett of Nashua, an Olympic spokesman, said state controls were superfluous because federal red tape was "horrendous."

"I assure you, big brother in Washington is looking out for New Hampshire," Hamblett said.

He then listed names of about 20 federal agencies with which Olympic would have to clear its proposal.

"We con't need any more adminuistrative controls or red tape," Hamblett said.

In response to a question, he said Durham Point was the only site in New Hampshire under consideration by Olympic.

A second part of the bill, to allow the state to tax refined products, was transferred to the House Ways and Means Committee for a later hearing.

Election bill to fill seat

The House Committee on Election Laws will hear arguments (Mon.) on a bill which, if passed, could result in the calling of a special election to fill the First Hampshire District seat vacated last month by State Representative Edward McColgan (D-Northampton).

The legislative petition, to ensure election of a new Representative in the General Court within 90 days after an vacancy occurs, was filed with State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) by Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst and John Lawlor of Florence.

"If the measure fails," the petitioners explain, "McColgan's seat could remain vacant until the beginning of the next legislative session in January, 1975. This would mean that Northampton and the other twelve communities within the First Hampshire District will lose half their representation in the State House."

The hearing on the special election bill, House Bill No. 2357, will begin at 1p.m.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

More left-handed persons and twins are born under Gemini than under any other zodiacal sign. These are the quick-talking persons who can make others laugh, even at their own expense. Gemini is the third sign and Mercury; communication is featured and there is talking, travel and debate. Ideas come alive with Gemini. Where there is life, there is Gemini. That's the way it is and restless Gemini wouldn't have it any other way. Gemini has a secret fear of Tuarus, makes money with Cancer, can marry Sagittarius and be attracted to Libra.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accept change. Highlight what is new, different. You are stimulated and creative juices flow. Be grateful. Refuse to draw back into protective shell. Test, experiment and ask questions. You are due to make valuable contacts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be direct, specific. Those who ask for special services should not take you for granted. Be sure they know what is involved in terms of time, effort and money. Deal now with Aquarius, Scorpio and Leo individuals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some friends, associates seem intent on creating problems. Know it and protect yourself. Refuse to become involved in foolish dispute. Another Gemini figures prominently. Emotions dominate. Strive for greater degree of control.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family member deserves special consideration, thanks. Be diplomatic. Heed concept of golden rule. You could undergo significant spiritual experience. Be open and forgive one who speaks out of turn. Eliminate safety hazard at home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Hold off on journey. You need additional information. Take steps to prevent breakdown in communication. Visitor from a distance needs guidance. You are able now to perceive, to clarify what was a dilemma. Pisces, Virgo persons are in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Settle financial questions. Parent or authority figure is involved. Stress willingness to handle responsibility. If single, relationship could be nearing marriage. Capricorn, Cancer persons may be in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Setback occurs but it could boomerang in your favor. Know it and ride with tide. Finish rather than begin project. One close to you lets off steam. This is temporary; don't compound error by responding in kind.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight independence, creativity. Exciting, new contact is featured. Check diet. Fulfill recent resolutions concerning health, recreation and rest. Test ideas. Stick to principles. Imprint your own style.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through on hunch. Make connection with individual who is unorthodox, inventive and willing to listen. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Sweeping changes are on horizon. Know it and prepare.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The natives are restless and that could be your theme. Those who seemed contented make growling noises. Sense of humor is important and so is your ability to communicate. Adjustment in home area is essential.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Obtain hint from Capricorn message. Complacency is the opposite of what you require at this time. Study, review and revise. Tear down, if necessary, for purpose of rebuilding. Aquarian you know could play significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone is telling a tall story and you might have to pay through the nose as a result. Know it and avoid it. Do so by checking facts, material at hand and by asking pointed questions. The more analytical you are now, the better for all concerned.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can be charming to the point of distraction. You attract to you many born under Taurus, Libra and Scorpio. You are going to make money this year with project or plan initiated in July of last year. You are on your way to a more secure future. If single, you will marry, with June an outstanding period in 1974.

Atty. Gen. Quinn to appear on UMass energy panel

By BILL DENSMORE

Unannounced gubernatorial candiate Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn will be one of six participants in a UMass energy panel discussion Monday night, an organizer of the panel said yesterday.

UMass senior and political science major Jay Cleary is organizing the conference along with Robert Harding, a UMass grad student who is Quinn's western Massachusetts front man.

"We tried to get the Coalition for Environmental Quality to sponsor it, but they thought it was too political," Cleary said last night.

With Quinn on the panel will be Springfield gas station owner Harold Murphy, president of the Bay State Independent Gasoline Retailers, Cleary said. Murphy has led numerous protests against federal energy policies.

Other panelists, according to Cleary, will be:

—Dr. Craig Moore, an economist in the UMass school of business;

—Dr. Robert Muncie, director of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission, to discuss mass transit;

—An aid to Rep. Edward P. Boland (D-Springfield), to discuss current Washington developments;

—Dr. William Hutchinson, a botany professor at Holyoke Community College, an environmentalist.

Cleary said the panel discussion would begin at 8:00p.m. in Campus Center room 101 and would be followed by a coffee hour where students can meet with the panelists. The affair will be free of charge, he said.

The philosophy of a UMass gymnast

By KATIE KING
MDC Sports Staff

A gymnast's success is based on a hitting average similar to that of a baseball player's. When he hits an 8.7 or better on a routine, he ups his average--much lower and he does himself no favors. Last Thursday night when the men's gymnastic team defeated Springfield College in a close battle, you can bet that senior co-captain Rich Siekunas was batting for a thousand.

When Rich was a freshman, the Minutemen dropped a match to Springfield that they should have taken easily. Again in his sophomore year a strong Springfield line-up defeated UMass. Then, in his third season of competition, the Minutemen took the meet from the Chiefs by a one and a half point margin. Now, in his final year as an all around man, Rich felt confident long before the meet that the Minutemen would pick up the victory. "It was a wicked pride match,' he said, 'The team was really up for it. In order for Springfield to have posted the win, they would have to have had one of their best nights while we had one of our worst. It would have been embarassing to have lost that one."

It was the competition that attracted Rich to gymnastics. For the past 11 years, under the coaching of his sister, a former UMass gymnast captain, he has spent at least 18 hours a week working out routines on the side horse, high bar, and floor. Four years of competing in the Minuteman line-up has made Rich a consistent performer, but a separated shoulder in his final season has made things a bit frustrating. "I haven't been able to do all that I wanted to do, but after graduation I want to return and help coach the team." Rich pointed out that one of the major problems with the gymnastic program at UMass is the fact that after team members graduate, they don't return to coach younger teammates. He cited Penn State as an example of a school where gymnasts return to coach. "Look where it's gotten them," he exclaimed.

Another lacking feature in the program is promotion. It seems that somehow gymnastics just doesn't get the publicity that other sports receive, nor is it considered a money making sport. Rich feels that an increase in promotion would help raise gymnastics to one of the highest ranked spectator sports on the University. He recalls what television and news coverage did for the Olympic gymnastic competitions. "Take Olga Korbut, for example. Before all the coverage, she was unknown. Now her name is a household word."

To Rich, gymnastics takes great self-discipline, and it demands a high degree of will power. It is a sport in which an athlete cannot achieve a 9.4 overnight, and progression is usually slow and very time consuming. As he said, "Every move requires time and patience. And in the end, it's you against yourself--all alone."

Like other gymnasts, Rich knows that a poor routine or a slip cannot be blamed on an inanimate object such as a horse or highbar. He must carry the blame entirely, and keep in mind that it's a two-way street. When a performance earns a good mark, the gymnast alone receives all the glory and extreme self-satisfaction. It's that individualism that Rich admires most. He considers his routines personal endeavors. His philosophy of gymnastics, though, is surprisingly simple: "You do your best, and the hell with the rest."

No aquatic surprises

UConn sinks swimmers

By BOB HIGGINS
MDC Sports Staff

Nobody really expected the UMass swim team to even come close to beating Yankee Conference champ and perennial power UConn. So when the Huskies jumped to a large early lead and then coasted to a 73-40 victory on Saturday, nobody at the Boyden Pool was very surprised.

Although it was obvious from the start that UConn was too strong for the Minutemen, there were some bright spots for the Minutemen, two of which came in the first two events. The 400-yard medley relay team of George Kwiecen, Dave Boucher, Joe Hebert, and Dick Blaisdell turned in the time of 3:58.2, just .5 seconds off the school record. UConn turned in an identical time, however, and won the event on a judge's decision.

Amazingly enough, the same thing occurred in the 1000-yard freestyle. UMass' freshman phenom Ben Crooker broke his own school record with a time of 11:02.7 (his previous mark was 11:03.3). Yet UConn's Lewis turned in the same time and won on the judge's decision. So the Minutemen were down 13-3 on two incredible close decisions.

But the Huskies soon began to show their superior strength and depth. They took first and third in the 200-yard freestyle (Duncan Lomas took second for UMass); first and second in the 50-yard freestyle (Spencer Sullivan took third); and first and third in the 200-yard individual medley (Carl Zulick took third). And after they took the first three places in the three meter diving (though UMass automatically received one point), the Huskies had an overwhelming lead of 41-11.

UMass took first in the 200-yard butterfly, but unfortunately it didn't count. Coach Bey Melamed, a former Olympic swimmer, entered the race unofficially and won by 10 yards. Officially, UConn took first and second, while Joe Hebert took third for UMass.

UMass dominated the next two events. First, Duncan Lomas took first in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 53.3, and Dick Blaisdell took second. Then co-captain George Kwiecen turned in his best time ever (2:16.6) in winning the 200-yard backstroke, with Scott McNab taking second. Ben Crooker salvaged a second for UMass in the 500-yard freestyle and Dave Boucher took third in the 200-yard breaststroke. In the 12-meter diving competition, Jeff Crouse took third for UMass but Connecticut took the first two places. Joe Hebert, Dick Blaisdell, Duncan Lomas, and Spencer Sullivan, teamed up to win the 400-yard freestyle relay with a time of 3:33.3, making the final score 73-40, UConn.

However, the most exciting swimmer in the meet came in last place in his event. Peter McDwitt, the 10-year old son of the UConn coach, swam unofficially in the 200-yard individual medley. Peter had both teams and the whole crowd behind him, and did an admirable job.

The Ali shuffle

By TOM O'CONNELL
MDC Sports Staff

Okay boxing fans (I'm sure local news coverage of the sport is no reflection of our number, if it was, I wouldn't bother writing this) let's take a look at the story behind the on-off-on-off Ali-Quarry fight.

Here are the basics. Gil Clancy, Jerry's manager, had a verbal agreement with Garden (that's Madison Square) matchmaker Teddy Brenner and Ali's people for a May 6 bout between the two heavyweights. The press conference was all set up, Quarry was on his way to New York by plane, and through a phone call to Ali's absent attorney Bob Arum it was learned that the former champ had changed his mind, that he didn't want to fight so soon after the Frazier bout. Clancy became angry and made the charge of a possible "Black conspiracy" to keep the title from any white man. Hey, minority sympathizers, don't side with Ali too quicly. Quarry is only half Irish. His mom is an American Indian, and the Quarrys were at least as poor as the Clays before Jerry and Cassius struck it rich in boxing. Anyhow, the racial remarks, as usual drew more fans' attention then the planned fight itself. The remarks could be justifiable.

After the second Ali-Norton fight, Champ George Foreman announced that he would fight Quarry in November. Foreman backed out. After a quick kayo of nobody James J. Woody Quarry signed to fight Earnie Shavers. Since his one round, one punch knockout of former W.B.A. Champ Jimmy Ellis, the other top contenders had avoided Earnie. Quarry pummeled him to defeat in the opening round. Then the agreement to fight Ali went down the drain. In short, Quarry fights everyone but the top three contenders and the champ will not go near Quarry.

Let's face it. Muhammed Ali knows a lot about fighting and fighters. He knows as does his friends, former Light-heavyweight champ Jose Torres, author of Ali's biography, that the first Quarry fight probably would have ended with a different outcome had Quarry avoided being cut. Quarry's fight plan was to wait until the middle rounds when Ali would begin to tire before putting on the pressure. Torres, in Float Like A Butterfly, Sting Like A Bee, called the cut a "gift of Allah", since Quarry doubled Ali against the ropes in the best round of the fight, the second, with the only hard hook he had thrown up to that point. Ali apparently agreed to some degree. In the rematch, Muhammed was at his best since his comeback, possible the best of his career. His low weight and lightning speed attested to his respect for Quarry, who wasn't himself. Whether it was seeing his brother kayoed by Bob Foster in the semi-final or marital problems or a hangover, I don't know, only Jerry does. But how many men can do a punching bag imitation for Muhammed Ali and not leave his feet? Quarry did just that.

Ali, Foreman, Norton, and possible even Joe Frazier, who never ducked anyone, are afraid of Jerry Quarry. It is not that Quarry will definitely beat them all, but that he has a very good chance. He is definitely a smarter, more mature fighter now than he ever was before. He can spoil that $5 million Foreman-Ali gate. But I can't understand why Foreman's people advised (and very effectively) Ali not to take on Quarry. If Jerry was to beat Ali, a Foreman-Quarry Championship Fight would do as well as a defense against Ali, who is just off a not too convincing victory over Frazier.

Unless, of course George Foreman & Co. think Jerry Quarry is a bigger risk than is Muhammed Ali.

Skiwomen win weekend pair at Tenny Mt.

By L. HUSSEY
MDC Sports Staff

Returning again to Tenny Mountain in Plymouth, New Hampshire, the UMass women's ski team made a clean sweep in the slalom and giant slalom events.

Despite slushy and icy snow conditions, which made racing potentially dangerous and questionable, the slalom event was held as scheduled in the morning with all eight teams competing. UMass' number one skier, Betsy Hussey again won best overall in the slalom event, leading her team to another win over arch-rivals Radcliffe and UConn. Second and third for UMass, and sixth and ninth in the overall standings were Rachel Courtney and Galen Good.

After the morning's victory the women skiers were hoping to repeat their performance in the afternoon giant slalom event. The course was very fast and wide open. It was set in a manner to avoid, rutting in the soft snow, and the rocks, laid bare by the morning slalom.

. The team turned in its most consistent performance ever. All eight women completed the course without a fall or disqualification. In the individual standings Betsy Hussey placed second. Rachel Courtney came in eighth with Jean Hayden and Galen Good placing tenth and eleventh. Eloise Crattuso, Marie Spiegil, Teresa Hutley and Debby Mellet also came in with good runs, giving UMass their second victory of the day.

If snow in the north holds out, the team will head for Mittersill in Franconia, New Hampshire, this weekend for the final meet of the season.

UMass trackmen 4th in New Englands

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Sports Staff

Although the best race over the weekend was between two streakers in Southwest, the UMass Indoor Track team scored 24 points in the New England Championships, Saturday, at Storrs.

The Minutemen captured fourth place, ten points behind Boston College. Northeastern won seven of the meet's 16 events to nip UConn for the championship. NU totaled 51 points, while UConn scored 50.

UMass picked up some early and expected points in the jumping events, with three of the top five finishers. Bob Adamson moved from fifth to second on his last jump, with teammates Pete Ryan and Ken Adamson following. Ken came back to place in his second event of the meet, the triple jump. Adamson took fifth and Mike Geraghty placed third with a jump of 45'9½".

Hurdler Jim Hennessy finished third with a time of 7.6. Bill Gillin ran the mile in 4:11.5, just behind Charlie Duggan of Springfield. Duggan, who finished second, was timed in 4:10.2. The only other individual scoring points was Randy Thomas, who captured third in the two-mile with a time of 9:00.

The mile relay team was nipped for second place by BC, running the distance in 3:24.5. The two-mile relay team consisting of Devin Croft, Pete Byron, Chris Farmer and Jack Maloney lowered another school record with a time of 7:42.5. The quartet was just 2.5 seconds off the winning time, but finished fifth in the closest and most exciting race of the day.

Billy Santos and Arnie Johnson

UMass' dynamic JV duo

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

The honor roll of famous team-ups is endless...Elgin Baylor and Jerry West; Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris; Kreem Jabbar and Oscar Robertson; and Billy Santos and Arnie Johnson....

Unless you're a follower of the UMass JV basketball team, (Do you keep seasonal stats on the Toledo Mud Hens? Have you been to the center of the Sun?) you probably don't know who Billy Santos and Arnold Johnson are.

Billy Santos is a 5'11" sophomore Phys. Ed major from Brockton, who lives in Grayson.

Arnie Johnson is 6'6", also a second year man, a PoliSci major from Boston, and he dorms in Washington tower.

And they both play basketball very well.

...Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale; The Lone Ranger and Tonto; Gale Sayers and Brian Picollo; Billy Santos and Arnie Johnson...

They both hope to play varsity next year. There will be several starting spots open. Will either one make the starting five?

"It's too early to tell", says Santos, "A lot of things can happen between now and the next season."

Indeed. One of those things may be the change of Arnie Johnson from center to forward.

"I wouldn't mind that at all," relates Johnson. "In high school I played forward, because I was only 6'3" then. Our center was six-six".

...Batman and Robin; Kelley and Brophy; Billy Santos and Arnie Johnson...

Both have had some superb games for the junior Minutemen.

A.J., when pressed, had to admit that his best game was against St. Thomas More at the Cage. Remember that one, all you fan(s) out there? It was one of the few (4) contests the squad has lost all year.

B.S. likes to play Connecticut, both at home and away. He scored 26 at Storrs, and had a memorable 30 point night here. He amazed the crowd that game when he outleaped UConn's 6'7" center in a jump ball.

...Don Earle and Cooney Weiland; Death and Taxes; Billy Santos and Arnie Johnson...

"I like George McGinnis," relates Johnson. Anybody who has seen the nifty Indiana Pacer forward play can see why. It's easy to draw a comparison between the sweet shooter McGinnis and Arnie.

"Nate Archibald is one guy I can admire--he's a small man in a big man's game," says Billy, looking at the towering Johnson. Again, to compare is easy; Santos is an inch shorter than Archibald.

...Babe Ruth and Lou Gheeig; Moe and Curly Howard, Better homes and Worse Gardens; William Santos and Arnold Johnson.

UMass seeded fifth in Div. II hockey

Opens playoffs at Boston State

BOSTON (AP) - Vermont, the defending champion with a mighty 23-4 record, was top-seeded as expected Sunday for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Division II hockey tournament.

Selection committee chairman Gus Sullivan of Boston State announced the seedings and pairings for the start of the tournament next weekend.

Merrimack, 19-10-2, was seeded second, Salem State, 20-3 third, and Boston State, 18-10-2 fourth. The top four-seeded teams will have home ice advantage in the quarter-finals.

Massachusetts 9-11 was seeded fifth, followed in order by Williams 12-5-2, Norwich 13-7-2 and Army 18-6.

Merrimack will be host to Norwich, Williams will play at Salem State, and Boston Sate will be at home against Massachusetts in opening games next Saturday. Vermont's opener will be delayed probably until Sunday, because Army has a game commitment in Canada.

The semifinals will be held March 6, with the championship game March 9. All games will be played at the home of the higher seeded team.

Sabres snap B's streak

BUFFALO (AP) - Rene Robert's 18th goal of the season early in the second period helped the Buffalo Sabres snap a nine-game Boston unbeaten streak with a 3-2 victory over the Bruins in a nationally televised National Hockey League game Sunday.

Robert's goal was the second by the Sabres in less than two minutes of the second period as Buffalo overcame an early Boston lead.

The Bruins scored at 2:22 of the opening period on their second shot of the game, by Don Marcotte.

The Sabres tied it little more than two minutes later on a power play goal, Jim Lorentz deflecting a long shot past Gilles Gilbert.

Phil Esposito then put the Bruins ahead again with his 51st goal of the season at 12:20, a 25-footer which put the Bruins ahead 2-1.

Gerry Meehan tied the score with a 15-foot backhander at the six-minute mark of the second period and less than two minutes later, Robert delivered the game-winning goal after a pass from Gil Perrault.

There was no scoring in the third period as the Sabres, led by goalies Dave Dryden, protected their one-goal margin. Boston outshot Buffalo 35-21 in the game, including a 16-6 edge in the first period.

JV hoopsters clobber TVTC to end season

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

The lead paragraph was all but typed — "Gary Kapinos led the UMass JV's over Thames Valley Technical College last Saturday night at the Cage with a shooting performance that would rival even Wyatt Earp's."

After all, the Minutemen were leading by 16 points, Kapinos was shooting the heck out of the net, and it was well into the second half.

But as they say in JV basketball, "The game is not over until the final turnover".

Thames Valley cut the lead to 7 points, 70-63, with less than eight minutes left. And Kapinos stopped scoring.

Enter the Dynamic Duo. Exit Thames Valley's hopes. Forget the lead sentence.

Arnold Johnson and Billy Santos scored 23 of UMass' final 27 points. Johnson had 15 while Santos had 8. In this same period TVTC had all of 6 points.

So, the final score: UMass - 97, Thames Valley Technical - 69.

Johnson hit a superb 11 of 17 from the floor, sank all his foul shots, grabbed 17 rebounds, and generally made Thames Valley players hate life during the last eight minutes.

Kapinos, though he sank only one basket in Johnson-Santos Crazy-Time, hit for 26 points and grabbed 12 rebounds in what was probably his finest game of the year.

Santos had 16 points, quite a task when his 9 assists are also considered.

Stanley Hodgin and Dave Tewhill also performed well. Hodgin matched Santos' assist total while Tewhill as the fourth junior-Minuteman to score in double figures, with 10 points.

For the losers, towhead guard Jeff Butler swished his way to 21 points, Jack Lima netted 14, and Marty Sheldon got 13.

Hondo sparks Celts past Hawks, 111-96

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - John Havlicek sparked a Boston outburst early in the second half and the Celtics rolled to a 111-96 National Basketball Association victory over Atlanta Sunday, defeating the Hawks for the fifth consecutive time this season.

Leading just 48-46, the Celtics outscored the Hawks 16-3 in the next six minutes and were in command the rest of the way. Havlicek scored eight points in the explosion en route to taking game honors with 32.

Atlanta, playing without injured Lou Hudson, made a brief rally early in the fourth period, closing to within 80-70, but the Celtics then broke loose and outscored the Hawks 12-2 to nail down the decision.

Record win clinches conference

Seven (7) UMies hit double figures

UMass massacres Maine, 108-38

By STEVE DeCOSTA

"I'm just awed by what happened," remarked a disbelieving but jubilant Jack Leaman.

And indeed it was an awe-inspiring performance of total dominance on the basketball court that was turned in by the four departing Minuteman seniors and their teammates Saturday night as they dismantled Maine by a shopping record margin of 70, yes I said 70, points, 108-38.

It was a score that must have sent hundreds of late night editors into a frenzy, calling the wire services for a double, or even triple-check of what had to seem like a misprint.

But the only mistake of the night was on the part of the Black Bears, who decided to show up at all, or maybe for hundreds of UMass fans who decided to skip the game or showed up too late to crash the gate.

There is absolutely no way possible to describe what happened on the court. Suffice it to say that it was Senior Night, there were 5000 screaming UMies who seemed to be hanging from the rafters, and everything, just everything fell into place.

The night's final shot exemplified the near mystical quality of the game. Mike Stokes stole the ball from a Maine dribbler on the far-side of mid-court with time running out. As the buzzer sounded, Stokes heaved up a lunging two-hander from 50 feet away that arched toward the iron.

"When I first saw it, I said it couldn't go in," said Leaman. "But then I figured it had to: everything else had been going in all night long."

And Leaman was right. The ball glanced off the glass and slipped through the twines with a whispering swish that was immediately replaced by a roar that shook the foundations of the Cage, the campus, and all of New England college basketball.

But the night was for the seniors. The crowd came for one purpose, to honor the likes of Al Skinner, Rick Pitino, Peter Trow, and John Olson, who enjoyed their final, and as it turned out, finest hour in the Cage.

Skinner wound up as the night's scorer with 21 points and pulled in eight rebounds, all in 23 minutes of playing time. After sitting out most of the second half in favor of the subs, Skinner came back for an encore to the cries of "We want Al."

With less than a minute left, Skinner got the ball under the basket. Al went up for what everyone just knew would be one last jam. But the defender pushed Skinner too far under the hoop, and the senior forward had to be content to lay it in, for his last hoop ever in Curry Hicks.

For Rick Pitino, it was a night of releasing all the tensions built up in three years of playing for a well-patterned team. Pitino turned on all the moves, behind-the-back, between-the-legs, and combinations of the two. He finished with only six points, but ran the offense with near-perfection.

Peter Trow hustled all over the Cage court for the last time, and in the process picked up 16 points and six caroms.

And even John Olson, a forgotten man who usually played only when the outcome was no longer in doubt, contributed heavily to the cause with some aggressive defensive play and six hard-earned rebounds.

But it was a team effort that felled the Black Bears, and the supporting cast deserves more than its share of accolades.

Greg Duarte, who didn't even play in the first half, garnered 13 rebounds and 11 points in all of 17 minutes of game action.

The other juniors also contributed, John Murphy although used sparingly, heaved in 10 points and Bill Endicott finished up wirh 15 markers.

Mike Stokes, in addition to his afforementioned last-minute heroics, split the twines for 10.

The freshman duet of Steve Mayfield and Joe Semder continued their steady improvement and gave hope to continued basketball success in the future with their solid play in the front-court.

Actually, the game should have been close. The Bears came into the contest with a record of 13-8 and appeared loose and ready to play in warm-ups.

UMass was tight in the early going and seemed to have difficulty establishing their offensive pattern The Minutemen broke to a 6-0 lead thanks to good "D" and poor Maine shooting, but the Bears climbed back to make the score 6-4.

Then came the deluge. The Minutemen ran off 14 unanswered points, saw Maine counter with two, and then came back with another 16 straight.

It was coasting time from there as UMass rolled to a 50-18 half time lead.

If you get your kicks from statistics, check these out:

-UMass solidified their number one ranking in the country in rebound margin by destroying Maine off the boards 71-31.

-27 assists were turned in by the homesters, while Maine could manage only five.

-Bob Warner, the leading rebounder and third leading scorer in the conference was held to only nine points and as many rebounds.

And if you like a little wildness:

-The Minutemen kept their fingers on the "reject button". blocking eight shots.

John Murphy blocked a shot with his foot, kicking the ball out of the shooters hands on an attempted scoop lay-up.

-Steve Mayfield accounted for two of the Maine points as he tapped a rebound through the wrong hoop.

Impeachment unexpected: Nixon

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said last night "I do not expect to be impeached," and renounced resignation as a step he said would threaten the survival of the presidency itself.

Herbert W. Kalmbach, a corporate lawyer who handled President Nixon's personal legal affairs, pleaded guilty to two charges stemming from his political fund-raising in 1970. — See page 5.

"...It is vitally important in this nation that the presidency of the United States not be hostage to what happens to the popularity of a president at one time or another," he told a nationally broadcast news conference.

So, while he forecast Republican successes in the 1974 congressional elections, Nixon repeated his vow that he will never resign, even if GOP candidates face the prospect of wholesale defeats.

"...We have a lot of work left to do, more than three years left to do, and I'm going to stay here until I get it done," he said, leaning forward, jaw set as if to emphasize his words.

"I want my party to survive, but more important I want the presidency to survive," he said. One of the prime problems on that agenda is the energy crisis, which, with Watergate, impeachment and the economy, were major topics of the 38-minute news conference.

Nixon said he believes gasoline rationing can be avoided, but threatened to veto an emergency energy bill now pending in Congress because of its price rollback provisions.

He said the administration "will not stand by...and allow a recession to occur." Nixon conceded that inflation remains a nagging problem, but said he expects the economic picture to improve in the second half of the year.

Nixon also said that in the judgment of White House lawyers, a criminal offense is required as grounds for the impeachment of a President.

In response to a question as to whether his interst in ending the Watergate matter would be served by a full impeachment trial, Nixon said:

"Well, a full impeachment trial in the Senate under our Constitution comes only when the House determines that there is an impeachable offense. It is my belief that the House after it conducts its inquiries will not reach that determination. I do not expect to People spend long hours strolling in and out of the stores and making a day of their shopping trip.

By LARRY CARPMAN

First there was farmland then there was a mall. It seemed to happen almost as simply as that.

The Mountain Farms Mall on Route 9 in Hadley is just over seven months old and has changed the Amherst-Hadley area in some quiet yet important ways. The structure cost between four and five million dollars and has room for 33 stores, 29 of which are now leased.

Why a mall in this serene country community?

In a market analysis for the mall provided by the developer, Charles Schnier Enterprises of Bloomfield, Connecticut, it is revealed that "Hampshire County, where Mountain Farms Mall will be located, has had the third largest population explosion in Massachusetts over the past ten years." Also, the report points out, "Hampshire and Franklin Counties have only "Class D" shopping centers" (i.e. only neighborhood centers with one or two variety or discount stores). The only mall in this area before Mountain Farms was built was located in Springfield.

"People are getting away from downtown shops," said Jeff Bryan, Promotion Director for the mall.

"Mass transit is to blame for that," he said.

The student population in the area, along with the population explosion of Hampshire county, would seem to be a good reason to locate the mall in the community. However, the mall is concentrating on being community orientated, not simply student minded.

"People can use the mall for anything," said Bryan. He suggested a recent bake sale as an example.

"We don't particularly cater to the student needs at present," said Louis G. Spanose, general store manager for Almy's. "We could survive without the students, he said, but in the future we hope we can cater more to the college community."

The mall attracts between 1,000 and 2,000 people on weekdays and slightly more on Saturdays.

"People probably went to either Greenfield or Springfield before the mall," said Spanose.

The mall's primary market is estimated to be 150,374 people. It includes Amherst, Belchertown, Northampton, Sunderland, Hatfield, and 15 other surrounding communities. There is a secondary market for the mall that also includes 20 town totaling 60,422 people.

The location of the mall is one of convenience. To many people in the area Mountain Farms serves as a place to spend the whole day. While walking through the mall on a weekday this reporter found many people spending long hours strolling in and out of the stores and generally making a day out of a trip to the shopping center.

The mall has had some effects ehich are beginning to show:

—it has most definitely increased the flow of traffic along Route 9,

—it has had some effect on downtown Amherst and Northampton stores,

—it increased greatly the student employment for the area.

These effects will be included in the next two parts of the series.

Sargent, Backman rally for gun control bills

By BOB MACKAY
MDC Correspondent

BOSTON — More than 1,000 people jammed a state house hearing on gun control proposals yesterday.

The joint committee on Public Safety heard public testimony on more than thirty bills dealing with the controversial issue.

However, the gathering was not an accurate reflection of the public's views towards gun control. Aside from legislative committee members and representatives of the press, approximately 90 per cent of those in attendance were representing various organizations opposed to gun control.

The lopsided hearing featured a large number of people in the audience wearing tags saying, "Stick to your Guns."

Governor Francis W. Sargent testified for his legislation to ban Saturday night specials," or all handguns with a barrell of five inches or less.

Also, under Sargents bill, Senate no. 1474, a person using a gun for legitimate purposes would first have to pass a training course.

Legitimate purposes outlined in the bill include hunting, competition, and - under specific circumstances - self-defense.

Sargent asked the legislature to require a training program for any person who owns a handgun "for legitimate purposes," and he proposed that the state pay for guns which are turned in.

At a hearing on proposed handgun legislation before the legislature's Public Safety Committee, Sargent said handgun ownership in America is at an all time high and in Massachusetts alone 150,000 persons have permits to carry guns.

"In only one case out of 250 does a homeowner with a gun successfully block the criminal," Sargent said. "But for every criminal who is stopped with a gun, four innocent people die through accidents."

The governor said, "the time for rational handgun control is here and now. We cannot allow this proliferation of guns to continue unabated.

"As long as concealable guns can be found in American homes, criminals will have no trouble stealing them."

The hearings saw considerable testimony from both sides of the volatile issue and emotionally charged arguments were an integral part of the day's events.

Women's career awareness subject of special program

By MARJORIE MORSE

A special program has been started on campus to deal with women's career awareness. The need for such a program developed after a number of women appeared at Everywoman's Center seeking help in finding a career suitable to their life plans. Consequently several of the Center's workers got together in October of '73 and formed the Career Task Force Awareness Program.

Terry Rumpf, a counselor for the Task Force, explains what has been happening with the program: "Since then two of us, Elizabeth Kennedy and myself, have been hired by the Student Development office in Berkshire. What is happening is a recognition of the fact that women and work have special kinds of problems."

Ms. Rumpf separates the women participating in the program into the categories of undergrads, graduates, alumni and people not affiliated with the University. These women come in asking where they can get a job in this area, or they are already employed but want a change. Ms. Rumpf noted that a large number of the latter roup are teachers.

The Task Force offers short term counselling or, four week counselling on a one to one basis for the women especially confused as to their career aims. The two counsellors meet with about seventy women a month. The Task Force helps the women get the jobs they want, along with aid with resumes, interviews or any special problems.

Ms. Rumpf stresses the practicality of the Forces approach. "We help them set their goals and help them in their decision making. Sometimes we use the vocational test if they feel they'd benefit from it," she said.

The aspect of life planning in conjunction with career development is an important part of the Task Force's approach. Ms. Rumpf explains that "women face decisions that men don't," for instance the question of career and children. "There are very few models of the two-career family to follow," she said.

"Women need to be made aware that there are options open besides the usual female occupations such as teacher, nurse and social worker, that are really okay for them," continues Ms. Rumpf. "These are rewarding, fullfilling careers. Many of the traditional women's careers are overloaded anyway."

Job inequality is another problem faced by women. Ms. Rumpf notes that students may not be seriously confronted with this difficulty yet as conditions at school are "relatively equal." It is outside the University that the inequalities begin.

Besides counselling, the Task Force offers referrals, a job bank, self-workshops, a Speaker's Bureau, a career conference for high school guidance counsellors, weekly meetings and pilot programs. The aim of the pilot programs is to take the Force from its central location and bring it into the dorms. Two have already been established in Central and Northeast. "This is the kind of workshop," says Ms. Rumpf, "I'd like to see every student take before getting out of here."

Even with the success of the program Ms. Rumpf says that there is a large problem. "If we can continue to do what we are doing we're going to need funding. We have no definite means of support and this is very threatening to us," she said. Ms. Rumpf feels that "it would be too bad if all this got built up and then was wiped out by the end of the year." More recognition of the program is needed before support will be received.

The two counsellors work out of the Student Development office now. The positions they hold are not yet secure. According to Ms. Rumpf she and Ms. Kennedy work "as a liaison between the Student Development office and Everywoman's Center." Hopefully the importance of their jobs and the work of the Task Force will be realized and support will be provided to assure continuation of the program.

Students interested in counselling should contact either Elizabeth Kennedy or Terry Rumpf at 5-5033 Berkshire or make an appointment at Goodell.

Legislature repeals drinking age bill

BOSTON (AP) — A bill repealing the year old law lowering the drinking age in Massachusetts from 21 to 18 was rejected by the House yesterday on a 156-61 role call.

The bill had been given an unfavorable report by the legislature's Government Regulations Committee.

The House also overturned an adverse committee report and voted to consider a bill raising the state meals tax exemption from $1 to $2.

That bill then was shipped off to the House Ways and Means Committee.

The MDC Editor-in-Chief and News Editor said today they will meet Thursday night will all interested publicity managers of campus groups and organizations who submit press releases to the newspaper.

According to Karen Lynch and Mike Kneeland, the purpose of the meeting will be to explain press release policies to the groups' representatives. They also said the meeting should promote better understanding between groups seeking publicity and the student newspaper.

News Editor Mike Kneeland will show the representatives how press releases should be written to help insure publication.

The meeting will begin at 8:00 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Dubois papers seen as valuable set

By JUDY BOUCHER

The W.E.B. DuBois papers, "the most significant collection at this library" according to Mrs. Kathrine Emerson, director of Archives, arrived at UMass within a month after moving into the new library. The collection of DuBois, an outspoken leader of the Black's since the early 1900's, consist of manuscripts, correspondence, medals, tapes, degrees, citations, and photographs.

An agreement was made with Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois to reserve a room on the 25th floor in the northwest corner of the library in addition to paying her $150,000 over a ten year period. This will be financed by special university funds attached to the Chancellory and not from taxpayers money.

Two-thirds of the collection was acquired in July where they were previously in the possession of Dr. Herbert Aptheker of Brooklyn. In August Chancellor Bromery traveled to Cairo, Egypt, where Dr. DuBois spent the last years of his life, and supervised the transporting of the other one third of the collection.

Mrs. Emerson reported that "the papers are not being used for research at this tiee, they are too old and fragile". There have been, however, requests for information from students working on doctrinal dissertations and from DuBois experts.

To prevent further deterioration of the papers, a hygrothermograph, a sensitive instrument which continually reads and records the room temperature and humidity level, has been installed. The room temperature must be maintained around 65 degrees and the humidity level must be between 45 to 55 degrees.

Before the papers can become available to the public, each individual sheet must under go a preservation process. There are approximately 100,000 to 150,000 sheets of paper.

The preservation will be done by well-trained personnel from the New England Document Conservation Center in North Andover. The process will involve cleaning to remove the dust, deacidification, and strengthening the page by fusioning it with a transparent back.

Once this is accomplished, a curator will then be able to arrange, index and describe the content of the papers. A grant for $150,000 has been applied for from the National Endowment for Humanities to cover the cost of restoring the papers and funds for the curator.

The money has not been granted yet, but Mrs. Emerson believes it will be given to UMass "because the papers are highly regarded nationally". She explained that once the money has been allocated for the project, it will be two to three years before "all qualified scholars will have accessability of the papers".

The collection will be microfilmed so copies can be made available elsewhere while it will also take wear and tear off the original. Also, "UMass will not merely index the DuBois papers but will have a computer based index to all other holdings of W.E.B. DuBois Papers" said Mrs. Emerson.

With the acquisition of the W.E.B. DuBois papers, Mrs. Emerson predicted that UMass in the future will probably be a leading depository for the collections of other Black Scholars.

Northampton Volunteers:

companionship, involvement

By PAMELA NORMANDY

The Northampton Volunteers are a group of UMass students who visit the Northampton State Hospital patients every Thursday. About one hundred volunteers work to develop a relationship with mentally disturbed adults.

The Volunteers provide companionship for the patients and involement in activities such as basketball, pool, cards or singing. The students choose between men's and women's wards and between the different psychological problems the hospital attempts to heep.

Formed more than five years ago, this group has grown in number and the format has changed. Debbie Daniels, this year's chief UMass coordinator, noted that in only the two years she has been involved in the program, it has become closer-knit organization with more independence from the hospital. Another modification is that a student can volunteer or get credit through Outreach or the Psychology department.

A bus is provided for the program with pick-up spots in front of Hasbrouck and Patterson House, Southwest. The bus also stops for several Smith students also involved in the program before reaching the hospital.

Upon entering, the students gather in the auditorium for introductory remarks and group discussions headed by five University Year For Action students, Jerry DesJardin, Paul Freites, Bill Glaser, Carolyn Smith and Jan Shapiro. It is hoped that in the future, speakers will be brought in to give supplementary information on the patients' disorders. The students then go into the wards and work with the patients. After about an hour, the students return to the auditorium to discuss what happened in their session.

The Northampton Volunteers exist to give the student an opportunity to go to the hospital with a commitment to one-to-one, casual involvement, and participate in group activities there with the patients.

Parking issue brought to court

By FRITS GUERTSEN

The University won the first round in a court battle concerning the campus parking situation. The trial took place Friday afternoon at 2:30 in Hampshire District Court in Northampton.

Of the three students against whom the University had grievances, two were found guilty on all charges and one had his case postponed.

Vernon Rhett and Steven Carey have both appealled the verdicts they received. The case involving David Carlon was postponed, pending the outcome of a case now in Superior Court, to which it is related.

Although the cases had originally been intended to be test cases to try the parking system itself, the presiding judge, the Hon. Luke Ryan ruled out this course of action when he declared, "I'm only interested in the facts of these particular cases. I don't want to hear anything else.

Rhett was charged with parking in a tow zone. The space in question is situated in front of Brett House on the corner closest to the infirmary. The parking guard who issued the ticket and authorized the towing of the car, said that Rhett's vehicle was occupying a space demarcated as "Physician's Parking — Tow Zone".

Rhett testified that to the right of the space he occupied was a space reserved for the Head of Residence and to the left were two spaces reserved for physicians, but that his space was unmarked.

Rhett said "There is easily room for four cars in that area. That space has been the subject of a lot of debate and confusion lately. I had never heard of anyone getting towed or ticketed from there however."

Carey was charged with three counts of parking his motorcycle on a sidewalk and three counts of parking his motorcycle in a restricted area without the proper decal.

The parking guard who issued the tickets said that he had found the motorcycle illegally parked on a sidewalk in Southwest three days in a row. A few days later the same guard discovered the motorcycle parked in an area reserved for motorcycles with decals, also for three days in a row.

The attorney for the defense, Harry Miles of Amherst, attempted to bring through various testimonies the fact that the area specified in the first three counts was not clearly demarcated as a sidewalk.

Judge Ryan disallowed this, saying "Any schoolboy who doesn't know the difference between the street and the sidewalk has no business being at the University."

When Miles attempted to press his case, he was found in contempt of court and fined 50 dollars.

An appeal request for both cases was made by Miles immediately after the guilty verdicts were rendered. No date has yet been established however for the new trials.

Snow, ...I thought you said snow.

Fire hazards of library questioned

There are no serious fire hazards in the University of Massachusetts library, a University official told the Collegian yesterday.

Last week informed sources cited for the Collegian fire-safety inadequacies as one of several problems facing UMass administrators and maintenance men.

However, Barry W. Averill, director of University Health Services has presented information which refutes the sources' charge that the library is "a fire trap."

"There are no serious fire hazards on this campus, but we are very concerned about educating people to act properly in the event of a fire," Averill said in an interview yesterday.

"Most of the charges made by the sources are inaccurate and misconceived."

The fire-safety hazards cited by the sources included:

—lack of a sprinkler system

—no evacution plan

—stairwells acting as flues

—stand pipes improperly hinged; and therefore useless

—"fire resistant" carpets that apparently burn

—no means of escape because elevators are called to main level.

Averill challenged the accuracy of each of the allegations except the carpets, but added that their fire resistance would be studied in the near future.

There was never a sprinkler system installed in the library because the present state sprinkler law did not exist at the time of its construction.

But according to Averill, it is not of primary concern "because sprinklers were meant to save property and not lives."

"And since sprinklers are highly expensive to put in--and they could accidently go off during a false alarm and ruin millions of books--we question their financial feasibility."

As for the absence of an evacuation plan, he said "You don't evacuate a 26-story building."

"Anything over eight stories it is recommended that you do not evacuate. The appropriate procedure is to exit everyone from the fire floor above and below."

"The stairwells would not act as flues unless opened, Averill said. And since the library is constructed of concrete and still with only its contents burnable, a fire would be contained within a compartment. The smoke would not travel from floor to floor."

The stand pipes which are available in the stairwells to hook up fire hose are not deficient, he said, since the fire would not be fought from the fire level.

Quinn backs preferred gas sales by dealers

By MARTIN J. WATERS and BILL DENSMORE

State attorney general Robert H. Quinn said last night he favors the continued application of "preferential treatment" to good customers of gas stations in the Bay State.

Under questioning from a panel discussion audience of one-hundred in the campus center, the probable Democratic gubernatorial candidate said gas station dealers have a right to give more gas to their best customers and may give a pre-set minimum to others. But he also said it would be discriminatory for a station to give no gas at all to any driver.

Quinn responded to questions from students who, said his ruling allows discrimination against students and others.

During an earlier radio interview, Quinn said: "So long as during the opening hours nobody is turned away, special consideration may be given to regular customers."

During the "Off the Hook" interview program on WMUA radio, Quinn said if gasoline stations were forced to treat all customers alike, it would mean "total shut down of all our gasoline stations, crippling our state and threatening the livelihood of our residents."

Sitting on a "Western Massachusetts Energy Crisis Panel" with Bay State Gasoline Retailers president Harold Miller of Springfield, Quinn said "everyone who gets in a gas line should get some gasoline."

Murphy said during an interview after the panel that he favors preferential treatment based on the need of the motorist rather than how good a customer the driver is.

But he also acknowledges, that basing service solely on need would be protested by station owners.

If a dealer had to chose between the two allocation systems, "for his own profit, it would be his own good customer" that would get the gas.

Quinn reaffirmed his disagreement with federal policy on the treatment of gasoline customers by retailers. He said service stations my give preferential treatment to certain customers "if they handle all customers at least to a minimum."

The Attorney General's position appears to contradict the policy of Federal Energy Administrator William Simon. Simon's office says it is illegal for service stations to engage in any form of preferential treatment.

Murphy expressed confidence that the federal government's fuel allocation efforts will begin to alleviate the problems of both dealers and motorists.

"We have a lot of confidence in Simon," he said.

Murphy asked the panel's audience to accept surtailed amounts of driving and the inconveniences of the fuel shortage.

"This summer is not going to be easy" for vacationers, according to Murphy, "if we don't cut back, government's going to come out with rationing." He said he has not met anyone who favors coupon rationing.

A zoologist at Holyoke Community CoLlege, Dr. David Stickel, spoke about the various alternative sources of energy available now and for the future. He claimed that the Atomic Energy Commission (A.E.C.) is extremely lax in its safety research. Stickel cited an experiment in which it was found female lizards became sterile from exposure to "relatively moderate" nuclear radiation, while the males did not. He then said: "To this day, the A.E.C. uses the human male in determining radiation-sterility relationships." Solar energy will likely be practical within a relatively short timespan, according to Stickel, who added that the Massachusetts coast is second only to California in the number of "sun days" in the continental United States, making the sun an especially useful energy source here.

Asst. Prof. Craig Moore of the UMass School of Business Administration related his experiences with officials in Washington, condemning the federal government's overall handling of the energy situation as "totally inept."

Moore said: "The reason they're not rationing is that they don't know how to." He claimed that mild weather this winter averted a major fuel shortage, saying: "We've just been damn lucky."

Kissinger begins mission to disengage Israel and Syria

LONDON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger began his new Middle East peace mission yesterday. He was arriving here on the first stage of the assignment, aimed at getting Israeli and Syrian forces to disengage on the Golan Heights.

But as he was flying from Washington, gunfire exploded along the tense truce line, the Israeli military command announced. It said Israeli and Syrian soldiers clashed with light weapons and recoilless rifles near Tel Shams in the northern Golan sector after the Syrians tried to advance over the cease-fire line. No casualties were reported.

Kissinger holds brief talks with British leaders today, and diplomats reported some evidence to suggest he already has laid the groundwork for separating the October Middle East war foes.

One sign of this was provided by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat who has publicly forecast the success of the Kissinger mission. Sadat's foreign minister lately has been active, along with other senior Arab diplomats, in consultation with Kissinger is Washington.

Another sign was provided by well-informed Middle Eastern diplomats who declined to be identified. They said there have been intensive discussions between Arab, American and Israeli authorities on a disengagement formula similar in principle to the one that led to the separation of Israeli and Egyptian forces along the Suez Canal.

If Kissinger succeeds, it could pave the way for resumption of the recessed Geneva peace talks and an easing of the Arab oil embargo against the United States.

Diplomatic sources in Damascus said Kissinger would have more difficulty arranging a Golan disengagement than the Suez pact because of substantial opposition within the Damascus regime to any negotiations with Israel. And his talks in Israel will be conplicated by a ministerial crisis.

But sources in the Syrian capital said they were certain Kissinger will emerge from his talks with Syrian leaders carrying a list of Israeli prisoners of war, estimated to number 80.

Israel has insisted that the list, and visits to its POWs by the Red Cross, precede any negotiations on military disengagement in Golan, the strategic plateau that overlooks Lake Tiberias.

In return, it was understood in Damscus, Israel would agree to evacuate the 300-square-mile bulge on the Damascus-Kuneitra road it captured in fighting last October, and commit itself to eventual withdrawal from some of the territory captured in the 1967 war.

Syrian sources said the government was prepared to accept a U.S. guarantee of Israeli withdrawal.

Shell Oil fails to dislodge Douglas

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major oil company sought and failed yesterday to dislodge Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas from a case concerning natural gas regulation.

Shell Oil Co. asked Douglas to drop out of the case, or failing that, for his colleagues to take the unprecedented step of forcing him to disqualify himself because of a speech Douglas made, reportedly critical of oil and gas corporations.

The plea was rejected in a brief, routine order.

In other actions the court refused to interfere with alower court decision upholding the rule-making-powers of the Federal Trade Commission.

The case arose out of a 1970 FTC ruling making it an unfair practice for a service station not to post octane numbers on gasoline pumps. The National Petroleum Refiners Association challenged the regulation. The refiners said the FTC cannot be sufficiently expert to make such rules governing many types of business.

The court also agreed to decide whether the federal government may continue its regulation of the sale of alcohol on privately owned land within Indian reservations.

Shell's attempt to disqualify Douglas was prompted by a speech Jan. 28 at the University of Mississippi. Douglas was widely reported to have said that the oil companies generated the energy crisis in the interest of profit.

"Statements attributed to Mr. Justice Douglas, if in fact made by him, reflect such a hostility toward corporations engaged in the oil and gas business, and imputes such wrongdoing to them that, we submit, it would be highly improper for Mr. Justice Douglas to participate in this case," Shell had said.

The case in question involves Federal Power Commission rate structure established in 1971 governing natural gas production in southern Louisiana, source of one-third of the nation's supply.

The court declined to hear a case in which a peace group said the FBI should be forced to purge its files of some information gathered in advance of a 1969 antiwar demonstration. Lower courts ruled that the information was gathered by the FBI to determine the likely size of the demonstration, not to identify individuals.

Search for stolen painting tightens

LONDON (AP) — British police clamped tight security on air and sea terminals yesterday to prevent thieves from smuggling the Jan Vermeer painting, "Guitar Player," out of the country.

Scotland Yard said it expected a ransom demand for the 17th century Dutch masterpiece which is considered too famous to be sold on the open market, but a spokesman said so far the thieves had made no contact.

The painting was snatched from a national museum, Kenwood House, in London late Saturday night.

Art dealers in Europe were warned to keep an eye out for the painting, which depicts a young girl playing a guitar. The 20-by-18-inch work is one of about 40 pictures Vermeer painted before dying in 1675 in poverty and obscurity. Its value is estimated as high as $4.4 million.

Both the museum and police refused to say if the Vermeer was insured. The museum is administered by the Greater London Council, which is believed considering offering a large reward. No figure was given.

Denis Mahon, art historian and former trustee of the National Gallery, said the Vermeer was "one of the finest pictures in Britain. The only possible motive for stealing it, apart from sheer lunacy, is some sort of insurance racket or blackmail."

In New York, a city detective whose job is hunting down stolen art said he believed whoever took the painting had a definite customer in mind and was not a common thief.

"What's this guy going to do, go up to a dealer and say: 'Hey, I'm looking to sell my Vermeer." Det. Robert Volpe said.

Volpe also raised the possibility the painting was taken by an idealist who felt it should be returned to its ountry of origin.

Police said the thief or thieves bashed through a steel-barred ground floor window at the museum, grabbed the painting off the wall and got away before the alarm system was activated. Telephone lines into the building had been cut to slow down any pursuit.

The museum was bequeathed to the nation, along with a collection of 60 old masters including the stolen Vereer and three others, by brewery tycoon Lord Iveagh when he died in 1927. The collection includes Rembrandts, Romneys, Gainsboroughs and others, but none was touched in Saturday's raid.

Nixon speaks to the nation

be impeached."

It would take a majority vote of the House to impeach Nixon, thus sending any charges against him to the Senate for trial. In the Senate, a two-thirds vote would be required to convict him and remove him from office.

Discussing energy problems, Nixon said he expects the Arab oil embargo will be lifted, but did not say when that might happen.

He said progress toward a peace settlement in the Middle East will be helpful in efforts to get the embargo lifted.

If it is not lifted, Nixon said, "it will slow down the efforts we are making on the peace front."

The President said he believes "there is a much better than even chance" that the nation can weather the energy crisis without gasoline rationing.

But he said price rollback provisions in an emergency conservation bill now before Congress would change that prospect. Nixon said he would veto that bill if it comes to him with the rollback provision.

Nixon said the energy shortage had led to predictions that fuel oil would be short, leading to hardships in the home and in the factory, but "we have now passed through that crisis."

He acknowledged that the gasoline shortage remains severe, particularly in the East, and said the federal energy office is prepared to take further steps to deal with that if necessary.

Nixon said he believes the waiting lines at gasoline stations will be alleviated by spring or summertime. "In fact that is the objective of our program and I think we will achieve it;" he said.

At the same time, he said the price of gasoline is not going to decrease until more supplies become available.

End-of-the-month gas squeeze

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The end-of-the month gasoline squeeze grew tighter yesterday and anticipated delays in extra allocations ordered by the Federal Energy Office appeared to be too little and too late to ease the agony of gas-thirsty motorists.

"This is going to be the toughest week in the gas crisis for all of us," said Robert Malchow, an Appleton, Wis., service station operator who already is dipping into his March gasoline allotment.

"Everything is really down," said Arthur Johnson, an official of the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Wisconsin. "Thank God there's only 28 days this month."

But even in some states which on Friday were named by federal energy chief William E. Simon to get a last-minute additional allocation for February, delays cropped up.

"We have to wait for directions from each state that is getting the additional supply," said a Sun Oil Co. spokesman. In Pennsylvania distributors said they did not have the time to figure out the logistics of doleing out and who should get the extra gasoline.

And as many service stations around the counnry sat shelplessly dry waiting for their March allocations, there was:

—Further talk of mandatory gasoline rationing.

—Saber-rattling strike talk by dealers.

—And where gas was available, often long, long, long, long lines.

In Montpelier, a spokesman for the Vermont governor's office said it may take "a couple of weeks" for the 1.35 million gallons of federally allocated gasoline to arrive in the state.

However, the first part of an 8.8 million gallon addition to Maryland's allotment began trickling in Monday. Service station lines in the Baltimore-Washington areas were reported much shorter than the long queues of late last week.

The Georgia Motor Club reported Monday that conditions in the state were worsening, and half of 149 stations surveyed said they expected the gas supply to deteriorate further.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said over the weekend that the nation is "getting closer and closer to mandatory rationing."

"We're already in a form of rationing - you stand in line," Jackson told newsmen in San Francisco.

Joining the list of states which have imposed mandatory rationing is New York, where the odd-even systems based on license plate numbers goes into effect Tuesday. Gov. Malcolm Wilson on Saturday ordered implementation of the plan after voluntary rationing failed to curb long lines.

Talk of strikes by some dealers continued to circulate.

WAITING FOR THE FOOD GIVEAWAY — This was the scene in the Hunter's Point section of San Francisco as people lined up, waiting for the start of the giveaway food program set up at the instruction of Randolph A. Hearst in an attempt to get the freedom of his kidnaped daughter, Patricia.

After $6m food giveaway, the Hearst's wait

(AP) — Trucks bearing tons of free food streamed to distribution centers yesterday as Randolph A. Hearst awaited word on whether a $6 million giveaway will win freedom for his kidnaped daughter.

"There is nothing for us to do. It is frustrating, just waiting," said family spokesman Jay Bosworth, brother-in-law of Patricia Hearst who was dragged screaming from her Berkeley apartment three weeks ago.

Leaders of People in Need said they were reorganizing the free food distribution system because of confusion, crowding and violence which marred the first distribution Friday at four centers. The distribution was scheduled to continue Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at a dozen locations.

"The response has been super," said PIN's acting director, Peggy Maze. "People from all over the country have been sending bread, milk, frozen food, money and love."

It was the fifth day since the Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims to have kidnaped Miss Hearst, demanded that her father pump another $4 million into the $2 million food giveaway.

Hearst said the latest demand was beyond his personal means, but the Hearst Corp. offered to provide the additional money if the 20-year-old University of California coed is released unharmed.

Gold hits high on European Market

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — The free price of gold hit a record high on European markets yesterday for the third straight session. Dealers were betting it still had not hit the ceiling.

The closing quotation at Zurich, the world's largest bullion exchange, was $169 per ounce, up $7 from the previous high last Friday and a spectacular $39, or 30 per cent, above the Feb. 1 price.

The United States dollar, which often went down in the past when gold went up, also steadied noticeably after a weak closing last weekend. The closing Swiss franc price was 3.1190, six centimes or two per cent higher than Friday.

The new gold price increase came in the wake of a statement in Tokyo Saturday by President Francois-Xavier Ortoli of the Common Market Commission that the European community was preparing to raise the official price. Zurich's opening price Monday was $6 above the Friday close.

AIM connected with armed occupation

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Cars carrying American Indian Movement (AIM) members were in a caravan that drove to the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota where an armed occupation began nearly a year ago, a policeman testified yesterday.

Wayne L. Romero testified at the trial of two AIM leaders charged in connection with the 71-day occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., that began Feb. 27, 1973.

Dennis Banks, 41, of St. Paul, and Russell Means, 34, of Porcupine, S.D., are charged in a 10-count federal indictment with burglary, theft, assault, firearms violations and conspiracy.

During cross-examination by defense lawyers, Wayne L. Romero said he recognized three vehicles in a 13-car caravan near Calico, S.D., as belonging to AIM, members.

Romero told the jury hearing the case before U.S. District Judge Fred Nichol that he and a fellow Bureau of Indian Affairs officer, Virgil Randall, were patroling the western outskirts of the reservation in mid-afternoon Feb. 27 when they noticed the caravan stop.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS. — WAVE OF THE FUTURE? — Motorists lined up for gasoline in North Adams, were surpeised to see Mrs. Kenneth DeMers Sr. and children of Clarksburg, as they passed the long line in a norse and wagon while on a shopping trip. New England states are still plagued with long lines at gas stations as officials continue efforts to eliminate them with higher gasoline allotments for the area.

Regulars get better treatment

BOSTON (AP) — Service station operators in Massachusetts may give preferential treatment to their regular customers, Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said.

Quinn's opinion originally was given about one week ago, and he reaffirmed it yesterday although it contradicts a Federal Energy Office statement that no preferential treatment for gasoline customers is permitted under federal regulations.

Quinn said all service stations must sell to all customers at least the minimum amount, either by dollar or by gallon, that they have posted at their stations.

But, said Quinn, the operators may sell more than that to their regular custoners.

Quinn's opinion came as regional officials of the FEO worked to determine how to distribute 16.2 million gallons of additional gasoline allocated to the state for February.

Hugh Saussey, deputy regional director of the FEO, said he expected extra gasoline to be delivered to Greater Boston service stations this week, and he urged dealers to begin operating at more regular hours when they get the additional allotments.

Robert Burns, FEO coordinator for Massachusetts, said "I don't think anybody will be able to get all the extra gasoline out by the end of the month."

The FEO did warn that the emergency allocation of 25 million gallons of gasoline to New England could mean more severe shortages later.

The additional gasoline is coming from reserve stocks. Unless those stocks are replenished, there may be a shortage in the spring, it was said.

The FEO said that a continuation of the shortage into the summer would be a blow to the tourist business.

John Webber, assistant administrator of the FEO, said there will be at least a 4 per cent gasoline shortage in the next three months, even if the Arab oil embargo is lifted.

He said it was more likely that the embargo would continue, and the shortage would be 16 per cent.

Webber said allocation procedures are being improved and gasoline supplies next month will be distributed more scientifically throughout the nation.

Threats of a shutdown by independent dealers appeared to have been quieted by the FEO granting such dealers a two-cent per gallon retail price increase effective Friday.

Single horsepower: sign of the future?

FALMOUTH, Maine (AP) — Grocer Tom Randalls gets 15 miles to the bale when he delivers his wares.

Randall, owner of Town Landing Market in Falmouth Foreside, a Portland suburb, deliveries his groceries with a horse and wagon.

Ry-Ann, a handsome ex-pacer, will run only about 10 miles a week in the cold weather, Randall said. But come spring, "she'll go about 25 to 30 miles a week."

Randall said he began thinking about the horse and wagon for his business last fall.

"The energy crisis wasn't the big factor," he said.

"I began looking for a horse...for publicity and to add flavor and fun to the business."

Randall believes Ry-Ann will be a big hit with summer boaters who walk to his store for provisions from two nearby anchorages. But the year-round residents already are enjoying the "new" mode of delivery.

"I think it's priceless," said Mrs. Stewart T. Lamson after receiving her grocery supplies delivered by the wagon.

And everywhere he goes, grinning, waving motorists and wide-eyed children greet Randall, armed with shovel, pail and broom for emergencies, and his horse and wagon.

Limits and staggered hours, but gas flows

BOSTON (AP) - On all turnpikes and toll roads in the Northeast, gasoline is available with limits ranging from $1 to 10 gallons, according to a survey by the American Automobile Association.

Some stations on the New York Thruway and the Pennsylvania Turnpike have a maximum of 10 gallons. No gas is available from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday on the toll roads and turnpikes. However, turnpike stations are open for emergency repairs and road service, AAA said.

Massachusetts Turnpike stations are limiting purchases to $3 and are staggering their hours for pumping gas.

On the New York Thruway stations are complying with the odd-even plan for all motorists. Stations have not increased the amount of gas that may be purchased to a minimum of $3.

On the New Jersey Turnpike, stations are applying the mandatory odd-even plan to out-of-staters. Motorists from states that do not have a rationing plan are exempt. Stations on the turnpike have a one-time limit of $2 and are pumping gas 24-hours a day, seven days a week.

The Connecticut Turnpike and Wilbur Cross and Merritt Parkways are operating on a wide variety of hours. In general the stations take turns pumping gas on a rotating basis and there is only one station on each road pumping gas at any given time. Limits range from $2 to $3.

Wyman to run

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R-N.H., today officially declared his candidacy for the seat to be vacated by the retirement of Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H.

In a news conference hre, Wyman said his campaign will be based on "qualifications and issues," not on personalities and that he did not plan to be part of any "bitter" GOP primary.

Immediately after Cotton announced last summer that he would retire at the end of his term in January 1975, Wyman said he would run for the post, but he held off an official declaration until Cotton reaffirmed his decision.

Earlier this year, the 73-year-old senator said he was reconsidering because Republicans feared Wyman and former Gov. Wesley Powell might engage in a divisive primary that would hurt the party in what was already expected to be a tough year for the GOP.

But last week Cotton said he had reviewed his announcement of last summer and found that his reasons for retiring - including his age and the health of his wife, Ruth, 80 - were still valid.

Powell has also said that he is running, but has not yet made a formal announcement.

Three Democrats have declared for the seat: former Insurance Commissioner John Durkin, Dartmouth Prof. Laurence I. Radway and engineering consultant C. Christopher Chimento of Nashua.

William Kennedy, a lawyer and former Manchester legislator who has spent the last 23 years in Washington, has declared his Republican candidacy.

Spfld. fire

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Investigators from the state Fire Marshal's office inspected the site Monday of a weekend fire that damaged two parochial schools here.

The Sacred Heart Elementary School was extensively damaged in an early morning fire Sunday. Officials of the Springfield Roman Catholic Diocese said the school would be closed for an extended period of time because of the damage.

Heavy smoke damage occurred in the adjoining Notre Dame High School, which was expected to reopen next week.

Diocesan school officials must relocate about 800 pupils from the two schools.

O'Neill speaks

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., D-Mass., said today he thinks President Nixon will resign in April or May.

"From what I've seen, the evidence is very damaging," said O'Neill, House majority leader.

O'Neill said Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski could have indicted the President . But O'Neill said he is rather glad Jaworski didn't try to do so.

Speaking to a group of Harvard students, O'Neill said "I'd hate to see the President of the United States indicted."

O'Neill said he expects Judge John Sirica to transfer the evidence on the President to the House Judiciary Committee. One that happens, in April or May, "rather than see the evidence made public, I think the President will resign," he said.

O'Neill expressed confidence in the House Judiciary Committee's ability to collect and present the evidence.

He said he thinks Gerald Ford as president would "give stability to the country." He said Ford would be hard to beat in 1976.

O'Neill said he thinks Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. will be the Democratic presidential candidate in the next election.

Walpole costs

BOSTON (AP) — Inmate unrest at Walpole State Prison has cost Massachusetts taxpayers $634,138 in overtime pay for corrections personnel since October 1971, the state auditor's office said today.

Auditor Thaddeus Buczki said in a report on Walpole that 55 per cent of the overtime costs were incurred during the first six months of 1973.

Buczki said $14,221 in prison industries profits was lost as a result of unrest and inmate refusal to work.

He also said a corrections officer at Walpole collected six months pay while under supension.

Human Services

BOSTON (AP) — Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark, pleading that his budget already had been "cut to the bone," Monday urged the House Ways and Means Committee not to recommend further cuts.

On instructions from Gov. Francis W. Sargent to all the cabinet secretaries, he declined to give his own priorities in his bidget.

Goldmark said his $1.42 billion budget, 51 per cent of all proposed state spending in the next fiscal year, was up only 3.8 per cent and had grown over the past five years by 7 per cent annually compared with a 15 per cent growth for the other state departments.

Goldmark's budget includes $1.06 billion for the Welfare Department, a 2.6 per cent reduction over the current year.

"I do not feel that I can properly move unilaterally to explore reductions in a budget which, on the basis of all information available to me, is balanced," Goldmark said.

Edward Moscovitch, deputy commissioner of administration and finance for fiscal affairs, said all secretaries had been instructed not to answer the committee's requests to discuss reductions.

The head of the Executive Office for Children asked the Committee to keep intact the $20 million the budget provided in new funds for children's programs. Sargent has said the money was his highest priority in the new budget.

"This should be a year in which the scissors are spared on budget items that benefit children," said David S. Liederman.

Streaker madness invades UConn

By RICK NUGENT

"Good evening, ladies and gentlemen, and welcome to tonight's edition of Streaker Madness..." Such is the announcement made nightly by an unidentified voice over a public address system, in a residential area of UConn known as the 'jungle'.

This, immediately thereafter, is followed by a sprint across the area between the dorms by two torch bearing young men in the flesh; thus signifying the opening of the night's festivities.

Streaking, the fast spreading fad which is causing quite a stir on college campuses across the country, is already a generally accepted fact of life at the UConn campus. This practice of the made dash in ones birthday suit, is pretty much taken for granted by the students, and is now in growingpopularity with the women on campus.

More and more women are now taking part in what was previously considered to be an all-male sport. One UConn woman, quoted recently in the school newspaper, claimed: "It's a challenge; it's something I thought I'd never be able to do - but you kind of get caught up in the excitement." Another woman asserted that men aren't the only brave creatures. "I went out completely straight", she said, and added "A lot of guys have to get stoned first, and then the next day they regret it. Not me."

Male or female, the streaker is up against more than mere embarrassment by recognition. Streakers run outdoors, and at this time of year, New England weather is not what you would call balmy. And if the wind don't getcha, you still have to worry about the vast anti-streaker faction. One male streaker at UConn was tackled by three or four other students and held down in the snow. That could be quite painful.

Streaking is not viewed highly by school administrators or by the police. Several students have been caught and legal charges were brought against them. Most are fined $25. The fact that streaking is in violation of the law may inhibit a few, but the true streakers will no doubt continue undaunted.

Kissinger: another side of the already bronzed coin

By GLEN MANSEAU

I would like to take issue with Reid Fishman's conclusion, last Thursday, that Henry Kissinger is the saviour and true light of the world. If he can get up from off his knees long enough and interupt his worship of the "one person that can save the world from nuclear annihilation", I would like him to listen to another view of Dr. K.

Mr. Fishman cites Henry's book Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy in which Dr. K. argued the practical uses of tactical nuclear weapons. In it Kissinger presupposed that nations would act in a rational way while using on each other weapons that, in human terms, defied rationality. Most importantly he failed to recognize how the raised technology of war had destroyed most of the old assumptions about the limits of war. He placed exaggerated faith that the limits of war could be contained by shrewd, neo-Metternich-style diplomats.

There's also the matter of Dr. K. sanctioning wiretaps on some of his best friends. On May 9, 1969 the New York Times printed a story by its Pentagon correspondent William Beecher that threatened to blow the cover off the secret U.S. bombing of Cambodia. This sparked a minor witch-hunt in the administration to find out who was leaking the truth. The White House told the FBI to put phone-taps on 13 government officials (including some of Kissinger's closest aides on the National Security Council) and four newsmen (CBS' Marvin Kalb, Beecher and another Times reporter and a correspondent from the London Sunday Times).

It is very unlikely that leaking the truth to the American people falls into the "Foreign intelligence activities" category that the constitution authorizes the President "to protect national security information against". But no matter how you look at it Dr. K. was part of a policy of which lying to the American people was an essential ingredient. The likely outcome of not being to trust the people's elected representatives was an atmosphere in which they could not trust each other with "friend" tapping "friend". This led to the air of paranoia in and around the White House that we've heard so much about since the Watergate revelations.

The man who, during his confirmation hearings for Secretary of State, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that "we cannot conduct foreign policy by deceiving the elected representatives of the people" has a history of doing precisely that. Members of that Senate committee have complained of Kissinger's "failure of communication" in his private and informal meetings with them. In April, 1970, he gave them no inkling of the forthcoming Cambodian invasion. Dr. K. seems to believe more in "delicate initiatives that require a high degree of secrecy" than in discussion and democracy.

Early media analyses of Nixon's Vietnam decision-making team cast Defense Secretary as the "hawk" and Kissinger as favoring the "soft" line. In fact the situation was almost exactly the reverse. When in 1969, North Korea shot down an EC-121 American spy plane Dr. K. was the one who favored launching a retaliatory strike.

Mr. Fishman quotes Kissinger as saying the U.S. "can no longer impose its preferred solution; it must seek to evoke it." Well, in November '72 when Dr. K. told the U.S. that peace was at hand and then the talks bogged down and broke off the Nixon-Kissinger team acted decisively to "impose its preferred solution" by launching the biggest, bloodiest air strikes ever. The goal: to clobber the enemy's homeland as never before (not sparing populated areas), to "bomb them back into the stone age" (the cry of the war-hawks for years) and thus persuade them to resume serious negotiations.

As for the matter of Dr. K's winning the 1973 Nobel Peace Prize (awarded jointly to him and North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho, who rejected it), that decision was met with an unprecendented storm of criticism. As the U.S. News & World Report points out the prize went to "two men who negotiated a 'cease-fire' in South Vietnam that exists more in word than in deed...there is a built-in irony — especially in Saigonh0 in the award of a peace prize to m3n who successfully negotiated their own nations' peace to South Vietnam itself." Paris' prestigious LeMonde noted that Tho had spent his life committed to violent wars of liberation and that Kissinger was part of the American policy that reached its most unpeaceful moment in the Christmas '72 bombing of Hanoi. In Norway, where criticism of U.S. policy in Vietnam had long been widespread, two members of the 5-member prize committee resigned in protest.

But the prize wasn't given to Tho and Dr. K. because they deserved it. The real reason, in the Nobel Committee's own words, was so "that the undersigned parties will feel a moral responsibility for seeing that the Paris agreements are followed."

So Mr. Fishman, before you nominate Henry Kissinger for sainthood, you should realize that your world saviour is merely the one charismatic figure in a dour administration — the best of a bad lot, so to speak. The only redeeming thing about Dr. K. was his opinion, made while he was with the Rockefeller campaign in '68, that Nixon was "not fit to be President". He's gone back on that statement, too.

Letters To The Editor

Cartoon not racist

To The Editor:

Sometimes it seems that any White person that criticizes a Black person is immediately labeled "racist". I can't hope to speak for Mr. McGilvray, but if Chancellor Bromery doesn't know how to run a university effectively, he deserves whatever criticism that might be leveled upon him. To ignore the fact that Chancellor Bromery is Black would be much more racist than anything else McGilvray could do. I'm certain that when Donald drew the cartoon, with the caption, "Dat's me, folks.", he was attempting to illustrate the chancellor's incompetence, and not his race. But because Chancellor Bromery couldn't refute the incompetence issue and due to pressure from other groups, he turned it into a race issue. I am sorry for those who felt the need to apologize, but I am more sorry for those who felt the urge to censor.

Reid Fishman

Nixon: most corrupt

To The Editor:

In a brief span of five years the Nixon administration without a doubt has proved to be the most corrupt and contemptuous administration ever voted into office. Whether Mr. Nixon is impeached or not, the ignorance and carelessness to which he has shown cannot exonerate him.

The oddity of the entire situation is that Mr. Nixon will probably complete his second full term in office. This suggests one of two conclusions. Either Mr. Nixon is a extraordinary, persuasive man or the majority who elected him were extremely, gullible voters.

In the five years that Mr. Nixon has reigned as President, the most important question that must be answered is what has Mr. Nixon accomplished? The most positive aspects Mr. Nixon and his followers constantly remind us of is the somewhat vague nuclear arms talks with Russia, the inevitable ending of Viet Nam as far as we're concerned, and the friendship of China. These accomplishments can't be denied as to their great value but, if we begin to formulate the negative aspects of his two terms in office, we will easily see how we have been screwed.

The largest offense against the Nixon administration is the illegality shown by many high-keyed men in the Nixon administration. Many of these men have openly admitted doing illegal acts. This must surmise that even if Mr. Nixon were not directly involved, he must bear some blame for his disorganization, naivete, and clear stupidity. These are hardly the characteristics to which the presidency is respected and known for.

Perhaps the most devastating error perpetrated was the intent of all these illegal acts, large or small, to sustain themselves and thus slander the electoral process of Democracry to which we hold sacred.

To reiterate what John Locke, a famous political philosopher had said, "When in a political society to which there is a legislative or executive body, a body violates the consent of the majority, it is the responsibility of the Popular Sovereign (the people) to remove by force if neccessary that body or individuals who hinder the consent of the majority."

Uglies unite

To The Editor:

We the Members of the most discriminated against majority at UMass, the Ugly People of the World, do hereby demand recognition of our right to look ugly, to think ugly, to be ugly. We demand a Department of UGLY STUDIES, with a 5-college major in UGLINESS. We demand UGLY contests in opposition to those dreaded (Yeech!) Beauty contests. We demand token UGLY people be hired by the University, and that the University raise its quota of UGLY ADMISSIONS. We demand a guaranteed allotment of UGLY people in the Student Senate. After all, it's our bodies we are fighting to control — The right to be horrid looking. UGLINESS goes beyond ethnic, sexual and racial barriers. Everybody can be UGLY. Everybody is UGLY. Remember our cry — UGLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS!!

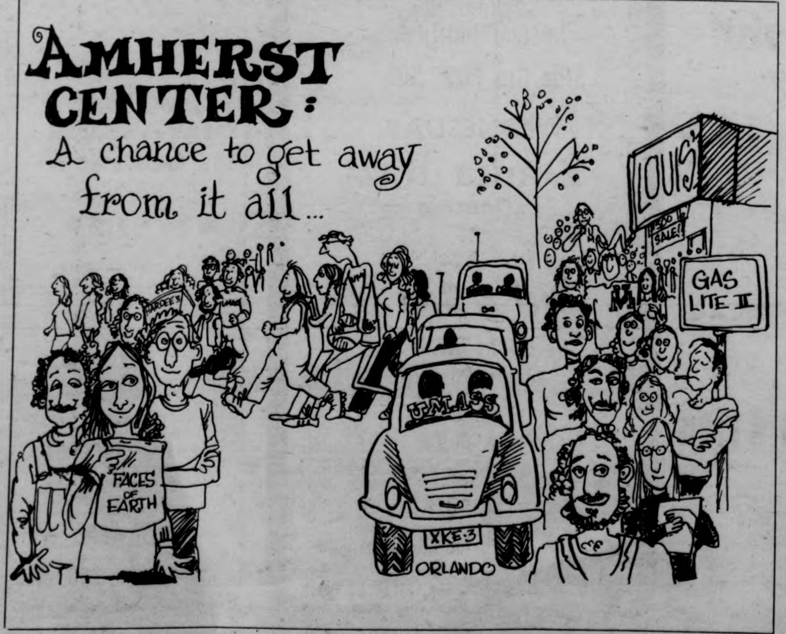
Vets organize

To The Editor:

The UMass Veteran's Club will hold an organizational meeting on Wednesday Feb. 28 in room 904 of the Campus Center. The Veteran's Club already has the support of 400 Vietnam-era veterans on the campus but expects all Vietnam-era veterans to become active members.

Allen Metzner



YanCon villainous

To The Editor:

An important problem facing the students at UMass is sports. There is a growing force of apathy that is surging through the various levels of the student population. The key to dissolving this problem seems to be pulling out of the Yankee Conference and playing at a more interesting level of competition. But the key is lost in the maze of not knowing what to do.

The Yankee Conference seems to be the villian in damning the prideful enthusiasm of newcomers to a pathetic halt by the time they leave the university. By leaving the conference in pursuit of more skillful and exciting competition, we can see a steady growth in student interest. This move, bold in thought, will force the Yankee Conference to seriously look at itself, acknowledging its problems, forcing it to solve them.

Our reason is simple. Sports are a dying force at UMass, and we suspect at other schools in the conference. The Yankee Conference is faltering. It is no longer a working life support for our sports. Either we pull ourselves free of it or slowly fade away with it.

UMass must save itself. By leaving the Yankee Conference, its biggest school, we should force an about face in its slow march to extinction.

Best of both worlds

There comes that moment in most every students life, when he or she looks in the mirror and asks, "What the hell am I doing here?" The question is asked sometimes with frustration; at times even in desperation. With a sense of purpose in question, and a real doubt in personal direction; these words run through many people's heads everyday. If there is a variation in the theme, it is slight indeed.

Perhaps this anxiety over direction and purpose comes from the times in which we live. No doubt one can find a "theoretical explanation" for this confusion; many social scientists like to speculate on personal solutions. Here is mine.

A few years ago a friend of mine remarked that the reason that there was no real sense of logic to anything; the reason everything was going crazy was because our generation was the first generation that was not guaranteed a future. Because of the Nuclear weapons, there was no real guarantee that any of us would be here tomorrow. She went on to point out that you could plan your life; go to school; live a responsible existence; follow the rules; and the next day be blown to bits because someone else lost control in Washington or Moscow. Therefore she reasoned, "why plan for tomorrow, live for today".

For many it would not be hard to argue with such logic. In fact in my more melancholy moments I flirt with the possibility of becoming one of the more active advocates of the "live for today" philosophy. Yet there are other times that I plan; work; bust; and hope for the future. I believe in it; want to have a control in my own fate. I want to live for today and plan for tomorrow with equal intensity.

But is this possible? Can you have the best of both the present and the future? Perhaps this question can draw an excellent example in the academic paradox: "In this age of specialization and technocratic society, can one risk the effort to become a Renaissance man or woman?"

With graduate school pressures, and the desire to continue the "Paper Chase" and go to Law or Medical School, few students feel confident enough to dive into the unknown; to take a course that would be interesting, but which he or she knows nothing about. Many ask themselves if they can afford to take this chance, but back off. This movement towards specialization, and guarding the cumulative average with the protectiveness of a mother hen is having a drastic academic affect. For one, it is killing of the possibilities of learning in college things that will help learn to live in addition to helping you learn to make a living.

Just realize the possibilities; the things that there to learn, and grow with while you are at the University that you will never be able to devote so much time or concentration to again. To learn more about life; how others felt about it; and how you feel about it; to learn more about cultures, or sciences; or lifestyles; or just plain people.

Writing is very important to me. I want to be able to write a column that people will enjoy reading; a book review that readers will respond to. But I also want to understand what made Rembrandt so fine; and what makes Norman Mailer so sharp. I'd like to know how Freud came to his conclussions; or why some modern thinkers are trying to prove him wrong.

But there are contradictions. I'd like to go to law school; maybe be a speechwriter or columnist someday. Perhaps do something even more substantial than that. So I must live for tomorrow as well as today. I must live with the memories of yesterday as well. And of course there will always be the adventure of understanding; love, loneliness, and the ambitions that drive us on. These are the drives that move us; the feelings which make us pause; and at times the sighs which make one conclude; is anyone out there really reading this at all.

Student loans

By BILL PARENT

Everywhere I look these days the world is getting more expensive, it seems that we the students and the workers are getting hurt the worst. President Richard Nixon proposed that the Federal government cease subsidizing interest on loans, except for students most needing the money.

This means that 500,000 students across the country are going to lose Federal aid next year if the proposal goes through.

Whether or not this proposal goes through, rests on the debate between Michigan Democrat James G. O'Hara and Commissioner of Education John Ottina. O'Hara, chairman of the House Education subcommittee, has introduced a bill that would allow students whose family income is $20,000.00 or less to qualify for a government subsidized loan of up to $2000. Ottina argues that more students would then seek loans because of this interest subsidy which would enhance the "Red Corvette problem", (it seems that some kids these days use government loans to purchase cars).

The students who will be most effected by this cutback will be those who are from middle and lower class families. Once again the people who aren't poor enough or aren't rich enough are the ones who carry the burden.

As incomes remain stable while prices soar the middle class has become disenchanted with the government. Already the President has lost his "Silent Majority". When Nixon said in Alabama that "Here in the heart of Dixie we find that the heart of America is good.", I could only think back to last month when I had the opportunity to watch a Nixon speech in a hardhat bar near Boston. These men were all standing around the television with their V.F.W. Bowling League jackets on, calling Nixon a "------ liar" and saying nasty things about his mother. If I had walked into that same bar and said those same things two years ago..

But these men are the ones who are feeling the pains as food prices rose more in 1973 than any year since 1947, and Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz predicts that prices will be 5 to 6 per cent higher this year. The future doesn't hold any promises either. According to U.S. News and World Report; by 1980, to feed a family of four, the cost will jump from the current rate of $52 to $75 per week, the cost of a new home will go from $33,000 to $52,000 and the price of cigarettes will rise from 50 cents a pack to 70 cents a pack.

It is also predicted that the cost of college which now averages $3,300.00 a year will, by 1980 cost $5,400.00.

Now that we can't afford college, and the unemployment rate among young people is 15.6 per cent, where do we go from here?

Communication gap

This is a big country. Perhaps all that keeps it together is the media. How else could we know about the SLA or Henry the K and all those other newsmakers?

This is also a big university. Perhaps all that keeps it together is its media. Maybe that's why it's not together at all.

It's a strange state of affairs that this university has such meager efforts in teaching its students how to communicate.

You have to take two bullshit courses in Rhetoric to learn how to communicate, but you can't major in Journalism. To be a so-called Journalism major, you have to take the required number of English courses of which few have anything to do with journalism.

You can't take a course in radio programming here. You can't even take a course that prepares you for a third class operators license. You can work for WMUA, but to become a disc jockey, you have to have that license. (Which by the way, cannot be obtained in this area) In a sense, you have to know what you're doing before you can do it, but you can't learn it here, at the school at which you've chosen to attend.

You can take courses in television production and direction through the department of communication studies. But the facilities are so limited and the equipment is so tired that you're better off apprenticing in Springfield or Boston if you can get in. You can work for WUMV and perhaps get credit for it if you know someone, but there is no true feedback on what you have done.

There are no university courses in newspaper graphics. Neither are there any photo-journalism classes. You could do photography as an independent study, or as a five-college course, but you still have to find or build your own darkroom.

There are no courses in the psychology of communications. There are no classes in the sociology of communications. There are no courses in the physics, mathematics, philosophy, or business of communications. Marshall McLuhan said that the media is just an extension of ourselves.

But this university does not extend itself into the field of communications.

Communication is perhaps the most important thing that a person can emit. For how are we to know anything without some form of communication, whether it be audio, visual, am, fm, tv, or the writings on the wall. McLuhan stated that communication is just the beginning of understanding. Well, maybe if we could learn how to communicate, we could understand each other.

"...a vocal, well-organized interest group ... have blocked any legislation...limiting the possession of the "criminal's best ally, the handgun."

GUN CONTROL

Testimony by state Senator Jack Backman (D-Brookline)

Exerpts of testimony by state senator Jack Backman, D-Brookline, before the joint legislative Public Safety Committee yesterday. Backman is a leading supporter of bills to ban the sale of handguns in the Bay State.

The time has come for effective handgun legislation in Massachusetts. I have filed legislation in the 1974 session of the Massachusetts legislature that will remove the handgun as a deadly toy in the hands of the public.

Under this legislation, law enforcement officials, members of the armed forces, authorized pistol clubs, employees of armed guard agencies and licensed businessment will be the only persons allowed to possess handguns. Even this will be under the strict control of the Commissioner of Public Safety.

As defined in Senate 235, a handgun is any weapon having a barrel of less than ten inches in length. Thus, my bill would cut out the heart of the handgun traffic currently employed in violent crimes.

Joining me this year in sponsoring the measure are Representative Peter Harrington, the Massachusetts Pharmaceutical Association, Senator Stephen McGrail, Sheriff John Buckley and thousands of Massachusetts citizens.

MINORITY VIEWS

For the past three years I have sponsored legislation which would effectively end handgun abuse in Massachusetts. However, despite my efforts, a vocal, well-organized interest group representing the views of a minority of the public, have blocked any legislation which would strike at the base of our rising crime rate by limiting the possession of the criminal's best ally, the handgun.

The people of the Commonwealth deserve better. Bills covering every aspect of the subject have been developed and filed. This is the time for a joining of hands. This is the time to control handguns in Massachusetts.

FOUR ARGUMENTS

This year I would like to squarely address and put to rest the main arguments which have been presented in opposition to my legislation at past hearings.

First, there is the continuing argument that the second amendment to our Consitution provides each citizen with a right to own a firearm.

Common sense causes most to reject this argument. There are thousands of state and federal gun control statutes which have been upheld by state and federal courts as Constitutional and are on the books today. If the second amendment prohibits controling firearms then these thousands of regulatory statutes, which have been in effect for years, would have to be eliminated.

Also, the courts have continually upheld the interpretation of the second amendment as being solely in reference to the state's right to establish and arm a militia. In U. S. v. Cruikshank (1875), Presser v. Illinois (1885), Miller v. Texas (1894), and most recently in U. S. v. Miller (1939) and U. S. v. Tot in 1942, the courts upheld this interpretation...

The existing gun control statutes and Supreme Court decisions leave no legal justification for arguing that Senate 235 is in any way unconstitutional.

Secondly, many well meaning sportsmen have appeared at these public hearings expressing concern that once we prohibit private ownership of handguns then we will take steps to ban legitimate sporting weapons.

There is no foundation for their concern. Senate 235 has specifically exempted the sport of pistol shooting from the overall ban on handguns. Instead, we have offered regulation and licensing of this activity through the mechanism of pistol clubs many of which already are in existence. I recognize the rights of sportsmen. I have not filed legislation designed to eliminate their sport and I cannot conceive of a situation in which hunting, riflery or any other legitimate sport would be eliminated as a consequence of the passage of Senate 235.

Third, opponents of my legislation have claimed that private citizens purchase handguns in order to protect themselves, their family and their property from the criminal element. However, study after study conducted by National Commissions or academic research groups unanimously conclude, "a handgun is not a deterent to crime in the home."

The Eisenhower Commission Staff Report on Firearms and Violence concluded that firearms have little use in these cases because the robber has the advantage of surprise. In only one or two per cent of burglaries and home robberies does it appear that the crime was thwarted by the use of guns.

At the same time, the fact that so many of our citizens, stimulated by the fear of crime, are using handguns for private protection purposes has created a substantial public safety hazard without providing adequate protection for our citizens. A study of firearms use in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, an area including the City of Cleveland and its suburban areas was conducted in 1973 by members of the Case Western Reserve University Medical School. Their results show that from 1958 to 1972, only 17 burglars, robbers or intruders were killed by guns in the hands of persons who were protecting their homes. In the same period of time six times as many firearms fatalities occurred in the home while at least 1,000 to 2,000 serious non-fatal firearms accidents occurred from 1958 through 1972. The odds that a handgun will be used on an assailant rather than on its owner or his family are so slim that none of us would feel secure if our life would be determined on its statistical probability.

The fourth and final major criticism of my legislation contends that passage of Senate 235 would lead to a rash of killings by firearms because only criminals would possess handguns.

This notion is completely inconsistent with the established facts on the subject.

The debate heats

"The modern idea that disarming the public will disarm the criminal is false, and has been proven so in England. The percentage of criminals carrying pistols in England is higher today than ever before..."

Exerpts of essay by UMass senior and political science major Leonard J. Umina, part of a longer research piece on the constitutionality of gun control legislation. Mr. Umina is the former chief engineer of WMUA radio and an avid hunter of small game with licensed revolvers.

Many volumes have been written on gun control.The problem has been attacked from both sides, with neither side really gaining any ground. Surely, it is the wish of the people that they not be deprived of their arms, whatever reasons they have for owning them; many a politician has committed political suicide by introducing anti-gun legislation.

The strength of the gun enthusiasts argument has usually centered around their claim that the Second Amendment gives the people the "right to keep and bear arms." This philosophy certainly is in keeping with the philosophy of freedom under which this country was founded, however, although most anti-gun control writers point this out, they usually fail to give specific evidence. To this end I have researched the origin of the Bill of Rights, and in particular the Second Amendment. My source of information has been the University of Massachusetts Library, which has many old records, and I will freely quote from them.

The men who made up the Constitution had witnessed opression firsthand. They had lived under worsening tyranny and exploitation until they were forced to act. When the British realized the dissatisfaction among the colonists and decided it was time to confiscate guns, they made a mistake that was to end their colonial rule. The colonists realizing the importance of their guns to their liberty, chose that moment to stand and fight. The memory of the British trying to take their guns away would not be forgotten.

States Ratified

It should be pointed out here that each of these states in a similar manner stipulated rights which, it would seem, are related to firearms. Each had a passage similar to the following which is quoted from the communication given by the state of Rhode Island. The underlining is mine, and serves only to point out the specific words of interest in the discussion.

"1st That there are certain natural rights, of which men when they form a social compact, cannot deprive or divest their posterity, among which are the enjoyment of Life and Liberty, with the means of aquiring, possessing and protecting Property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety."...

The Supreme Court has held many times that the Bill of Rights is binding on state governments, and with the addition of the 14th Amendment it was made clear in writing. Despite this there are those who still say the Second Amendment only restricts the power of Congress to limit the possession of arms.

The founding fathres were in all cases opposed to a "standing army", rather than a "militia of the People", because they feared the power of a standing army, and were fearful that its power would be used against the people. Limiting service in the militia by age groups was discussed and rejected for it was decided that everyone, of all ages, should be equally armed. It was pointed out that, in the event a standing army were needed, it should not be the only one to be armed, but rather a reserve militia composed of all those not in the standing army should be ready to back up the army, or to protect themselves from the army.

Mandatory Armament

The Congress even went so far as to debate whether or not it should be mandatory for everyone to be armed. Congressman Fitzsimons thought this would not be accepted by the people because there were those who would not wish to go armed. He said:

"As far as the whole body of the people are necessary for the general defense, they ought to be armed; but the law ought not require more than is necessary; for that would be just cause for complaint."

It is clear that they wished all those so inclined to arm themselves for the defense of the country from outside invasion, and from invasion within.

After Congressman Wadsworth commented on limiting the age group of those who should be armed, Congressman Jackson made the following comment concerning the will of the people, and what Congress should do to appease and protect them. It is written he said:

"that he was of the opinion that the people of America would never consent to being deprived of the privilege of carrying arms. Though it may prove burdensome to some individuals to be obliged to arm themselves, yet it would not be so considered when the advantages were justly estimated. Original institutions of this nature are highly important."

Congress then considered providing arms for all those who wanted them but were too poor to obtain them. This line of debate was abandoned after the following comment made by Congressman Wadsworth, who said:

"Is there a man in this house who would wish to see a large portion of the country, perhaps one-third, armed by the United States and liable to be disarmed by them? Nothing would tend more to excite suspicion, and rouse a jealousy dangerous to the Union."

The Second Amendment thus evolved into the form we know it today.

It is clear that the Second Amendment was intended to provide for all who wished to be armed to arm themselves, that no government had the right to impede or stop the citizenry from being armed, and that it be stated in the document from which the government derived its power that the best "security" of a free state was to have the ownership of arms widespread among the citizens, who were themselves the "state".

"Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter."

Knowland wound self-inflicted

GUERNEVILLE, Calif. (AP) - An autopsy shows that a single gunshot wound in the head killed former Sen. William F. Knowland, 65. Authorities say the wound was self-inflicted.

The body of Knowland, who fought world communism both as a U.S. senator and as editor and publisher of the Oakland Tribune, was found Saturday in the Russian River behind his $150,000 summer home at Mont Rio, 75 miles north of San Francisco.

Undersheriff Robert Hayes said an autopsy showed death was caused by a single, self-inflicted gunshot wound in the head. He said divers recoverd a .32-caliber automatic pistol in the water near the body.

Hayes said investigators were called to the home Saturday afternoon after Knowland, who was seen arriving there failed to keep an appointment.

PREP involves students in prison awareness

The Prisoners Rights and Education Program is a new student organization on campus that aims to do exactly what the program name says. The several students involved, including ex-offenders, currently attending this University hope to involve the larger campus population in the world of the incarcerated adult.

Some students have already taken the initiative by becoming involved in a 90 day student internship in which they voluntarily went to jail. So far six have completed the ninty "bit" while five more UMass students are currently undergoing incarceration this Spring. However, the main thrust of PREP is to involve students in an advocacy role for inmates presently doing time.

One of the first tasks students are undertaking is the organizing of this student involvement around the scheduled visit to this campus of former Correctional Commissioner John O. Boone, on March 11.

In the past the University community has responded to the human service needs of other members in our society. The current membership of PREP is greatful to the Distinguished Visitors Program for cooperating in sponsoring Boone's appearance on campus. Areas of concern include anything from lobbying for prison reform legislation to fund raising to help the wifes, children, and relatives of inmates. Interested students may contact Nate Anderson at 545-2361 during regular office hours.

Kalmbach pleads guilty to charges in fund-raising

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Herbert W. Kalmbach, a corporation lawyer who handled President Nixon's personal legal affairs, pleaded guilty yesterday to two charges stemming from his political fund-raising in 1970.

One count was a technical violation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act. The other accused Kalmbach of promising an ambassador a better post in return for a $100,000 contribution.

Kalmbach could be sentenced to a maximum 3 years and $11,000 on the two charges.

In return for the guilty pleas and Kalmbach's pledge to testify against others, the government promised not to prosecute him in the Watergate coverup or in future political contributions cases.

The 52-year-old Kalmbach admitted to the Senate Watergate Committee last year that he raised $220,000 that was then passed to the defendants in the Watergate break-in. But he denied any knowledge that the money was to buy the conspirators' silence.

Kalmbach lives in Newport Beach, Calif., and practices law there and in Los Angeles. He told reporters he still performs legal work for the President. The White House said Kalmbach's firm "continues to do some work on the President's tax matters," but would not discuss Kalmbach's personal role.

Assistant Special Watergate Prosecutor Charles Ruff told in court about a committee, established in March 1970 by three members of the staff of the President, to raise and distribute campaign funds.

Ruff said Kalmbach raised $2.8 million in pledges for the committee out of a total $3.9 million distributed "for the purpose of influencing the election of candidates of the Republican Party" in 19 states.

One count against Kalmbach, a felony carrying a maximum two year prison term and $10,000 fine, charges he worked for the committee which was operating without an elected chairman and treasurer as required by law at the time.

The committee referred to apparently was a once-secret fund-raising effort called "Operation Townhouse" and run by former White House aide Jack A. Gleason.

The Washington Star-News said the operation was run from within the White House by then chief of staff H. R. Haldeman.

Ruff also said that in the summer of 1970, one individual contributed $1,150,000 which Kalmbach turned over to the committee.

The person was not identified, but the Star-News said he apparently was John J. Mulcahy, the head of a subsidiary of Pfizer Laboratories, whose contribution of $599,000 is on the public record.

The second charge against Kalmbach, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum one-year prison sentence and $1,000 fine is that he promised "an appointment as United States Ambassador to a European country" to J. Fife Symington Jr., in return for a $100,000 contribution.

Symington, now 63, was ambassador to Trinidad and Tobago from August 1969 through November 1971. He is the former president of a hardware and building supply firm in Lutherville, Md. and a first cousin of Missouri Sen. Stuart Symington, a Democrat.

Jamaica, Nigeria exchange programs

Two new academic exchange programs have been initiated by UMass with the Universities of the West Indies, in Jamaica and Lagos, in Nigeria for the 1974-75 academic year. Students from the entire Five College community are encouraged to apply.

Under the exchange agreements, four or five Valley students will exchange places for an entire year with an equal number of students from the University of the West Indies and the University of Lagos while earning one to one credit toward their home degree for successfully completed course work.

To be eligible one must be a junior or senior with at least a 3.0 cumulative average. Preference will be extended to students of the humanities, social sciences and related fields.

Homesteading

Michael Oehler, a homesteader from northern Idaho who built his own subterranean home for under $50 will speak and show slides on, "Homesteading: An Alternative Lifestyle," tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Public Health Auditorium. The program is a presentation of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Oehler feels that persons living in cities are maintained at the level of "infants" with all of their needs dependent on the social order.

"You depend on the social order to bring you your water, to take away your garbage, to bring you your food and so on," says Oehler.

He predicts that this high dependence level will lead within two decades to one of two things: brave new world or chaos.

Oehler "returned to the land" and built his underground home after living in New York City for a short time.

Dining Commons meeting

There will be a meeting downstairs in Hampden Dining Commons at 7:30 tonight to solicit student input on Food Services. This meeting is being held by the Food Services Governance Board. The Board is looking for student input to be used in the formation of a referendum to be held sometime in mid-March and will attempt to help determine the Board's future policy.

The Food Services Governance Board was created to allow students a method for making policy decisions regarding the University Food Services. All of the voting positions on the Board are held by students including three representatives from the Student Senate, a representative from each area government, two representatives from the Third World and a position for a graduate student. The Director of Food Services also sits on the Board as an ex-officio member.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries enjoys challenge, will try to do what others consider impossible. These natives have a psychological imprint about being first, original, creative and inventive. Aries cannot always live up to self-expectation, but there usually is a top effort, all the way or nothing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make changes which add to creative vitality. Refuse to be lectured to by one who is old-fashioned, mistaken and resentful. Seek allies now among Gemini and Virgo individuals. Emphasize freedom, independence. Key message is "on the way."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check with persons who seem reticent, shy or secretive. If you make an effort, you gain access to valuable information. Keep promise to friend or family member confined to home, hospital. Libra may play paramount role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friendly persuasion goes a long way. Know it and act accordingly. Light touch brings results. Heavy-handed methods brighten prospects. Accent is on winning friends and influencing people. Pisces and Virgo figure in important ways.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis now is on ability to display executive qualities. Make decisions. Assert yourself. Organize. Be firm without being autocratic. Deal with headstrong individual who wants to change your ways. Adhere to principles in calm, deliberate way and you will win.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Now you reach above and beyond--you almost "taste" potential. Travel, write, publish and advertise. Be "in touch." Get hand on pulse of public reaction. Break restrictive barriers. Distribute. Refuse to accept excuses by those not capable of delivering, as agreed upon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New deal involves marriage and money, special relationship with member of opposite sex. Situation can be complicated and you need wits about you. Take nothing for granted, especially where security, investments are concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you don't know what to do, do nothing. That applies strongly for you at this time. Mate, partner is raising ruckus--you have choice of opposing and battling, or steering clear of direct confrontation. Choose latter course--at least for time being.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you fail to concentrate on basics, you lose ground. This includes diet, rest, recreation and general routine. However, you can get moving if there is solid base under you. Message will become increasingly clear. You simply get nothing for nothing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can turn apparent defeat into victory. Sudden changes occur which favor you. Member of opposite sex might play significant role. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons are likely to be in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Family affairs, home, property dominate. Be aware of subtle nuances. Be thorough, capable of checking details and detecting fine points. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently. Older individual will lend benefit of experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Dealings with relatives are emphasized. Make intelligent concession. Strive for greater harmony. Avoid making claims which are based on wishful thinking. If you are reasonable, you open door to greater contentment. Act accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be selective and a comparison shopper. Someone may be trying to sell you a bill of goods. See persons, situations in a realistic light. Take nothing for granted. Virgo individual is likely to be in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a responsible person, capable of organizing and preparing for proverbial rainy day. You draw to you older individuals who share their experiences and find it delightful to confide in you. April could be your most significant month of 1974. You are intuitive, creative and capable of transforming ideas into actions, projects.

A new challenge for track— would you believe streaking?

By SCOTT HAYES

Track is becoming a "steady" sport with its foundation at the high school and college levels. This is especially true now that more and more amateur trackmen are advancing to the professional heights. A new sport, however, known as "streaking" is beginning to grow in popularity on college campuses. With the birth of the "sport" of streaking, track may lose some stability and who knows, maybe streaking will provide track with a challenge in years to come (much like the young WHA is challenging the NHL).

Streaking is simply the art of running with a minimum amount of clothing (in fact, only shoes and sometimes a hat). The low cost of the sport should aid its spread across the nation.

The University of Connecticut reportedly began streaking and has enjoyed success since last semester. The Huskies have great experience and depth, and at last look were atop the Yankee Conference with eight out of the top ten streakers in the league. UConn may turn out to be the UCLA of streaking, with this year's NCAA title practically sewn up already and many more in sight.

Not to be outdone by its rivals to the south, UMass started a streaking program. Last Thursday night, streakers from John Adams initiated the program. Two Washington residents followed suit Saturday night by conquering the tough course from Washington to Sunset Ave.

Although the streakers preferred that their names be kept out of the COLLEGIAN, they were available for comment.

The speedster of the group said, "I don't think it was disgusting, just funny." He later added, "It was the fastest 220 I ever ran."

When asked about the reactions of other people, one streaker answered, "We saw a few people and said 'excuse me' as we ran by, but we didn't stick around to find out what their reaction was."

The second member of the pair was running behind his partner for the entire distance and explained, "He got his pants off first and I couldn't catch up with him." For both streakers it was the first time and simply "something to do."

What motivated the pair to streak? "It was just a spur of the moment thing," explained one, and done for the "mementary thrill."

Both streakers stated that they have made plans for the future on a different course, but they are not ready to reveal these plans to the public.

Coach Ken O'Brien and his assistants have recruited some of the best runners in New England, including state champions, but they sure overlooked two fine prospects from the same campus, who made their debut Saturday night.

Notice

Entries for the co-recreational bowling meet are due on Thursday, February 28th, in the Intramural Office.

Letter to Sports Editor

Derisive Cage fans

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter in regard to the UMass basketball team's overwhelming victory over the University of Maine Saturday night.

As an avid basketball follower, not only of this University, but of the sport in general, having played varsity ball at the college level for three years, and presently in the role of assistant junior varsity coach here at UMass, I can only say I have the utmost respect for the players who compete for Coach Leaman. Under no circumstance did they attempt to do anything spectacular or go out of their way to humiliate their opposition once the game's outcome had been just about a foregone conclusion midway in the first half. They simply played hard basketball, and richly deserve praise for an excellent team effort.

However, I wonder if the same respect may be accorded the people who observed the contest. The point differential had already reached 50, but the fans (not everyone, of course) somehow hadn't had enough. They wanted UMass to score that magic 100th point, and when they did, beer cans, bottles, and oranges were the reactions. I am not implying that everyone at the Cage was guilty, but it just makes me wonder if anyone had really taken the time to consider the feelings of the Maine players and coaches. After all, what is so special about the number "100", other than it follows "99" and precedes "101?" As high as UMass had to feel, wasn't Maine probably feeling the same degree of dejection and disappointment?

Why couldn't the fans (again, I am not addressing myself to the majority who displayed a genuine enthusiasm for their team) simply accept the fact that we were a better team, had played exceptionally well, and won, without adding insult to injury? If anyone can provide me with any answers to these questions, I should be happy to listen.

Rote leading superstars

By WILL RIMSLEY

ROTONDA, Fla. (AP) - The super baby of the Superstars, Kyle Rote Jr., forged into the early lead Monday in the unique contest to decide the best all-around of sports' modern heroes.

"Kyle has to be the odds-on favorite now-I don't think anyone will beat him," said O.J. Simpson, football-carrying ace of the Buffalo Bills who had been the strong advance choice for the $25,000 first prize.

Rote, 23, a member of the Dallas Tornadoes soccer team, won the tennis tournament, upsetting Simpson in the first round, and finished second in golf.

This gave him a total of 17 points after the first two events in the two-day, 10-sport competition to determine the 1974 Superstar.

Points are awarded on a 10-7-4-2-1 scale for the top five finishers in each event. Competitors may choose seven of the 10 disciplines, but not their specialty. A $300 bonus is awarded for each point.

The golf tournament was won by Dick Anderson, star safety of pro footballs champion Miami Dolphins. He shot a four-over-par 40 on the ninehole course, three shots better than Rote.

After the first two events, Rote had 17 points; Anderson 10; Jim McMillian of Buffalo's basketball Braves 7; and baseball's Pete Rose of Cincinnati, 6.

Defending Superstar champion Bob Seagren, who owns the world record in the pole vault, lost his first round in tennis and did not compete in golf.

Rote is the youngest, poorest-paid at $1,400 a year, and hungriest of the Superstars and would be the most obscure were he not the son and namesake of one of the football's all-time stars.

The slender, 6-foot Rote beat Simpson 6-4 in his first tennis match, bested Havlicek 6-3 and polished off McMillian 6-4 in the final.

Matmen face Dartmouth in pre-NE home battle

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

The Minutemen matmen have a big weekend in store as they go to defend their New England title at Dartmouth. There is, however, the small matter of closing out the dual match season tonight. It happens that Dartmouth travels to Amherst to honor their commitment that was postponed from last Saturday.

It being the last hom dual it is also the last time that seniors Larry Reynolds and Steve Benson will wrestle. Coach Homer Barr will be anxious to see how these two seniors plus seven other Minutemen will do at new weight classes. Reynolds has dropped to 118, Benson to 158, Cliff Blom to 150, Dick Muri to 126, and Russell Chateauneuf to 134. Bob Spaulding has traded his 190 pound berth with Robin Osborne and moves down to 177. Doug LeMire has moved up to 142 and Steve Jabaut, pending an elimination later this week, may move to 167.

It will be the first and last chance the matmen have to wrestle under fire at these weights and get used to them. They will be watching Dartmouth closely to see if there is any chance that the Big Green can help them at the New Englands.

UMass may have had its problems filling a class here and there this year, but nothing like Dartmouth. The Green have forfeited 118 and 126 most of the year, which put them down by twelve before even stepping on the mat. Then they went and joined the Ivy League Wrestling Race and ended up scheduling the Ivy Iron like Cornell, Princeton, and Yale. They went 1-7 to the rest of the League, beating Brown out for next to last.

The Dartmouth matmen are not without some decent individuals, however. At 167 Rick Clark, third at 158 in last year's New Englands, has done well this season. Dartmouth's lone New England Champ, Jim Conteratto first at 190, has dropped to 177 in hopes of taking all the marbles and maybe doing well in the NCAA's. Perhaps their smoothest wrestler is at 190 in the person of Charlie Estin. The junior from Colorado has placed third twice in the varsity New Englands and was the only man to beat last year's champ, Horowitz of URI. UMass will have its hands full at these weight classes but is accepting a forfeit at 118 and possibly 134.

The Minutemen started dropping their weight last week after WPI and were just as happy not to have wrestled over the weekend. Larry Reynold's push to 118 comes at a good time because Peter Sachon has not recovered from the injury sustained at the Yan Con's. Then, too, Reynolds has never beaten URI's Scott Pucino at 126 so a New England title and a trip to Iowa State and the NCAA's at 118 beckons. Benson's push down is prompted by a like motive. Benson feels that a drop to 158 will guarantee a New England Championship and at the NCAA's he could really have a chance at placing. It was a long cut in weight for these two seniors, but it could be worth it.

Post-season hoop action

By GLENN POSTER

It's official. A UMass basketball team is going to a post-season tournament. The women have received an EAIAW (Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) regional bid. UMass is one of sixteen teams selected for the competition which will be held at Brooklyn College March 7-9. Our opponent for the first game will be the University of Rhode Island Rams.

Right now the team's record stands at 5-3 with four games remaining on the schedule. Two of the losses have been to seeded teams in the tourney. (Springfield, University of New Hampshire — UMass is not seeded) The Minutewomen have beaten three other teams invited to the competition: Northeastern, Worcester State, and University of Vermont.

If you want to see this group perform, they'll be in action tonight at 7:30 from NOPE. The JV will provide first game excitement beginning at 6:00. Both teams will be taking on Bridgewater State.

Swimwomen tops in tri-meet

By MDC STAFF

The UMass Women's Swim Team completely dominated the University of New Hampshire and Dartmouth College Thursday night in Durham, N.H. The final score UMass 113, UNH 57, and Dartmouth 32 reflects this fact. Taking firsts in all but two events, UMass was led by several outstanding performances.

Coming up with their fastest swim of the season, the 200 medley relay team of Jean Franchebois, Diane Perry, Keran Johnson, and Carol Griffiths took top honors. Leading individual scorers for UMass included Cindy Whiting, who streaked to first place in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle events, and Melon Dash, who continued her winning ways by finishing first in the 200 I.M. 100 butterfly, and 400 yard freestyle. Breaststroker Diane Perry led the field in the 50 and 100 yard events. Backstroker Jean Franchebois placed second and first in the 50 and 100 yard events. Junior Laurie Seluk led the competition in the 50 fly turning in her fastest time of the season and added more points to the UMass score with a second in the 200 IM.

UMass divers Carol Canterbury and Karen Fedora nailed down the first and third place slots in the one meter event.

All New People Welcome

The name is McNamara

Ed. Note - the following dorm was chosen because of familiarity with the situation there.

When one thinks of collegiate sports and the people who play them, a key word that comes to mind is recruitment. Al Skinner was recruited. At the larger universities throughout the country (Ohio State, UCLA) the coach of the prospective sport goes to the home of the star's family and then takes them out to dinner. And there are other fringe benefits. What did John Wooden do to get Lew Alcindor (as he was known then) to go from Power Memorial High School in New York City to Los Angeles? Obviously it's a form of "playing for pay" in the college ranks. And all the professional sports these days make millionaires out of everybody.

What's the point of all this? Well, I'm going to point out that there is another side of the coin on the most campuses today and that includes UMass.

Intramurals are merely participatory sports. You play for fun. Sure, some have the potential to play on a team but, there's really no pressure involved (as there is say in the Yankee Conference) from one game to the next. There are trophies for those teams that finish as the champs in their leagues. Everyone tries to help his-her team battle to the top. As a famous sports cliche goes: "...the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat..." It also applies to intramurals.

Up in McNamara the desire to compete for the "name" of the dorm is at a peak. Maybe some people there just don't want to play on varsity teams. (though there are some who do) And most play at least one sport in each season: fall, winter, and spring. One incident comes to mind last year from a conversation I overheard, "Hey Pete, don't forget your mitt-we've got a softball game after soccer is over." That didn't just apply to Pete, half the soccer team had softball for the second game of their doubleheader. (both teams made the playoffs in their respective leagues - soccer was the eventual runner-up for the entire campus)

This fall the man who played quarterback the previous year came back saying, "I want to play line." But for the sake of the team he played quarterback. Of course he could have played for one of the other McNamara football teams but his schedule would have been conflicting. When it comes to forming teams, McNamara has to have more than one in some sports because of the number of people involved.

The person who runs the operation is Joe Regan. Throughout the dorm Joe is known as "Coach." He was the head of intramurals in the dorm from the moment he became a UMass student. (I was the one who refused the position and Joe was asked next) Joe was also instrumental in helping the women of the dorm get started on the field of battle.

Now the women have their own leaders, Teri and Linda. But Joe deserves all the credit. He started with the girls' softball team last spring and the rest took care of itself. Upon seeing one of his female proteges, Joe would say, "Curfew is 11:00 tonight, you'd better be in because I'm conducting a bed check." As things turned out about 40 of the dorm's members showed up for the girl's first softball game one night last April starting at ten o'clock with the temperatures in the low thirties. And though they lost the game, the spirit was there to the end.

For those out there who would like to compete and have fun at the same time, join your intramural team. McNamara sure has proven what an experience it can be.

Is Boyden sexist?

This column is being written for women, like myself, who have run up and down the stairs of Boyden, clad in a soggy suit, and shivering.

It has occured to me that regardless of what the sign out front says, some small consideration could have been given to the "fairer" sex. I cannot help but ponder as to whose genius was responsible for the cubicle termed "Women's Locker Room." Realistically, this concession to women houses eight showers, two working dryers (upon occasion only), and 40-50 lockers, half of which are reserved for P.E. majors, the rest belonging to whoever has the most guts.

This lack of space merits "small consideration", however when compared to the "ideal" location. It must have been readily apparent to everyone but the women using it, as some minor discontent has been expressed by those involved. It's not every day that one has the opportunity to pull on her suit and blissfully trot down the hall and two flights (enlivened by biting blasts of wind) to stand barefoot while the door is being unlocked. This may be the male idea of athletic fervor, but my doctor just doesn't understand.

As a matter of fact, the infirmary and I have become old friends since my first encounter. Not only do I jog to the left but getting to the lower gym in my leotard entails a similar maneuver to the right. With cries for justice overflowing from all sides, this shout for a minimum of equality seems long overdue. There is no excuse for this blatant discrimination. Any explanation would be useless; explanations will not provide the required space and facilities.

Up from last year's 17th place NE finish

Trackmen ignore record, jump to 4th

By SCOTT HAYES

There are some defeats that are more triumphant than victories. The triumph in Saturday's defeat at Storrs (if you want to call a fourth place finish in the New Englands a defeat) was fabricated by the best performances of the season for most of the trackmen.

Nearly everyone who took the bus ride to UConn came up with his top effort of the season. Mike Geraghty was a disappointment in the long jump, fouling three times, but bounced back to place in the triple jump. Barron Littlefield ran his best time in the 600, but his accomplishment was cancelled by a disqualification. The senior, a native of Bristol, Connecticut, was unfitted from the event for cutting into the inside lane too soon.

All the jumpers enjoyed their best day of the indoor track schedule and the runners fared well also. Bill Gillin ran a great, strategic race in the mile to finish third. Gillin put on an exciting last leg kick that moved him from fifth to third. With his best time coming in the all-important New Englands, Gillin appears to be ready for the IC4A's, to be held this weekend.

Randy Thomas set a blistering pace in the two-mile and held the lead for the first mile and a quarter, but had to settle for third place in 9:00. Although Thomas did not run his best race, the time was just two seconds behind his top performance. Jim Hennessy's 7.6 in the hurdles was good for third place and another personal low.

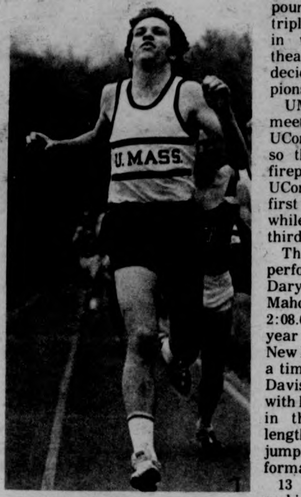
Both the mile and two-mile relay teams held the lead until the last leg, only to be beaten. Bill Charland of BC passed Steve Crimmins and stole a first place finish from the Minutemen. In the two-mile relay, Keith Francis of BC overhauled the field with a 1:51.5880. The fast anchor leg run by Francis gave BC first place instead of third. Chris Farmer and Jack Maloney ran impressive 880's. Farmer took his lap with the baton in 1:54.8, while team co-captain Maloney ran the half-mile in 1:53.8.

Coach Ken O'Brien is pleased with the results of the season. The mentor said, "The season was quite a bit more successful than I expected," and explained that success should be measured by performances rather than won-lost records. O'Brien added, "We're the best 3-5 team around."

Seven records have been broken during the 1973-74 indoor season. These include records in the mile, two-mile relay, distance-medley relay, four-mile relay, long jump, triple jump and pole vault.

The outlook for Spring track is encouraging. The Minutemen will be helped by the addition of several events and are definitely a stronger team outdoors. Hopefully, when the nice weather rolls around, UMass will be able to use its depth and convert some third and fourth place finishes into firsts and seconds. In the past, the team has had more success in both dual meets and big meets during the Spring.

Coach O'Brien singled out Barron Littlefield as the most improved member of the team. Littlefield was hampered by bronchitis throughout the season, but when he did run, he ran well and beat some tough opponents. O'Brien also mentioned Dan Grigus and Mike Geraghty, who have improved steadily over the schedule. Grigus came from nowhere, bettered the school record and finished sixth in the New Englands by clearing 14 feet on his first attempt.



CO-CAPTAIN JOHN MALONEY
1:53.8 half mile relay leg

In summing up the New Englands, the Minutemen simply hit their seasonal bests at the right time.

PASSING THE BATON.....A partisan crowd in excess of 1,000 came to life during the shot put, 35-pound weight throw, pole vault and triple jump. Those were the events in which UConn battled Northeastern for points that later decided the New England championship.

UMass took ten places in the meet, while BC captured nine. UConn and NU took 13 places each, so the Minutemen did not lack firepower. The difference was BC, UConn and NU had a number of first and second place finishers, while UMass garnered mostly third and fourth place finishes.

The crowd saw outstanding performances from Keith Francis, Daryl King, Abe Davis and Dan Mahoney. Francis ran the 1,000 in 2:08.6, just off his own record set a year ago and UConn's King set a New England record in the 600 with a time of 1:09.6. Springfield's Abe Davis qualified for the NCAA meet with his tremendous effort of 50'8" in the triple jump. Mahoney lengthened the New England long jump record with his 23'9" performance.

13 UMass trackmen will be making the trip to Princeton, N.J. for the IC4A's on Saturday and Sunday.

The victory still hasn't subsided. Captain Al Skinner goes up for two of his game-high 21 points against Maine Saturday night in his final game at Curry Hicks Cage. Notice that it takes three to defend.

NIT will draw despite new post-season tourney

By ALEX SACHARE

NEW YORK (AP) — Pete Carlesimo, chairman of the selection committee of the National Invitation Tournament, said Monday he expected the Madison Square Garden event to continue to be a major attraction despite the competition offered by a new post-season basketball tournament.

"The NIT is flourishing, and it is going to keep on flourishing despite that new tournament," said Carlesimo, referring to the Collegiate Commissioners Association (CCA) Basketball Tournament.

Carlesimo pointed to the attraction of playing in Madison Square Garden and New York City as one of the prime lures of the NIT.

The NCAA at-large bids will be announced Thursday, at which time the NIT also will name its first selections. The NCAA tournament will be held March 9-25, the NIT March 16-24 and the CCA March 14-18.

The NIT is expected to draw heavily from the list of major Eastern independents, where St. John's, Manhattan, Rutgers, Syracuse, Fairfield and Boston College all rate as strong candidates. It is also expected to pick two clubs from the Atlantic Coast Conference, where North Carolina State, Maryland and North Carolina must go through a tournament to determine the ACC representative in the NCAA tourney. The ACC is not among the conferences sending teams to the CCA.

Is National Anthem a must?

By STEVE SARACENO

The National Anthem is a bore.

And that's sad, because it didn't used to be.

Back in the 1930's, baseball was the sport, and the Star Spangled Banner was something special. The song would only be played on important occasions — Opening day, the All-Star Game, the World Series — so it was a thing to relish.

Then World War II came, and baseball, feeling guilty about continuing business during wartime, instituted the practice of playing the Banner before every game. The National Anthem became routine.

If it was routine the, you can imagine what it is now.

There are eight pro leagues in the four major U.S. sports. Some of those leagues have more than doubled their number of teams through expansion. College sports are now big time. Television and radio coverage of both pro and college sports is saturating. And the Anthem is played before every event.

The magic, the thrill that once accompanied the Star Spangled Banner, is gone.

Why doesn't somebody do something about it?

It has been tried.

June, 1972...The Kansas City Royals announce that the National Anthem will be played only before games on Sundays, holidays, and special occassions...Public furor erupts in Missouri...The plan lasts less than two weeks.

Then suddenly patriotic uprise was caused by the same K.C. fans who, when previously asked at Royal's games over the P.A. system to "please rise and sing aloud our National Anthem," responded with indifference, many times not even standing up.

The same type of hollow superpatriots were in evidence at the last Olympics.

September, 1972...Wayne Collette and Vince Matthews win medals in track...engulfed in the realization of their lifetime goals, they laugh, shake each other's hands, and chat excitedly on the victory stand — during the Star Spangled Banner...they are forever barred from Olympic competition.

Self-rightous Americans viewing the purely spontaneous act via television were outraged. The couldn't imagine how anyone could fail to stand at rigid attention (gasp) or visibly smile (horrors) during the playing of the United States National Anthem. Many demanded Collette and Matthews have their medals taken away.

These people, who wrap themselves in flags and think the Star Spangled Banner was written along with the Declaration of Independance by our founding fathers, whistled by Washington as he crossed the Delaware, and should be recited like a prayer at every opportunity, are mistaken.

Francis Scott Key scribbled the words to the song on the back of a letter.

It was not adopted as the National Anthem until 1931.

Many still preferred America the Beautiful even after the Banner was officially marked as the U.S. theme song.

Still, the song is at least as American as Mom, apple pie and burgers at the McDonald's next door. It will be honored best if played discriminantly.

All of which brings us to the case of the University of Massachusetts.

The Anthem is played before every home football and basketball game. And response to it here, like everywhere else, is dwindling. Already there is a sizable faction of non-standees during the Star Spangled Banner at the Cage.

Curry Starr Hicks wouldn't roll over in his grave if, say, the Anthem were only played before Yankee Conference home games and contests against special (UCLA?) opponents of the Cagers.

Likewise, the concrete of Alumni Stadium would not come crashing down if, by chance, the Banner was only heard at the Homecoming game.

And hopefully, there would not be so many irrational red, white, and blue-skinned conservatives as to stop the above measures for the correct honoring of a once touching song.

America is waiting, UMass.

House will get Nixon Watergate action

WASHINGTON (AP) — The special prosecutor's staff has decided that any action involving alleged presidential involvement in the Watergate scandal should be up to the House impeachment inquiry rather than a grand jury, it was learned yesterday.

That decision, reached after months of study and debate, was disclosed after President Nixon said Monday night that he had rejected a grand jury request for his testimony.

Nixon lawyers said yesterday no state court can compel the president to appear, citing such action as an "imposition". The White House position raised the possibility that former Nixon-aide John D. Erlichman will escape prosecution in a California court case. Story, page 21.

"I did offer, of course, to respond to any interrogatories that the special prosecutor might want to submit or to meet with him personally and to answer questions and he indicated that he did not want to proceed in that way," Nixon said.

Sources close to the investigation said the request for presidential testimony was made at the insistence of the grand jurors and that unless they continue to insist, no effort will be made to force Nixon to testify.

The apparent reason, the sources added, was that special prosecutor Leon Jaworski finally had concluded that the proper forum for evidence pertaining directly to the President was the House Judiciary Committee rather than a grand jury. The sources gave no indication whether any evidence against the President exists.

Authorities on constitutional law differ on whether a President can be indicted and, if indicted, can be brought to trial. Some say he must first be removed from office by impeachment and conviction in the Senate. Others claim he could be indicted, tried and convicted while in office.

It was understood that the prevailing view within the prosecutor's office was somewhere in between: That there is no constitutional bar to indicting a President, but that, as a practical matter, the best course to follow would be to refer the matter to Congress.

Town could face 'water crisis'

By BARBARA VOORHEES

A number of proposals and recommendations have been made but no action has been taken to reduce the burden placed by UMass on Amherst's water supply and sewage system, Edward Simpson, a member of the university's Energy Conservation Committee (ECC), has reported to the Collegian.

"We have had to work on saving fuel during the heating season and also on saving electrical energy so we have not been able to work on saving water. It is on our agenda," said Simpson.

Simpson noted that reduction in the use of air conditioners is being researched. Reduction in this area would save electrical energy and also cut down on water consumption.

Amherst Selectwoman Nancy Eddy told the Collegian that she hoped the University would act soon in order to avoid a "crisis situation" which could occur this summer if UMass does not cut down on its water usage.

Eddy said that the selectmen were "disturbed" by the minutes of a December Faculty Senate meeting in which members of the Senate asked Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery what should be done about water and sewer problems in Amherst and he replied that he did not know that they existed.

Bromery recently replied to a letter from chairman of the selectmen, Michael Sullivan, dated Jan. 3, asking that UMass take action on the water and sewer problems.

A fact sheet on Amherst water and sewer problems shows that the current safe yield on the Amherst water supply is 4.5 million gallons per day (mgd). The peak consumption for summer, 1973 was 4.5 mgd and is projected at 4.8 mgd for summer, 1974.

UMass accounts for 52 per cent of Amherst's water consumption.

A test well has been drilled off Bay Road in South Amherst but a controversy has arisen as to whether this well is safe to use to supplement the town's water supply.

Hampshire Geological Associates reported to Amherst selectmen that the well would provide an excellent emergency supply but town water consultants Tighe and Bond reported that the site would not yield enough water and that a high presence of carbon dioxide in the water would make it too corrosive to pipes.

Amherst selectmen have appealed to the town of Hadley for help in meeting their demand for water. It is believed by engineers that Hadley has abundant underground wellfields.

The fact sheet also shows that the sewage treatment plant in Amherst has a capacity of 4.25 mgd. Because of over-usage overflows have occurred causing partially treated sewage to be discharged into the Mill River.

A new secondary treatment plant with a capacity of nine mgd should be completed by Nov. 1, 1976. Completion of a new outfall line to the Connecticut River is scheduled for Oct. 1, 1974.

Nader may speak here

By BILL DENSMORE

The Amherst-based Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) is expected to announce today that consumer advocate Ralph Nader will speak at UMass March 18.

Nader's UMass speech will kick off a three -day swing through the Bay State culminating in a March 21 speech before a joint session of the Massachusetts Legislature in Boston.

Although the precise details are not yet available, Nader is likely to make stops in Springfield and Williamstown on the same day he comes to UMass. Funding for a UMass speech will probably come in part for the campus Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ).

Meanwhile, The Collegian has learned that Nader's Washington based organization plans to use Massachusetts as a legal test case for a nationwide moratorium or ban on the construction of new nuclear power plants.

There are already two operating in the state, one in Plymouth and a second small plant in Rowe a prototype built by the Navy. Northeast Utilities', the electric firm which serves Connecticut and Western Massachusetts, has also proposed construction of a twin-nuclear power plant in Montague, ten miles north of Amherst.

Mass PIRG has filed legislation in Boston calling for a moratorium on construction of new nuclear plants, labelling them environmentally unsound and of questionable safety.

91-year-old Blake here March 4

By AVIS YUNI

Eubie Blake, ragtime pianist, composer, and vaudeville performer, will present a lecture demonstration in Emily Dickinson lounge at 8 p.m. on Monday, March 4th.

The 91 year old musician is being brought to campus through the Orchard Hill (OH) Academic Affairs Office and the Orchard Hill Music Series.

Joseph Baron, co-ordinator of the OH Music Series told the Collegian that seating for this free performance will be extremely limited, with the first 200 people being admitted. He said that priorities will be given to OH residents and students in Afro-American Studies and Music.

Eubie Blake is a ragtime pianist, composer, and vaudeville performer. Sometimes called "The Dean of Ragtime," he began playing ragtime professionally at age 17 in 1901 with a travelling medicine show.

He formed a partnership as lyricist and composer with Noble Sissle in 1915 and they later became the vaudeville team of Sissle and Blake.

Blake has written music for fourteen Broadway shows beginning with "Shuffle Along" in 1921. He has more than 300 songs to his credit including "You Were Meant for Me," Memories of You," and "Love Will Find a Way."

Another song, "I'm Just Wild About Harry," originally appearing in "Shuffle Along" was used by Harry Truman as the theme song for his presidential campaign.

Blake retired in the mid 1940's but has come out of retirement with the ragtime boom of the late 1960's.

Blake will tape a television show in Boston on Friday, March 1st, and then come to campus March 2nd-5th, Baron explained. While here, Baron has said his itinerary will be to relax, and how much he does will be up to him.

Baron said Blake will probably tour the campus, visit the Afro-American and Music Departments, and have a radio interview for Black Mass Communications on WFCR. Whether there will be other public receptions and talks will depend on how Blake feels, he said.

"As much as we're going to enjoy him we want him to enjoy his week up here. That's as important if not more so," Baron said.

Blake is being invited to visit the campus in conjunction with the Orchard Hill Music Series, Baron said. He explained that one of the facets of this series is the relationship between Black music and white society.

"The OH Music series is trying to bring people to realizing who their roots are," said Baron. He said that Blake, a contemporary of Scott Joplin, underlines all of American popular culture.

Baron said the series is also trying to get at the concept of who's known and who isn't and why.

The majority of the funds for Blake's stay are coming through the offices of Michael Wolff, Director of OH Residential College and Alan Davis, Academic Officer of OH, rather than through the OH Music Series, Baron explained.

He said that the idea to bring Blake to campus came from Reggie Workman, a musician who teaches in Orchard Hill. Workman found out that Blake would be in Boston and made the initial contact which OH followed up, Baron said.

"Eubie Blake is a great musician who has been a major influence on American music," Baron said. He will be accompanied during his stay by his wife, Marion, who is also his manager.

UMass prof picked for Land Use Task Force

By KATHY SHEEHAN

Dr. N. Eugene Engel, head of the UMass Dept. of Agricultural and Food Economics, has been appointed to the National Task Force on Land Use set up by the Extension Committee on Policy of the Extension Service, U.S. Dept. of Agriculture.

The general purpose of the Task Force is "to develop educational materials to be used by citizens of local communities for purposes of discussing alternative land use techniques," said Dr. Engel.

The Task Force will attempt to gather information on all alternatives of land use planning and to disseminate the material to the general public through radio and TV programs, educational pamphlets, and National, regional, and local study groups and seminars so that individual citizens may get involved, according to Engel.

Today, with a minimum of local guidance, land space has not been used effectively. Apartment and office buildings, factories, and shopping centers have sprung up in the communities without property owners and other users of land having been informed as to the alternatives or even the impacts of these decisions. "Zoning hasn't solved the problem. Other techniques must be implemented," said Dr. Engel.

He forsees that the information gathered by this Task Force will be used to form policy guidelines in the form of legislation to correct or prevent mistakes in land use. "I know that state plans will be developed in cooperation with state agencies and local citizen groups," said Engel about the expected outcome of the Task Force.

In their first meeting on February 11, the members of the Task Force outlined their plans. Information that will be gathered and disseminated includes: land information systems, land use planning procedures, property rights, and resource ownership and control.

The Task Force will be closely watching the National Land Use and Planning and Assistance Act (HR 10294) now before the House of Representatives. It is similar to a Senate-passed bill which would grant state planning groups $100 million per year for eight years. However, the Senate bill gives states three years to complete a state land use and regulation process; HR 10294 allows five years.

Also, the Senate provides Indians $10 million annually for planning; the House bill provides no planning funds or planning directives. It authorizes instead a two-year study on Indian planning needs and legalities.

Dr. Engel estimates that it will take between 18 months and two years to get all the information and probably five years before legislation will be enacted.

Dr. Engel, who has a Ph.D. in Agricultural Economics, is a member of the Pioneer Valley Agricultural Land Use Study Committee, and has served as secretary of Environmental Affairs Fosters Task Force on Agricultural and Land Use in Mass. and Commissioner of the Agriculturers Task Force on Rural Development in Mass.

Engel has been active in many agricultural, research, and planning organizations and is credited with numerous scientific, technical, and public service publications on those subjects.

New Amherst police chief Don Maia sees his force as "not one of enforcement."

Quinn sees energy problems

By MARK VOGLER

State attorney general Robert H. Quinn says that the country is presently entrenched in a serious energy crisis which will take from five to 10 years to solve.

As a recent guest on WUMV's Telopolitics (to be shown in campus center today) Quinn discredited President Nixon's forecast that the energy outlook was improving and accused the administration of discriminating against Massachusetts in gasoline and fuel oil allocations.

Quinn, a Democratic gubernatorial hopeful who has not yet declared his candidacy, also cited Belchertown State School, civil service reform and education as relevant campaign issues for the November election.

Questioned as to the authenticity of the energy crisis, Quinn replied: "If it has gone away as fast as Mr. Simon and President Nixon have said in a recent announcement, then apparently it has no authenticity at all.

"But, we do have a serious crisis that is not going to go away simply because the President says. We're five to 10 years from resolving it. There has to be the investment of a lot of money and policy programing."

Specific legislation sought on the state level would be the appropriate means to deal with the current crisis, he said, adding that a mandatory rationing plan, posted information regarding closing times and the concept of public accomodation should be included.

"There is a great think tank located in Massachusetts that can be put to work in the same way that Sen. Kennedy put it to work to put a man on the moon," Quinn said.

He confirmed Kennedy's sentiments that Massachusetts is being discriminated against by the Nixon administration in fuel allotments.

"I think we're getting much less than we merit under any program that can be promulgated by the Federal Energy Office.

"The administration tends to worry less about a situation when this state is involved."

Quinn criticized the Sargent administration for being "forced to take action" in upgrading the human conditions for the mentally retarded at Belchertown State School.

"Let me tell you why they are now addressing themselves to the problem...certain citizens in this case challenged the behavior of the administration," he said.

The attorney general credited his office with having achieved a consent decree in which the state is presently meeting some of the demands resulting from a suit filed by the Belchertown State School Friends Association two years ago.

But he added he was leary that "we might be robbing Peter to pay Paul by taking out of the budget of other state schools to provide the necessary funds for Belchertown."

He maintained that he has a record of continuing support of aid to retarded persons. "And if there has been any dispute it is because I represent the agencies of Government."

The issue of mental institutions would be a significant one in the November election because tax payers are willing to support their financing out of compassion," Quinn said.

Quinn labeled the state's civil service system as "good", but suggested that it could be greatly improved removing its abuses and eliminating exams "that mean nothing."

"I certainly do not favor losing the baby down the tub drain in the dirty water," the attorney general remarked.

Referring to education as a "big strip of pork," Quinn hit the Sargent administration for continuing "a super layer across the government that has cost us millions of dollars and has not proved its effectiveness."

He said he favored "the continued integrity of UMass and its board of trustees," and opposed educational reorganization "for the sake of reorganization."

"Reorganization for what? What ineffectiveness are we trying to cover up for what administration?"

Asked whether he would be willing to make his personal finances public, Quinn snapped: "Sure, but what has that got to do with my ability to be Governor?"

"It isn't a question of whether I'm richer or poorer than the other fellow in dollars or cents. It's a question of whether I'm richer or poorer in ideas and the ability to implement them."

Reminded of President Nixon's problems resulting from the abuse of campaign finance expenditures, Quinn asked: "Do you want to talk about whether he was rich in ideas and the ability to implement them?"

"I think he was poor there...I don't know whether he was wealthy in dollars and cents."

"Imitai" shown

"Initai", a film about the persistence and courage of the women of an African tribe, was presented last night to an audience of about 25 persons as part of the Union of Third World Women's film festival.

Women of the Diola tribe (a minority group in Senegal) refused an order from a French general in World War Two to give the tribe's rice harvest to the European Army. According to Diola custom, women control food distribution and men cannot overule their decisions.

To prevent the French from stealing the rice, the women hide it. Enraged, the general herds the women together and holds them as political prisoners. The Diola men, eventually hand the food over to the French.

Amherst chief says force aims to serve

By CINDY ROGERS

"The Amherst Police Force is one of service to the community rather than one of enforcement," Don Maia, Chief of Amherst Police recently told the Collegian.

Maia, who has been in the position since Dec. 1, also said that "Amherst is not a town of violent crime. Education is Amherst's only industry and college students usually don't generate problems in the community. It is only a small percentage of students who end up in jail, usually for misdemeanor offenses." Maia added that "the rowdiness in bars is not necessarily caused by students, but they are usually outsiders."

Maia believes that the police have "an excellent rapport with college students" and he would like to see it continue. He asks that students come to the station to speak to the police on any topic. Maia, himself, had attended the University and has personal feelings toward it. "The police," he said, "have a lot of respect for the students." Presently two police officers are attending the University.

In hopes to improve student-police officer relationships, Maia is in the process of applying to Town Counsel for a Community Service Office Program. Through this program, students, both men and women who are interested in law or law enforcement, can be recruited to do various police functions. Maia stated that "any phase of a criminal justice system would be the first step in moving toward a professional police department while maintaining services which the community needs."

The Amherst Police station, open 24 hours a day, provides assistance to the community in emergencies, plumbing leaks, highway needs and no-school announcements. The force consists of 22 men who basically patrol areas of probable crime.

Traffic violations are the major concern, especially with the influx of people to and from the University and the two other colleges. "The efforts of the department," Maia said, "are aimed at control, direction, and assistance. Amherst averages around one accident a day."

Other offenses in the community include larceny, bicycle thefts (which have been increasing over the last few years), shoplifting, and breaking and entering, which has had a substantial increase in the last year. Maia suggests registration of bicycles and embossing of social security numbers on personal possessions.

Intoxication is no longer a criminal offense, but inebriated individuals may be put into protective custody if necessary. Maia does not believe the lowered drinking age has added to the number of offenses for drunkenness.

The Amherst police have a working agreement with the campus police to call them if needed. Maia stated that female assistance is usually requested in cases of sex crimes.

There is one rape reported a year which Maia calls "an alarming rate," and he realizes that most cases go unreported.

Located in the basement of the town hall, the Amherst Police are in the process of applying for a new station. Don Maia enjoys his job and is willing to get to know University students.

THE MALL

What does it mean for you?

(Part II: Cars, cars, and more cars)

By LARRY CARPMAN

Route 9, where Mountain Farms Mall is located, has always had its traffic congestion problems. The present traffic overload is not the fault of the mall per se, but the new shopping area certainly has not helped the situation.

A spokesman for the local branch of the State Department of Public Works (DPW) said he thinks the volume of traffic on the road has increased "about two per cent."

"The traffic count for the portion of Route 9 directly in front of the mall is not up-tp-date," he said. "However, before the mall was built 17,597 cars was the count for a 12 hour-period on that portion of Route 9. This is quite high for a two-lane road," he said.

To alleviate the congestion around the mall a project is in the planning stages to alter the traffic patterns on Route 9. "We're planning a safety project," said the DPW spokesman.

The project, which is expected to be complete by 1975, will extend the medium strip at the entrance of Route 116 past the mall. This change will limit left turning possibilities on Route 9 to five specific intersections where stop lights will be located.

With a large volume of traffic on any road accident occurrence is expected to be high. Route 9 is by far no exception.

"The accident history on Route 9 was high before the mall," said the spokesman.

However, Hadley Police Chief, Frank E. Koloski, said "there has been an increase in auto accidents" since the mall opened.

The heavy traffic and high rate of accidents has caused some tentative plans for the widening of Route 9 into a four lane highway. According to the State Highway Department there is a possibility of enlarging the portion of the road extending from University Drive to past the Mountain Farms Mall.

"I don't think Route 9 should be enlarged," said Louis G. Spanose. General Store Manager for Almy's. "It would take away from the country atmosphere of the area."

Spanose, who has his permanent residence in Connecticut, said: I wouldn't like to see Route 9 turned into a superhighway."

Meanwhile, Robin Wagner, Manager and Leasing Agent for the mall said "eventually widening the road will be a necessity." Jeff Bryan, Promotional Director for the mall, said he would rather see better mass transit than the widening of Route 9.

Another auto related effect the mall has had in the area is the increase in auto larcenies.

Police Chief Koloski pointed out that there have been numerous auto thefts from the mall parking lot.

One thing seems sure: Without an effective mass transit system the mall relies almost totally on the automobile to bring customers into the shopping area. With this in mind plus the fact that the mall is here to stay the problems along Route 9 remain very real.

The traffic problem is not the only effect the mall has had on the area. What has the mall does to the established businesses in downtown Amherst? There are 33 stores in the mall. That adds up to a good deal of needed employees. Who gets the jobs in the mall?

These two questions will be answered in the third part of the series.

'Library not a fire trap' says Health, Safety Services director

By BONNIE ASSELIN

"The library is not a fire trap," declared Robert Gleason, director of Environmental Health and Safety Services. "It's met all the safety requirements."

Richard Talbot, director of the library, stressed, "It's important to know that with high rise buildings, the standard procedure is not to evacuate buildings."

Gleason and Talbot were among the series of University officials offering counter-evidence to what Gleason called the "misconceptions" in last Friday's Collegian article, "What's Wrong with the Library?" They each refuted the findings of the investigation which found the library minus an evacuation plan, fire safeguards, an adequate heating and air conditioning system or elevator service and more.

Gleason criticized the article for "using words of non-qualified sources who didn't know anything about fire protection...except those of Amherst Fire Chief Edward Dougherty."

Talbot called evacuation "an administrative concern." He has instructed his staff on evacuation procedures; only the floors above or below the fire would be evacuated. He said the fire is not likely to spread from floor to floor.

In the event of a fire alarm, all elevators would go immediately to the ground floor, a "wise" plan, Talbot judged. The action prevents people from using the elevators and thus prevents one from dangerously stopping on the floor with the fire.

"One elevator is left accessible to fire fighters who then take it to the floor just below the fire," Gleason further explained. There they would hitch their hoses to the stand pipe on that floor and approach the fire on the next floor by the starewell.

"It doesn't matter that the stand pipes are behind the door," said Gleason in response to the article's inference that it was a hazard. They were not meant for use on the same level, he said, but only for use on the floors above or below. Talbot concurred, "Each floor is taken care of by the hose below."

According to Gleason, a source in the article incorrectly stated that the starewells could act as flues. Little smoke would pass through the starewell, he said, unless the fire doors were left open, which is "unlikely."

As far as its evidence of the non-fire resistant carpet, Gleason's answer was: "There's no such thing as a non-cumbustible rug. They'll burn under certain conditions." His real concern is with ceiling materials that are subject to rising heat temperatures.

The malfunctioning of the heating and air conditioning systems which possibly places valuable papers as the W.E.B. DuBois collection in danger was an issue in the article.

Talbot attested to the problem. "It takes a couple of seasons for adjustment," he said. "The process is dealyed by the new controls put in after last summers breakdown." Nevertheless, he feels the restricted area is the "best storage yet for the W.E.B. DuBois collection, the closest to a controlled environment."

The article also claimed the library's professional staff was doing non-professional work. Talbot denied the accusation. "It's too expensive for us," he said. According to a recent study on academic libraries, he concluded they were understaffed six positions for professionals. Their current ratio of professionals to non-professionals is 1 to 2. In summary, he said, "The facts speak for themselves."

Kissinger flies to Damascus

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (AP) — Daniel Ellsberg said yesterday the Nixon Administration tried to discredit him after he released the secret Pentagon Papers for fear the papers would reveal continuing deception of the American people about the Vietnam war.

He said memos and tapes released during investigation of the Watergate scandal have revealed attempts to "destroy Ellsberg's reputation" with the aim of creating a negative image around both Ellsberg and the Pentagon Papers.

Espionage charges against Ellsberg in connection with the papers' release were dismissed last year after it was revealed that members of a secret investigative unit set up by the White House had burglarized the files of Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

The historic papers were published in several newspapers after they were made available by Ellsberg, a former Rand Corp. researcher and Defense Department worker who helped produce them. The papers indicated various discrepancies between public policy as stated by government officials and actual military activities.

Ellsberg said the administration feared disclosure of plans for mining and bombing major North Vietnamese ports and the "secret bombing of Cambodia," which occurred between March 1969 and April 1970 while false reports were being made to Congress.

"I say 'secret,' but it was no secret to the Cambodians," Ellsberg told an audience at Milwaukee Area Technical College. He claimed 500,000 tons of bombs were dropped on Cambodia and Laos during the 13-month period.

"It's as if we had conducted our entire Asian bombing of World War II and denied it," he said.

Army unit rebels in Ethiopian city

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Rebel army units took over Ethiopia's second—largest city Tuesday to back demands for more pay, unofficial sources said.

There were reports that the uprising in Asmara, a city of 250,000 about 450 miles north of Addis Ababa, had also spread 90 miles northeast to the Red Sea port of Massawa.

Unconfirmed reports said as many as 10,000 soldiers were involved in the bloodless mutiny at Asmara. The reports said the biggest garrison of Ethiopia's four-division 45,000-man army had rebelled, but there was no official confirmation from Addis Ababa, the largest city and Ethiopian capital.

Rebel soldiers were reported holding several senior army officers under guard. There were also reports that rebel soldiers had entered the palace of the governor general at Asmara and placed him under arrest.

Streets in Asmara, capital of the troubled province of Eretria, were reported deserted, but most shops were open.

Reports in Addis Ababa said Asmara's seizure was not aimed at toppling Emperor Haile Selassie or the government. They also said it was unrelated to the secessionist movement to free the Moslem province of Eritrea from the rest of Ethiopia, which is chiefly Christian.

In Addis Ababa, site of unrest last week over the cost of living, life was reported normal but there were rumors of fresh disorders elsewhere in the country. Several persons were killed in last week's rioting and hundreds of soldiers had to be moved to the capital to end the disturbances.

In Washington, State Department officials said they had no details on the Asmara situation other than they had received reports from the American Embassy saying the difficulty centered on the Army garrison at Asmara. U.S. officials said in Washington that they would consider the situation "serious" throughout the nation on the northeastern bulge of Africa.

They added that the Ethiopian government faced serious domestic problems. One official was asked about the future of Haile Selassie, the wiry leader famous for his resistance to Italy in the 1930's.

"There are problems there, but as far as a coup goes the answer is no," the official replied.

In a nationwide address Monday, Haile Selassie announced immediate pay increases for military personnel.

Asmara is the site of an American satellite tracking station but the Americans, with several hundred personnel and dependents in Asmara, began phasing out their operations at Kagnew base.

Authorities offer reward for painting

LONDON (AP) — Municipal authorities offered a reward yesterday for the recovery of a Vermeer masterpiece stolen from a London museum. The mystery deepened over who seized the priceless painting.

Illtyd Harrington, deputy leader of the Greater London Council, which governs the British capital, said: "We will not in any circumstances enter into any discussions involving a massive amount of money."

The masterpiece - "The Guitar Player" by 17th century Dutch artist Jan Vermeer - has been valued by art experts as high as $4.4 million. However, many experts have said the Vermeer is priceless.

It was stolen Sunday night from Kenwood House, a home bequeathed to the nation by brewery magnate. With it came 60 old masters, including the Vermeer.

Harrington made the vague reward offer after a man calling himself Harry telephoned a British newspaper Monday night and demanded about $1.15 million for food to be distributed to the poor of the troubled Caribbean island of Grenada for the safe return of the painting. The painting would be destroyed if the money was not paid in 14 days, he said.

Grenada, which gained independence from Britain this month, has been troubled by riots that have paralyzed essential services and food distribution. The island's prime minister, Eric Gairy, said in a telephone interview of the ransom demand: "Grenada is not interested in that type of money at all.

Scotland Yard detectives said they believed the "food-for-the-poor" ransom was inspired by the distribution of food by newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst in California.

Ellsberg accuses Nixon of harassment

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arrived here Tuesday night hopeful of getting a list of Israeli war prisoners and generating movement toward Syrian-Israeli troop disengagement.

Syria's foreign minister, Abdul Halim Khaddam, welcomed Kissinger at the airport and they headed for President Hafez Assad's palace for their first working session.

Kissinger made the comment as he took off for Damascus following friendly discussions with British leaders.

Israel has demanded a list of the some 100 POWs held in Syria as a precondition in troop withdrawal talks on the Golan Heights — the goal of Kissinger's Middle East peace mission.

Few details emerged from Kissinger's talks with Prime Minister Edward Heath, Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home and Energy Secretary Lord Carrington during his stopover here. However, Kissinger indicated he had some advance notice that Syria may be ready to meet Israel's demand for the list of Israeli prisoners.

Kissinger's talks with the British leaders covered the energy crisis, the Middle East situation and U.S.-Soviet talks on strategic arms limitation. He met with Heath for two hours with emphasis on the medium-and long-range future in the energy crisis.

Israel has said it is prepared to withdraw from the 300 square miles of Syrian territory she captured in the October war. But there was no indication from Jerusalem that Israel was prepared to meet Syria's demand that she pledge withdrawal from the Golan Heights territory she captured in 1967.

Hearst captors keep still

HILLSBOROugh, Calif. (AP) — The terrorist kidnapers of Patricia Hearst continued their silence for the sixth straight day yesterday. In the 23 days since the newspaper heiress was abducted, this is the longest stretch in which there has been no word from her or her captors.

Randolph A. Hearst kept a vigil yesterday at the family mansion here and hoped for word from the Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims to hold his 20-year-old daughter as a "prisoner of war."

Meanwhile, the food giveaway program he set up prepared to sever all connections with the Hearst family.

The last tape-recorded communication from the SLA was received last Thursday. Since the pretty coed was kidnaped from her Berkeley apartment Feb. 4, communications had been received at three, five, four and five-day intervals.

The SLA's latest demand is that Hearst, editor and president of the San Francisco Examiner, add $4 million to his $2-million program.

Judge bars treaty evidence in Wounded Knee trial

By JOHN LUNDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The defense in the trial of two American Indian Movement AIM leaders charged in the occupation of Wounded Knee failed Tuesday to get 1868 Sioux Treaty provisions admitted as part of the geographical description of the Pine Ridge Reservation.

U.S. District Judge Fred Nichol ruled it out, declaring there was no reference to a reservation in the treaty.

Dennis Banks, 41, St. Paul, and Russell Means, 34, Porcupine, S.D., are accused in a 10-count indictment with burglary, theft, firearms violations, assault and conspiracy.

The government charges they helped spearhead the 71-day armed occupation of the town by some 200 militants last Feb. 27.

The defense hopes to justify the Wounded Knee takeover in light of the 1868 pact and other treaties it contends were broken.

Del Eastman, the Pine Ridge chief of police, was called by the government Tuesday to explain the geographical area and the placement of law enforcement barricades.

Eastman, who said he was agency special officer for the Bureau of Indian Affairs BIA, said Indian police maintained two roadblocks and private citizens threw up another for a time during the occupation of the hamlet.

He said U.S. marshals and FBI agenst maintained six primary roadblocks and explained that four were located on main roads leading out of the village, while two others were astride two-lane dirt trails where vehicles could be driven.

Looks like 'wounded butt' for 'Wounded Knee' duo

HAVRE, Mont. (AP) — "They were headed for Wounded Knee when they left," their mother said. "But it will be Wounded Butt when they get back."

That means an uncomfortably warm reception for two Wisconsin kids who left home by train to join the Indians. They might have made it all the way to Seattle, too, if they hadn't insisted on building a teepee in the observation car.

Douglas Morgan, 10, and his 9-year-old brother William told authorities here that when they left their Milwaukee home Sunday equipped with Indian headdresses, a tom-tom, homemade spear, bow and arrow and about 60 cents they wanted to be adopted into a tribe.

The boys successfully hopped an Amtrak train headed west, but they missed connections to the South Dakota Indian country. Their 1,300-mile journey came to an end in Montana when they began waving their spear and trying to build a tent in an Amtrak car.

That's when they got shot down in this northern Montana community; and there wasn't an Indian in sight.

"It was just like a Huckleberry Finn deal," said conductor Lee M. Grant, who discovered the youths trying to turn the passenger car into their own Indian settlement.

"They were going to join the Indians and when that didn't work they decided to go to Disneyland. They were just dreaming and rolling along all the while. They had no conception of how far away from home they were."

Doug and William, whose journey was derailed Monday, remained in the custody of juvenile authorities Tuesday while arrangements were being made to return them home. They may not like what they find when they get there.

"About the first thing we're going to do, after we hug them, is blister their bottoms," said Phyllis Plonka, the boy's mother. She said this is not the first time Doug and William set out on their own.

She said last year they ran away and were found several hours later in a nearby park armed with carpenter tools. They were scouting trees to use for a log cabin where they wanted to live "by ourselves."

Mrs. Plonka, who has remarried, said both her boys were big on Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn and had learned from their stepfather about outdoor survival.

Watergate not tops in Ohio election

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Watergate has taken a back seat to energy, inflation and foreign policy in a special congressional election campaign to fill a seat vacated by a Republican last month.

Neither the Republican nor the Democratic candidate for next week's election in Ohio's traditionally Republican 1st District has stressed Watergate.

The March 5 election will be the third of six special congressional elections scheduled this year in the nation. It pits two former Cincinnati mayors - Republican Willis D. Gradison Jr., 44, and Democrat Thomas A. Luken, 48.

The two previous elections also have been for Republican seats, and both have been won by Democrats. In one-Michigan-Watergate and President Nixon were the Democrats' central issues.

Politicians are watching these races to try to gauge the effect of Watergate on Republicans who will be running this fall.

Nixon, in his news conference Monday night, was optimistic about the fate of his party in the elections. "I think it will be a good year for those candidates who stand for the administration," he said.

And Gradison, the Republican, has not attempted to go it alone. He has stressed the President's record on foreign affairs and the budget and reminds the voters: "The only names that will be on the March 5 ballot are Gradison and Thomas A. Luken."

Gradison blamed Watergate on the "incredible growth of government power" and said Nixon had been "secretive and too legalistic" in his treatment of the Watergate investigation. But he said he had seldom been asked about Watergate by voters.

Luken has concentrated on inflation, the energy crisis and the need for a veto-proof Congress - a theme of the AFL-CIO, which has been campaigning for him. He has mentioned Watergate only rarely.

Food prices may jump 16 per cent in 1974

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sharply higher farm prices for major food items, including beef, pushed the annual retail cost of a grocery market basket to a record $1,680 in January, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Officials said Tuesday the January base was up an annual rate of $30 or 1.8 per cent from December. The indicator had soared to $1,653 last August and then dropped for two months before beginning its current spiral.

Compared with a year earlier, the January food basket cost consumers $305 more on an annual basis. Higher farm prices accounted for more than half of the gain.

Department economists say food prices will keep rising at least through mid-year but could level off later if farmers produce more crops and livestock.

For all of 1974, USDA says grocery store prices may go up as mucha s 16 per cent from last year if record harvests do not materialize and consumer demand continues strong.

In related developments:

-President Nixon signed a proclamation removing all restrictions on imports of beef into the United States this year in a move intended to drive retail prices down.

-Federal Reserve Board chairman Arthur F. Burns told Congress: "Inflation cannot be halted this year." He said the government may have to act to push the economy toward recovery but recommended against a tax increase.

-The American Bakers Association held a 40-minute "Save Our Bread" rally on Capitol Hill, then took its campaign to a Senate committee room. Members are lobbying to "assure an adequate domestic wheat supply." The National Wheat Growers Association countered that the alleged wheat shortages "simply don't exist."

The market basket, which includes only U.S. farm-produced food, is theoretically enough for a household of 3.2 persons an entire year.

Based on department calculations, farmers in January received $769 as their share of the retail basket cost, up $47 or 6.6 per cent from the annual rate in December. Compared with a year earlier, farmers in January got 29.1 per cent more or $173.

Middlemen, whose margins for processing and selling food had been expanding for months, had a reduced share in January of $911, a decline of $17 or $1.8 per cent from December.

But the figures showed middleman spreads were up $132 or 17 per cent from January 1973.

"GET THAT GASOLINE......"

No gas closes mines

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Mines producing 100,000 tons of coal a day were shut yesterday as miners in West Virginia and Virginia complained they couldn't get enough gasoline to get to work.

The West Virginia Coal Association said it believed an accurate estimate of the number of men out of work in its state was 9,000. It said the more than 30 mines in southern West Virginia would produce about 75,000 tons on an average day. These mines produce metallurgical coal, a high-grade fuel used to make steel.

In Virginia, the president of the United Mine Workers district said about 40 per cent of his members were home because their cars didn't have enough gasoline to take them to work.

One UMW official stressed that the shutdown of the area mines was not a strike.

Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., warned in Washington that eastern Kentucky coal miners would strike if no more gasoline is fed into the area. A spokesman for Beth-Elkhorn Coal Corp. said four of its mines in eastern Kentucky may have to close today "because there isn't a gas station in Letcher County that has any gas."

Miners said gasoline has been short in the area for the past few weeks, but the situation has grown in the final days of this month. Gasoline is a necessity in the sparsely populated mountains because miners living in scattered towns may have to drive 5 to 6 miles each day to get to and from work. The winding up-and-down roads are not conducive to high gas mileage and car pools are impractical.

West Virginia Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. telegraphed federal energy chief William E. Simon yesterday, accusing the government of foot-dragging in getting fuel to energy producers.

On Sunday, Moore ordered oil companies to supply an extra 500,000 gallons of gasoline to the southern counties and much of it arrived in stations Monday. But miners complained that stations were staying open only a few hours each day.

March brings price hikes as February crunch ends

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Motorists struggling with the end-of-the-month fuel crunch yesterday had more bad news ahead of them: price hikes within the next few days.

Mandatory gasoline rationing took effect in New York and Delaware and Rhode Island announced a voluntary odd-even distribution system will begin Friday; and coal mines in Virginia and West Virginia closed because workers couldn't get gas to commute.

The National Petroleum Council predicted the nation will have to institute some form of mandatory gasoline rationing unless federal allocation measures prove more effective.

The mandatory rationing that went into effect in New York seemed to help cut the lines that had persisted during a volunatry sales distribution program introduced Feb. 11.

Independent service stations — those not directly owned by the major oil companies — got permission from the Federal Energy Office last weekend to raise prices by two cents a gallon. Then, on Monday, the government okayed another penny-a-gallon boost in the wholesale price, effective March 1.

Standard Oil Co. of California officials planned a meeting for tonight to decide what to do about prices. A spokesman would say only, "No price increase is planned before March 1."

The company already has raised the price it charges dealers by 5 cents a gallon since Dec. 1.

Exxon, Gulf and Shell Oil said they had made no decisions yet about new price hikes.

A spokesman at Mobil said a decision probably won't be made until late Feb. 28.

The Oil & Gas Journal, reporting on a 55-city survey, says the average retail price of gasoline on Feb. 12, 1974 was 45.76 cents a gallon. On Feb. 13, 1973, the average price was 36.95.

President Nixon said in his news conference Monday night that the crisis stage of the energy crisis is over and predicted there was a better-than-even chance the nation could avoid gasoline rationing. He said the gasoline lines would get shorter by spring.

Some people weren't so sure.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana said yesterday he had spent 35 minutes on line waiting for gas. "The shortage remains and so does the crisis," he said.

The Petroleum Council, an advisory panel to the Interior Department composed of Oil Industry executives, concluded that additional reductions in fuel usage, including gasoline, will be required to balance demand with supply.

The Federal Energy Office said the whole thing was a matter of semantics. Whether you call it a crisis or a problem, the FEO said, "we still have an energy emergency because we are going to continue to have a shortage of gasoline."

California Gov. Ronald Reagan readied an announcement on an odd-even gasoline marketing system that will be established in any county.

Rationing predicted

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Petroleum Council yesterday predicted the nation will have to institute some form of mandatory gasoline rationing unless federal allocation measures prove more effective.

The council also said in a report that unless petroleum imports are increased substantially before the end of the year, the real Gross National Product could not grow beyond present levels and unemployment would hit about 6 per cent.

The unemployment rate rose from 4.8 per cent in December to 5.2 in January, the largest monthly increase in four years.

The council, an advisory panel to the Interior Department composed of oil industry executives, concluded that additional reductions in fuel usage, including gasoline, will be required to balance demand with supply.

Eagle unveiled

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — A bronze eagle that guarded the entry to Adolf Hitler's office in Berlin three decades ago, was unveiled yesterday morning at the Air Force Museum here.

The 450-pound statue was donated by Mildred C. Hill of Belgrade Lakes, Maine, at the wish of her husband, the late Air Force Maj. Gen. Edmund W. Hill.

Hill had acquired the eagle on a bet while on special duty during the occupation of Berlin in 1945, his wife said.

She said a fellow officer bet Hill $10 he couldn't remove one of a pair of eagles from their perches above Hitler's doorway.

Hill asked Russian officers for assistance, the wife said, and later the Russians kept one of the eagles and gave Hill the other.

The eagle had been in their house until now.

Mrs. Hill was not at the ceremony.

The energy crisis

Long hot summer may follow winter's cold

BOSTON (AP) — The worst of the winter demand for heating oil seems to be behind us, but officials are not at all sure if there will be enough electricity for air conditioning next summer.

"We have all the equipment we need to produce the amount of electricity required," said Bill Connolly, a spokesman for the New England Power Exchange.

"We have the capacity. The question is whether we will have the fuel," he said.

Air conditioning is one of the largest electricity users in summer. And since by far the most electricity in New England is produced from oil, the amount of electricity available this summer will depend greatly on how much oil is available.

Connolly said the fuel situation has improved. But there's no way to know if it will continue to improve, level off or get worse.

Of the electricity produced by New England utilities, about 20 per cent comes from muclear power plants and 80 per cent from plants operated on fossil fuel-primarily oil.

Connolly said there are no plans to extend the present voltage reduction of 5 per cent for four hours daily.

But Gov. Francis W. Sargent has prepared a contingency plan for Massachusetts in case the oil shortage gets dramatically worse.

The plan calls for a 5 per cent voltage reduction around-the-clock and a mandatory 20 to 30 per cent power usage reduction for all consumers. Another alternative of the plan is rolling blackouts that would leave entire communities without electricity for certain times.

But with or without such drastic measures, the oil shortage may make it essential to use air conditioning less.

More gas on the way

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Increased gasoline allocations for the six New England states should reach consumers in two or three days, Federal Energy Office spokesmen said yesterday.

Representatives of oil companies and state energy officials met at the regional Federal Energy Office in Boston to discuss plans for distribution of the 34.5 million gallons of gasoline allocated for New England last Friday.

Hugh Saussy, Jr., deputy FEO regional administrator, said that the extra allocations would carry over into March, despite the fact that the next month's allocations also will be delivered.

Saussy predicted that March allocations throughout New England would be somewhat higher than the initial February allotments.

He said, however, that lines may continue at gas stations unless station operators decide to stagger their hours of business so motorists can buy gas in the afternoon as well as in the morning.

Saussy strongly urged service station operators to post their hours of business.

At the meeting of energy officials and oil company representatives, the suppliers said their basic problems are delivery time delays, logistics, problems with computer programming, requirements for small deliveries and truck scheduling.

The suppliers said that they can make deliveries of the new allocations within two to three days of their formal notification by state officials.

Saussy said states are now in the process of notifying the oil companies.

Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent announced yesterday that his office already has notified the suppliers. He also revealed a distribution plan which will send about 25 per cent of the state's most recent allocation to metropolitan areas.

Massachusetts has received 16.5 million gallons of gasoline in extra allocations during February. A total of 12.9 million gallons was awarded by the FEO last Friday.

Representatives of the six New England states complained to the FEO that they were short of gasoline. Massachusetts cited a specific shortage in metropolitan areas, while Maine officials said the state has acute requirements for fuel for agriculture.

Spokesmen for New Hampshire and Rhode Island said their states will be forced to use their reserves this month.

In Massachusetts yesterday, Consumer Affairs Secretary John Verani said the state has "broken the back of the panic psychology" that caused long lines at gasoline stations.

A spot check around the Boston area showed that many service station lines were much shorter than a week ago.

One service station operator said the key factors were making Saturday an "open" day with gasoline available to all customers and allowing stations to sell gasoline on Sundays.

Verani agreed with that evaluation. He predicted the improved situation will continue into next month if federal allocations are realistic.

In another development yesterday, the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation said it has called an emergency meeting for Friday in Waltham to discuss problems that farmers have in getting gasoline.

These areas, which have been hardest hit by the gasoline shortage, were listed as: Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Holyoke, the Merrimack Valley area, New Bedford, Pittsfield, Fitchburg, Fall River and Brockton.

Verani said the remaining allocation will be distributed to all other retail gasoline dealers in the state.

He said additional trouble spots have been designated for special supplies, including Gloucester, Taunton, Gardner, Greenfield and Barnstable.

Verani said the latest allocation represents an increase of 8 per cent over the state's initial allotment.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent said "while we welcome this latest allocation, it simply reinforces our basic arguments that Massachusetts has not received its fair share of the available gasoline."

In Massachusetts yesterday, Consumer Affairs Secretary John Verani said the state has "broken the back of the panic psychology" that caused long lines at gasoline stations.

Simon agrees: gas now "problem"

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy chief William Simon said yesterday he finds no fault with President Nixon's demotion of the fuel shortage from a crisis to a problem. Simon also told critical senators he believes long gasoline station lines will ease by April.

"We'll have to dig a big bomb shelter for you by April if the lines are longer," said Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash.

Jackson and other members of the Senate's Government Operations Committee told Simon that his credibility and that of the President is being severely tested.

"How do you reduce demand through voluntary conservation when people are told the crisis is over?" Jackson asked.

Simon said there is no conflict between his statements that energy shortages will remain until the nation develops self sufficiency and the President's news conference statement that the crisis has passed but that a problem remains.

"The President is distressed by the hardships caused by long lines and he is moving to allocate more gasoline to relieve them," Simon said.

He said three weeks is too short a time in which to judge the allocation program a failure. Simon also said that spot shortages, especially in urban areas, will be equalized in the coming months and he does not believe rationing is now necessary.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield told newsmen he waited in line for 35 minutes to get gas, called for immediate rationing and said: "The shortage remains and so does the crisis."

"I think it is still serious," said Republican Leader High Scott. "The greatest problem is to get more gasoline to the people and to end the gas lines."

Mansfield predicted the situation will be worse by April and said the President has authority now under the Defense Production Act to impose gasoline rationing without waiting for enactment of the emergency energy bill stalled in Congress.

Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, said the allocation system "is simply not responsive to regional and state needs."

"It is all very well for President Nixon to say the energy crisis is over. He doesn't have to wait in gas lines," Democratic House Leader Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts said in a statement.

Asked if he agrees with Nixon's statement that the energy crisis is over, House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., said: "I don't. It's a genuine crisis."

Sargent challenged

BOSTON (AP) — Former Commerce Commissioner Carroll Sheehan, taking a verbal swipe at Gov. Francis Sargent's handling of the energy crisis, announced Tuesday he will seek the Republican nomination for governor.

Referring to recent trips by Sargent to Washington to meet with Federal Energy Chief William Simon, Sheehan said: "It is not proper to go to Washington and publicly harass public officials who have a difficult job. I would have gone quietly to Washington first to determine what our needs are and how to resolve them."

Sheehan also said Sargent, a Republican, has misdirected the commonwealth and neglected social programs.

Sheehan made his announcement in a series of news conferences here and in Pittsfield, Worcester and Westfield. He said he is appalled at how little information is available on the energy crisis and said he would set up an agency to make sure Massachusetts residents have complete information on the whole energy situation.

Future defeats predicted

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Large number of Republicans, and possibly incumbents of either party, will be swept out of office this fall in "probably the most explosive election year since 1948," according to Senate President Kevin B. Harrington.

Reversing a prediction he made six weeks ago, the Salem Democrat said one victim will be Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

"I think a landslide is coming, and I think it's going to carry him in its path," Harrington said.

"Watergate plus the gasoline shortage plus high unemployment have now produced anger, a seething resentment against incumbents," Harrington said.

For this reason, he said, legislators are eager to end the session early this year, both to begin their campaigns, and to disassociate themselves from government.

He predicted a record number of bills killed without debate on the floors of the House and Senate.

The election is likely to change the composition of the Senate, which now has 32 Democrats and 8 Republicans, Harrington said.

Living in Belchertown: a dialogue

a commentary by Denny Matteau with para-commentary by Bill Husted and unsolicited remarks
by Kris Jackson

D.M.: Hey, anybody wanna read my Collegian article?...Anybody-? Awww, come on, people....

B.H.: Ok, I will. Let's see, "It's a ten or fifteen minute drive from campus, or an hour by bike, or a very long walk to Lake Metacomet. When I first moved out here, I thought I must be in the very midst of legendary suburbia, and that the neighbors would surely believe me and my roommates to be drugridden hippies. But I soon found out that a good many of my neighbors are not typical suburbanites at all, a good many of them are hippies." They are? I don't see any hippies!

D.M.: Oh, just keep reading and pass me that jay.

B.H.: "All along the roads in this area is farmland, or really, once was farmland. Now it's being turned into rather nice looking housing tracts. Most of the houses here look to be five years old or younger.

"Behind the backyards are woods, and in the woods is the Metacomet Trail, a hiking trail that extends down into Connecticut. Behind my house there's this hill, just a slight swelling in the earth, and off it grow lines of piees." Wow, what descriptive phrases! Denny, if you were a sophomore in high school, you'd get a prize for this, 'lines of pines'!

D.M.: Hmph.

B.H.: "They stick their short arms up to support the heavy sky, The sky's an upside down hill swelling close to the earth. Those pines have something on their minds, the way they stand there like that...

K.J. I know what they have on their minds! Euell Gibbons!

B.H.: (regaining composure) Ahem, "There's no wildlife under them except a rabbit or two, and a timber-doodle (also known as a woodcock). I've been told the timber-doodle is in it's last generation because its eggs won't hatch anymore. They've picked up chemicals in the ecosystem which have softened their shells." Who told you that?

D.M.: You did, last fall.

B.H.: But I could never have said any such thing! It's not true!

D.M.: I distinctly remember you said that!

B.H.: No I didn't...Wait a minute! I remember, that was a TIME magazine article I read, about bald eagles.

D.M.: Well. Now I have to rewrite this entire article, thanks to you.

B.H.: No you don't. The ecology freaks will love this. It will give them something local to feel guilty about.

D.M.: (with insulted journalistic integrity) But it will be FALSE!

B.H.: Well, if you're gonna be picky about it... "But this timber-doodle I saw was such a clown, springing straight up in front of me to eye-level with a "cododle-oodle-oo" and then flying straight away for a distance of five or six feet. This is the way that bird migrates south from the upper reaches of Canada, drawing millions of right-triangles in the air.

"Besides Metacomet Trail, there's Metacomet Road and Metacomet Lake. (a pond, really. Back where I come from, lakes are big and so are their names: Chargogagogmanchaugoggagogchaubunagungamaug) "Wait a minute, you can't use Chargogagognanchaugoggagogchaubunagungamaug in this essay, it's irrelevant!

D.M.: Irrelevant. But it's important! Where else would I use that?

K.J.: Well, at least those long words will improve your typing.

D.M.: Sexist!

B.H.: "Metacomet" is the Nipmuck name for a governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony. I'm curious as to how his puddle of a lake on what was then the furthest frontiers came to be named after a British Gentleman, but the Indians who hold the story are all dead, now. The Nipmuck also named Lake Chargogagogmanchougoggagogchaubunagungamaug, which was their favorite gathering place, when they could wrest it from another tribe, the Mohawk. The incongrous name actually embodies a treaty the Nipmuck finally made with the Mohawk, agreeing that one tribe would fish in the North pond or cove, the other would use the South pond, and the large middle pond would remain unused.

"There are supposed to be Great Blue Heron on Metacomet or the neighboring lake, Arcadia..." Wait a minute! You're talking about birds again! You can't skip around Indians and two lakes and birds and trails like this!

D.M.: Yes I can! I took a course in the New Journalism, You know!

B.H.: Oh, of course, I see. This is all very esoteric, I take it.

K.J.: Actually, it has all the coherence of a badly done grocery list.

D.M.: Sexist!

Letters To The Editor

Ballou's "prayer" condemned

To The Editor:

I address my remarks to Bill Ballou's Feb. 25 editorial "Why I write sports," and contend that the political system remains "hopelessly disgusting," for precisely the same reasons Mr. Ballou claims he writes sports-to escape confrontation of the political mess, averting his gaze with the type of attitude that seems to be based on a hope that the problem will simply disappear. Yet, even though he finds politics "dirty" and typifies the situation as dizzying, he does profess and "ideal solution." Mr. Ballou's answer is for "people to walk into the voting machine look at a couple names and pick the best one."

Having co-authored a book with Representative Francis C. Lapointe (D-Chicopee) on the subject of campaign financing, I have a better idea. The problem of politics lies not in the names we must choose from but with the system under which we must choose. The indictment must be upon the system, not upon the men and women forced to work within it.

True, there is difficulty in expecting officeholders to legislate the sweeping changes needed in our present system of elections. Public financing must become a reality, at all levels of government, and there must be an independent director of campaign finance set up to enforce the laws (which could also stand some revisions.)

The problems today are 1) that it costs too much to run for public office, and 2) election laws, campaign statutes which are virtually ignored. I can cite a host of campaign spending violations in the state of Massachusetts in 1970-72 alone, which have not been followed up by the Secretary of State. Yet Mr. Ballou would have us resign ourselves to this fact. I say we can bring pressure to bear upon political officeholders to remedy this situation.

The problem has been defined and it must be dealt with. Change can come with citizen interest, and demand for that change.

Screaming at Jack Davoren (Mass. Sec. of State), Mr. Ballou and praying to God and-or Charlton Heston serves about as much purpose as abstaining from voting, resignation to "the system," and condemning all politicians as "crooks." This is the easy way out, encompassing an attitude which serves only to perpetuate a rotten system of election.

Double standard

To The Editor:

In an age when double standards are frequently brought into consciousness a certain sensitivity to their existance develops. The recent controversy stemming from an alledgedly racist cartoon drawn by Don McGilvray has unearthed a striking one. Under a heading labelled MDC policy the Collegian editors reaffirmed the right of the staff, or indeed any person to state his opinions without censorship or modification. Thus even the price of offending a significant number of individuals is not considered by the free-minded, "liberal" MDC editors to be too much to pay for the principle of uncensored expression. Yet, in Monday's Collegian (2-25) on the page immediately before the above cited statement of editorial principles, there appeared a direct contradiction of these principles in the statement of Collegian policy on the publication of letters to the editor.

Such letters are subject to editing, according to the statement, on the basis of either length or content. Is the university community to assume from this, that the high-minded standards of freedom of expression are reserved for the Collegian staff alone? Are we all equal with the qualifier expressed in Orwell's Animal Farm that some are more equal than others.

It seems that there are only 3 alternatives to this apparent and offensive double standard. (1) Declare and somehow prove (a difficult task) the superiority of the opinions of the Collegian staff to those of the general community and thereby justify their superior right to uncensored publication. (2) Apply the policy of no censorship as to content to all who would express their views. (3) Devise, state, and enforce general standards for content which will apply to staff and public alike. A truly free and responsible press cannot evade a concrete stand on this issue.

No sacred cows

To The Editor:

I just got back from the courthouse where me and Sheriff Tate was testifying against some Criminals, and I was relaxing on the veranda, reading the latest cotton prices when Elsa, my maid, brought me my mint julep and last Friday's MDC. As always, it was a journalistic masterpiece, a paragon of unbiased reporting, and a veritable goldmine of fact. Why, there was even an illustrated encapsulation of several valuable facts, including, for those who may have doubted, that the UMass library is the most useless in the world. But one thing about that particular feature offended my sensibilities, aroused my anger and insulted my intelligence, and that was the crude and tasteless caraciture of the good Chancellor Bromery. Now, cartoons of dirty hippy marijuana addicts, or of bloodthirsty soldiers, or of nearsighted women from the Fish and Game Commission are legitimate caracitures, but to make laughing stock of Chancellor Bromery is an affrontery! Is nothing sacred? Why, a man in his position, at the head of such a smoothly running, highly syncronized administrative machine as UMass ought to be immune from such slanderous and flippant criticism as is the President of the United States.

Weiss: speech writer

To The Editor:

I thought Fred Weiss had a brain until I read his column "Best of Both Worlds" on Tuesday. If he turns to things like Norman Mailer's sharpness with curiosity then he will never be able to have anything but dullness himself.

Weiss said that writing is very important to me which is fine. Too bad he doesn't think before he writes.

He will make a fine speech writer. Rhetoric, bullshit and false innocence are in the true tradition of U.S. politicians.

Possession hits UMass

In these times of garish headlines telling of massive governmental corruptions or of gross incompetencies, one can be mistakenly led into the assumption that our men of high esteem into whom we have put so much of our public trust are lacking in certain qualities of intelligence or basic coordination. Just as we see our leaders suddenly skipping to Rio or San Clemente, or when we notice large improvements in the Swiss economy, we are so quick to nod our head assentingly and mutter derogatories about "politicians". But it is just not true! When our gallant President scampers about the county hiding in one retreat or another, coming out only at night or at local D.A.R. meetings trying to find one or two old line supporters, we should not be so quick to criticize. For it is just the sign of these dommed times. Our leaders today are bding infested with denizens of the occult who are taking over their bodies and are trying to lead them straight to hell.

It has come to our attention, that many of late have been speaking in those less than laudatory terms of our ex Food Services Chief Joel Stoneham. People have been commenting on his ability to add and subtract and making "crypto-Fascist" remarks about the Brazilian weather, and all just because Food Services has a deficit of half a million dollars. How Absurd! I recently consulted with a local demonologist Dr. Heinrich von Belchbreakfast who is recuperating in the Infirmary from a stomach ailment (terminal diarrhea) acquired from many years of Dining Commons cuisine.

Z.N.: "Doctor, what are the possibilities of certain upper level University bureaucrats being possessed by the devil?"

Dr. von Belchbreakfast: "If you mean Joel Stoneham, that's highly likely. In the few weeks prior to his sudden "departure", there were certain signs of a possession taking hold of his body."

Z.N.: "What do you mean?"

Dr. von B.: "Well a source close to me, whose accuracy I cannot verify revealed that a large puddle was found in his office late last semester. Of course it was used, my source reputes, as halibut sauce that night, the workers not knowing exactly what it was and not wanting to waste anything."

Z.N.: "OOHHH!!!! "I groaned painfully," "I ate halibut that night! OHH!!"

Dr. von B.: "And that's not all. A week later Franklin Dining Commons started shaking and trembling early one lunchtime, and wrecked the Bontrae Ham Souffles they had concocted. Most of the students and workers didn't notice it figuring it was just another D.C. meal churning thru their tortured stomachs."

Z.N.: "People must have started wondering. What happened then?"

Dr. von B.: "Well after several reports of someone stabbing themselves with Dining Commons utensils, Whitmore decided to tackle the problem by the horns and called in an Exorcist, figuring that the situation with the food had gone straight to the devil. The Exorcist was a mild mannered type named Tom Champion who reluctantly accepted Stoneham's exorcism.

Z.N.: "Was he successful?"

Dr. von B.: "Well after many weeks of prayers, incantations, rain dances and assorted other rituals involving deviled eggs and angel food cake, he failed. I last saw Stoneham spiriting away in a Dodge Demon beneath the light of a full moon munching on a shrimp shape. Poor Champion, the shock is said to have killed him."

Z.N.: "That's too bad about Stoneham. He was a hell of a nice guy!"

OH! THE PAIN OF IT ALL!!

Bay state leap frog

One of the problems with politics in this state is that no one wants to stay in their present office. Mayor White is expected to make a bid for the Senate in 1976 or for Vice-President; Representative Harrington might run for the Senate in 1976 also. State Senator John Quinlan of Norwood is running for Secretary of State this year to keep his chances for the governor's chair alive in 1978.

We have seen what can happen when our elected officials desert us for higher offices. In 1969 Governor Volpe and Attorney General Richardson left Massachusetts to serve in the Nixon Administration with different degrees of success. This put Francis Sargent in the governor's office with only two years of experience in elected office. We were luckier in the Attorney General's Office; Robert Quinn a man with experience in the state House of Representatives was chosen to serve. In 1967 Kevin White left the Secretary of State's job to become Mayor of Boston; three years later he tried to leave Boston's highest office to become governor.

For Massachusetts this has resulted in inexperienced men in office. In the base of the lower offices (Sec. of State, State Treasurer, and Auditor) appointment means a lifetime job. When someone becomes a State Auditor he stays one for life. One Auditor remained in office for twenty years; he left only because it wasn't feasible to serve after he was dead.

To keep our ambitious politicians in their offices we might reduce the number of elected positions. The lower state offices mentioned before do not require public approval for the occupant. Most people do not know who the Secretary of State is what he does or even care who he is. If they were appointed by the governor with the approval of the State Senate we could be assured of high quality officials. Further we would know that they werent running for Auditor so they could run for Senate three years later.

New bosses usually force employees to work harder to prove their worth. A lack of change means that workers will often become sluggish. This is what has happened in state government; the employees are good people but they are not exposed to the great amount of new ideas they would find with new supervision.

Common sense for cores

By BOB ROSSMAN

Wouldn't it be great if everybody in this world, or at least this campus knew the square root of 564739? Probably the only good it would do would be to gain the reputation for UMass as the place dispensing the most worthless information. Nothing personal to you math majors who might find this tidbit of information essential to your existance. It was just an example. It could just as easily been what an oxymoron is or how many ounces in a kilogram or even how to say, "where is the library" in German. The point is that most people not in the fields of knowledge that study any of the above type of terminology don't care at all what the answers are. But unfortunately some person who would rather spend his time concentrating on getting through all he has to learn for a speech major, also has to bust his behind trying to remember the square root of 564739, and other such mathematical trivia. In order to get through school, this person has to waste his time on things he doesn't want to learn and will probably never retain. It really seems like a waste. All this because of an institution called Core Requirements.

There are always the obvious answers for why the system of core requirements as we now know it still exists. If, for example, the core requirements were done away with, students would be too limited in their knowledge to be able to exist in society. The old line is that nobody will hire you if you know nothing else but mathematics. After all how would you communicate with people? The other argument for core requirements is that in filling his 120 credits student will be able to examine several different majors for the one he would like to earn his degree in. And then there's always the question of these 120 credits.

Somehow, I like to believe in the intelligence of the average UMie. If you've got enough smarts to be a college student, you've also got enough smarts to know what's going on around here, and probably even the world. 120 credits are a lot to fill, and there aren't many majors that would require even the most avid student to take nearly that many. So you've got a lot of credits to fill. The next step is to look around for some course that look somewhat interesting. If there's one thing that this University has a lot of, that's interesting courses, and there are four other colleges around here to draw from. So, finding courses is no problem. It doesn't seem like that big a difference if you only take on science course instead of three. But if you like that one course, it means more than the three courses you had to take and didn't like. If you know you need all those credits, and you know you should take some varied courses to round out your education, then most people will know enough to take enough courses that will interest them and be useful to their future.

The system of core requirements may have been useful once upon a time, but it isn't worth that much nowadays. The only thing that will work is a system of common sense. That, I like to believe, is what would work best with the UMass student community.

Domenicana

Today is the commemoration of the Independence of the Dominican Republic. We reprint this poem in honor of the day.

By CESAR A. CHAULETTE

Those eyes looking straight at me
I can't forget them.
A soundless voice begging for help
A bloody hand trying to reach me,
It kept dripping blood.
Like falling stars those eyes went off.
I ran.
How many were there. Who knows?
It kept dripping blood.
I wipe it off my eyes
and I saw...
All races...all ages dying....dead.
People.
Who's doing all this? Why?
It kept dripping...blood
that day.
So anemic...flashless...lifeless.
Even his death was anemic...no blood came out of his mouth.
Blood...Fire...Death
Even the sky felt passion and shed tears.
It rained for three nights.
It rained for three nights, there were no days.
Rain and blood mixed with the black soil.
Channels of blood all over the earth.
It kept dripping blood.
I didn't know where to run to, tired...weak.
I fell
Raising my head up I saw pointing at me his gun.
He did it all
I saw stars...then stripes.
Then his hand holding the flag.
It's still dripping blood.

An 'impeachable offense' — one view

What is an impeachable offense under the Consitution? Last Friday the counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, John Doar, said a non-criminal act could under certain conditions fit the "high crimes and misdemeanors" the Consitution defines as impeachable. The next day the Justice Dept. said just the opposite. Monday night President Nixon told a national TV the Constitution is "very specific" on the point and defined an impeachable act as an esentially criminal one.

What do scholars think? Today The Collegian reprints experts of a speech former Special Watergate Prosecutor and Harvard Law Professor Archibald Cox gave as part of Amherst College's Copeland Colloquim on January 22, 1974:

If President Nixon should be impeached and convicted, the question of legitimacy will be paramount. If President Nixon is acquitted, the country will still need assurance about the integrity of that conclusion. Whatever the event, we may fairly ask that the leadership build better for the future than their predecessors at the impeachment of Andrew Johnson.

The central challenge is to formulate the principles - the general standards of conduct - by which a President is to be judged in a proceeding that vacates, without direct expression of the popular will, a choice made by the people - in this case overwhelmingly made by the people - in the regular election only a few years before.

For Democratic Senators and Representatives to keep silent upon the ground that impeachment is a Republican problem and for Republicans to keep silent while they test the political winds is to deny the country the debate necessary to educated self-government and the development of governmental institutions.

A priori we might give any one of three polar meanings to the "high crimes and misdemeanours" for which a President, a judge or any other civil officer may be impeached.

(1) William Giles, President Jefferson's majority leader in the Senate, advised his colleagues during the proceedings against Supreme Court Justice Samuel Chase that - > impeachment is nothing more than an enquiry, by the two Houses of Congress, whether the office of any public man might not be better filled by another.

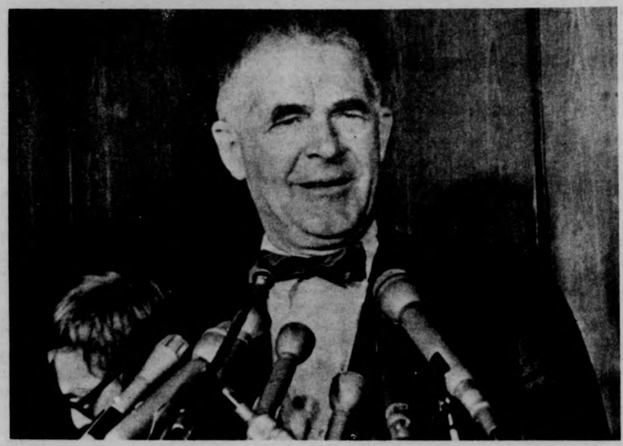
Justice Chase was acquitted. The view of impeachment expressed by Giles never again had serious support (unless one counts as "serious" the speech of Congressman Gerald Ford a few years ago advocating the impeachment of Justice Douglas).

(2) The strictest view of the constitutional phrase "high crimes and misdemeanours" holds that impeachable offenses are confined to violations of the criminal law and to "high," i.e. very serious crimes, whether felonies or misdemeanours. This reading has better standing than the first, but the weight of the argument is against it.

The recorded debates at the Philadelphia Convention and the subsequent expositions of the Framers make it pretty clear that impeachment was intended to be a vehicle for dealing with officials whose wrongs require removal from office even though not technically criminal. Refusal to perform the functions of an office while clinging to the status and perquisites seems a good illustration.



(3) We are left with a third view; i.e., that "high crimes and misdemeanours" covers some but surely not all "political," in the sense of governmental, offenses.

Reaching this conclusion moves us along, but it is only the beginning of the challenge. What are the wrongs against the people, the body politic, for which a President may properly be impeached?

It would be easier if history provided a list of legitimate grounds for impeachment, but the only precedents are scattered pretty far afield from current issues. Working with a clean slate, perhaps we can best begin by asking what deep-seated needs any rule we formulate must satisfy.

The Gallup Poll and like measures of public opinion report that a very large majority believe that President Nixon is guilty of covering up wrongdoing, but of those expressing an opinion, a majority oppose removal by impeachment. The difference, in my opinion, is attributable to a fear of impeachment not unlike the fear of regicide and the horror of the regicide once accomplished during the time of Cromwell and King Charles I.

Of course, impeachment cannot be wholly illegitimate - the Constitution provides for it - but I think that the country has a deep, unarticulated intuitive understanding that impeachment is extraordinary, radical surgery, legitimate only upon some equally fundamental wrong-doing, doing such grave injury to the Nation as to make any incumbent's further continuance in office unacceptable even though his previous entitlement was based upon popular election.

Any general standard of political conduct the violation of which would support impeachment must have abroad and generally accepted moral base, understood by the country, so that again the same rule would apply to any President, so that we should not be resolving questions of public policy by impeachment nor should we be making up new rules of conduct as we go along.

Of course, it is unnecessary to draw up a complete code of Presidential conduct. Mixing pragmatism with principle is one source of much of the creativity in Anglo-American law and government. We work electically up to a point, passing judgment upon particular sets of facts, but we also test our judgment by asking whether it rests upon reasons that we can articulate and apply to other situations having the same essential elements, with enough generality both in scope and continuity, to give guarantees against prejudice, caprice, self-interest or unreasoned emotion. So here, the articulation of minimum acceptable standards of conduct for any President or high executive officer can begin with facts proved or assumed.

It is fair to say that evidence may be available to show that President Nixon's lawyers and accountants, without deliberate misrepresentation, zealously sought every loophole and cut every corner in an effort to avoid or minimize the payment of taxes; to show that others acting on his behalf likewise stretched every possible point to add to the convenience and comfort of Key Biscayne and San Clemente at public expense; and, finally, to show that in some cases they claimed more than the law allows.

Bad taste? Surely. Avaricious? Yes. Bad leadership? Again, surely. Morally shabby? I think so even though the same shabbiness infects thousands of tax returns and expense accounts. Grounds for impeachment? I wonder. Are we hardly prepared to say that any officer of the United States who, without concealing or misrepresenting material facts, claims a tax deduction not due should be removed from office? If not, does my phrasing omit some essential element in President Nixon's situation? What would make the omitted element decisive?

The President's duty is to see that the laws are faithfully executed. Is it an impeachable violation of this responsibility for him to refrain for months from any form of personal intervention when there is first suspicion and later at least some evidence that his highest personal aides and party officials are obstructing justice by covering up criminal misconduct, for him to withold disclosure and refuse evidence when investigation leads to papers taken into his files, and for his aides, apparently with his approval, to cooperate with those seeking to avoid indictment and conviction?

I do not imply answers to these questions, nor do I suggest that my factual predicates represent the actual facts. The evidence may show more or less. The point I wish to emphasize is that it is past time for all those deeply concerned with our government to bend some of their time and effort away from the fun of factual disclosures to the very arduous task of formulating and thus creating a substantive law of impeachment where now there is none.

Whether the present proceedings help to rebuild confidence in our system of government or push us further down the slope to cynicism and despair will depend upon the ability of the House Judiciary Committee to sense the as-yet-unstated moral intuition of the country and articulate it in operative principles by which President Nixon's conduct can be judged.

Friday UMass professor of Constitutional History Milton Cantor, a consultant to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, will suggest another view of impeachment.

Bud Drinkers, can you figure this out?

Ralph bought a 6-pak of Budweiser and invited four friends over to share it. Since he bought, he expected to have two cans to himself, but unfortunately when he returned to the refrigerator for his second, he found it missing. So he asked who took it. Al said, "Joe drank it." Joe said, "Dan drank it." Dan said, "Joe, that's a lie!" And Bill said, "I didn't drink it." If only one of these statements is true, who really drank it?

ANSWER: If you assume Al is the guilty one, Dan's and Bill's statements are true. If you think it's Joe, then Al's and Dan's statements are true. And if you think Dan did it, then Joe's and Bill's statements are true. Obviously Bill is the Bud snatcher, since then only Dan's statement would be true. Moral: If Ralph had bought five 6-paks, they could have spent more time drinking and less time arguing.

Mass PIRG reports

Education, research mainstays of Amherst group

By STEVE DeLANCEY
Mass PIRG Intern

-Last week: Mass PIRG reports explained how the idea of student Public Interest Research Groups came about, how one got started in Amherst, and why the two in Massachusetts recently combined to form a single state-wide corporation.

SLUG

Mass PIRG's basic function is to research areas of consumer protection, the environment, and public health, and then to act as a citizens' spokesman and lobbyist. In a number of ways it also directly serves the students that support it.

The PIRG acts as an educational institution, aiding students who are doing practical research on their own or in conjunction with the organization. Its staff is available for consultation and guidance and its files are full of information and current newsclippings on consumer topics.

During the first year of Mass PIRG's existence (August 1972-'73) some 150 students used its facilities while conducting research into areas such as prescription drug pricing, flammable clothing, and unsafe toys. A number of the students were able to further support consumer legislation through lobbying efforts.

Mass PIRG also serves as an outlet for the research done by faculty and provides an alternative organization for professionals who want to do full-time public interest research rather than be funneled into the straight job-market.

A certain amount of dedication is needed, however, since the staff members' pay is considerably less than they could receive doing similiar work in other organizations.

The Amherst staff attorney, for example, receives $8,000 for his work with the PIRG-- from 20 to 100 per cent below the yearly salaries of legal services attorneys in the OEO (Office of Economic Opportunity) program in western Massachusetts.

Mass PIRG's current full-time staff consists of eight people -- two attorneys, an environmental scientist, a press coordinator, a health-research director, a student organizer, and two office managers. In addition to their basic jobs of directing and coordinating the projects of others, staff members are involved in doing research into areas of their own interest, ranging from women's rights to utility reform to nuclear power plants.

The PIRG offers a rather unique learning experience for students interested in discovering how an organization of its size is actually run. All the headaches, hassles, and occasional pleasures of running a corporation with an estimated budget of $112,000 are felt by the members of the Regional Board of Directors. The students that make up this board are democratically chosen from the members of the local chapters of Mass PIRG at each supporting school. The hiring of staff, distribution of funds (expenditures), and project decisions are overseen by the Regional Board which meets twice a month.

Every funding school is allowed at least one member on this board. For each additional block of 4,000 enrolled students above the first 4,000, the school is allowed another member. The University of Massachusetts, with an enrollment of over 20,000, thereby has five students on the Regional Board. Boston State has 3, B.U. Law School 1, Clark 1, Hampshire 1, Holy Cross 1, Mt. Holyoke 1, Springfield 1, U-Mass Boston 3, Westfield State 2, and Williams 1.

The local chapters of Mass PIRG have offices on each of the campuses and handle issues that are of particular concern to that college community. They also attempt to keep students informed of the activities of the regional board and the staff, maintains communication with student representatives and campus officials, recruits student volunteers, and act as a referral service for students and faculty interested in doing research.

The local chapter holds board meetings which are much less structured than those of the Regional Board. Anyone who's interested in the PIRG's activities is welcome to attend its meetings and get involved. The local chapter of Mass PIRG has an office in Room 413-A on the second floor of the Student Union (telephone 545-0712).

Mass PIRG attempts to keep the students and public aware of what it is doing through a quarterly newsletter distributed to funding colleges and mailed to legislators and interested groups and individuals. The Spring copy of "Mass PIRG Reports" came out last week and a number of copies are still available in the Student Union Lobby (or at the Amherst office).

An internal newsletter keeps a direct line of communication between the staff and the local chapters. The newsletter, accompanied by a list of potential student projects, gives the staff a chance to communicate their needs for student volunteers to the student body through the local chapter. Nearly fifty different topics for research were suggested by the staff in the February newsletter.

If you're interested in learning more about Mass PIRG's structure and-or activities either the UMass or the Amherst office downtown has additional information.

-Next week: more on Mass PIRG's current and future activies.

PIRG pushes drug info

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) yesterday supported a proposed measure to give consumers more information on prescription drug prices.

In testimony before the joint Committee on Social Welfare, Mass PIRG Executive Director Ronald E. Bogard urged passage of a bill to require posting of prescription drug prices in all Massachusetts pharmacies.

Bogard said the measure would "remove the secrecy that has, for too long, shrouded the retail drug field. It will provide the consumer with information on prescription drug prices, enabling him to compare prices and services and to choose the pharmacy best suited to his needs."

The proposed legislation, House bill no. 1855, would require pharmacists to post prices of the 100-most-commonly prescribed drugs and to give price information on request for other drug items.

Bogard outlined results of a comparative drug price survey conducted last November which, he said, showed a wide-spread range of prices at about ninety Massachusetts pharmacies. The PIRG survey disclosed prices ranging from $1.20 to $8.00 for 20 capsules of a common antibiotic. Survey volunteers also found that 27 per cent of the pharmacists questioned discouraged comparative shopping by refusing to quote prices prior to sale and that nearly half refused to give price information over the phone.

Bogard also urged passage of House Bill No. 126. That measure, sponsored by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, provides for reform of the state's first-in-the-nation generic drug law, enacted in 1970.

Lake sludge suit near end

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Vermont Atty. Gen. Kimberly B. Cheney said yesterday that his office may be nearing a settlement in its U.S. Supreme Court case against New York State and the International Paper Co.

Cheney said that about 90 per cent of the issues had been resolved in the case, which centered around alleged pollution of Lake Champlain.

He said that formal hearings in the case might not have to resume, but warned that the remaining issues were the most difficult to settle.

The case started about two years ago when Vermont went to the Supreme Court to force the paper company and New York State to remove a 300 acre sludge bed from Lake Champlain.

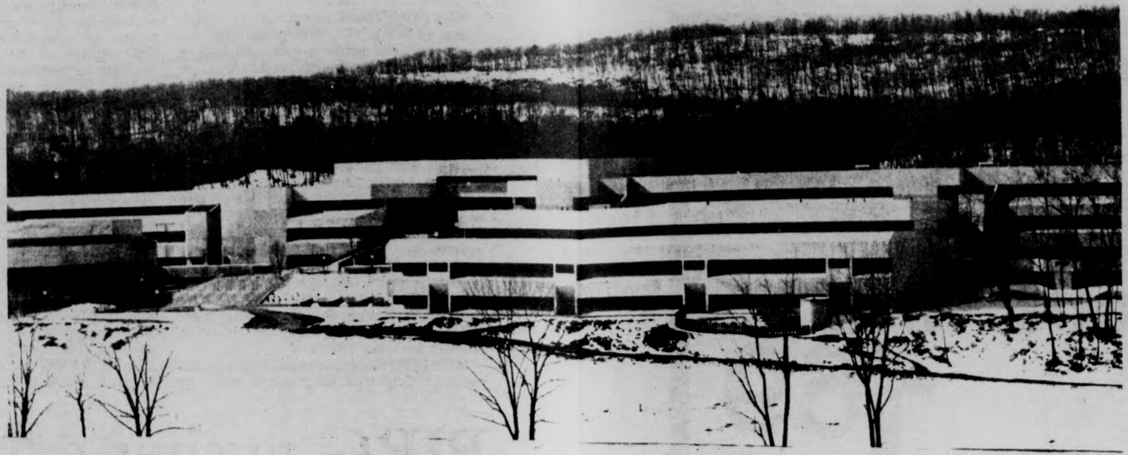
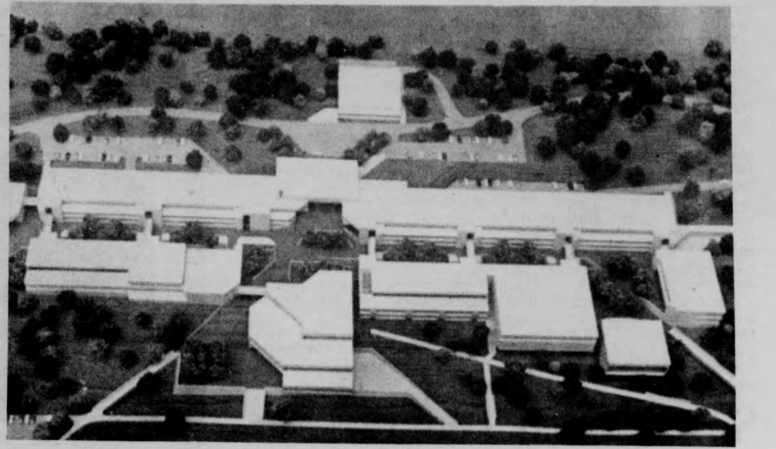
Holyoke Community College — a campus is born

WE MOVED . . .

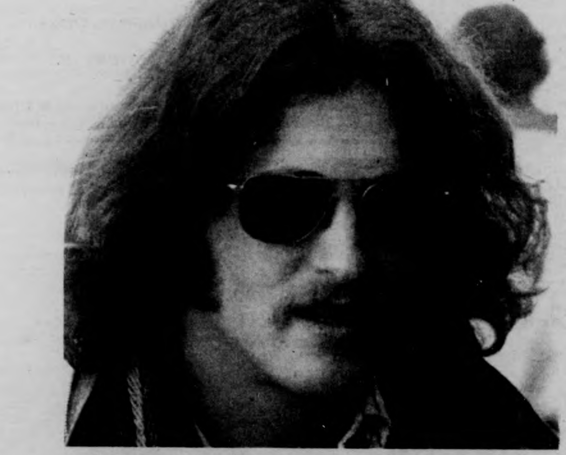




Overview of architect's model.

MDC staff photos

by Paul V. Benoit



H.C.C. Soph. Robert LaPalme. "They ought to call it UMass Community College. You'd swear you were up in Amherst!"

A dream come true

Tuesday, February 19, marked the first day of classes at the new multi-million dollar campus of Holyoke Community College. This ultra-modern megastructure, located off Homestead Ave. (Route 202), is the result of nearly five years of planning, ever since fire destroyed the College's old building in 1968.

The buildings were designed by the firm of Daniel, Mann, Johnson, and Mendenhall of Los Angeles and the builder was Daniel O'Connell & Sons Inc. of Holyoke.

The Physical layout was designed to take advantage of the natural surroundings. The buildings are constructed on the slope of a ridge overlooking a sprawling 135-acre site, which the College intends to keep in its present "wild" state for use as a nature and ecology study area.

The layout is straightforward, but aesthetic appeal has not been overlooked. The buildings which are rectangles, are separated by a mall complete with flowering crabapple trees. Corridors located on the mall side of all buildings give access to classrooms, laboratories and offices. A huge multi-tiered plaza between building complexes is spanned by the reading and stack floors of the library.

H.C.C. was founded in 1946 (it was originally known as Holyoke Junior College) and was incorporated into the state community college system in 1964. Today it is a far cry from the days when only five degree programs were offered, and the enrollment was less than 100 students taught by 12 part time instructors. Presently H.C.C. offers nearly 30 degree programs taught by a full-time faculty of 138, and has an enrollment of approximately 2000 students.

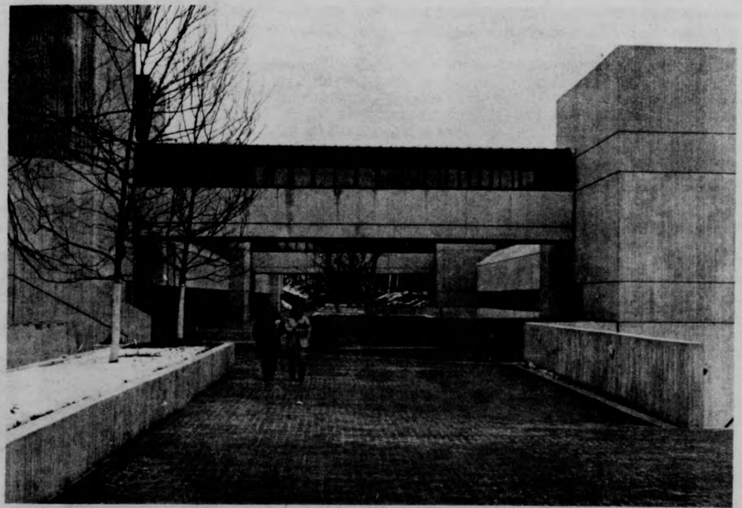
Students enrolled at H.C.C. come from some forty-five high schools, small and large, within a radius of twenty-five miles of Holyoke. The major function of Holyoke Community College is the implementation and organization of strong transfer curricula, of opportunities for continuing education to meet the needs of the individuals in the community, for cultural development, for increased vocational competence, and the provision of community services either by itself or in cooperation with other community agencies. All this, Holyoke Community College does to the limit of its resources.

UMass has a special interest in H.C.C., in that, of all the transfer students that matriculate to UMass, a sizeable number come from Holyoke Community. Exact figures were unavailable, but the UMass Transfer Affairs Office estimated that last year nearly 200 H.C.C. students were admitted to the university.

H.C.C. Soph. Paula Kirkpatrick. "The transition to UMass will be a lot easier now."

Straightforward, but authentically pleasing.

The smiles returning to their faces.



The mall area offers an excellent opportunity to enjoy a brief moment of solitude between classes.

New bus shelters protect students

By CINDY ROGERS

UMass students should be a little warmer as six bus shelters are nearing completion.

They are located at lots 11, 12 and 13, the campus center way, the fine arts center and the Sunset Ave. bus stops where there were not any other available buildings in which to wait.

The shelters, basically constructed out of wood, concrete, steel plating and plexiglass windows, are advantageous because of their proximity to the ground. This makes them warmer, but cleaning of the ground will be the responsibility of the Transit Service and the physical plant instead of the wind.

The design, according to the Student Senate Transit Service, is based on copies of plans of the Burlington Vt. Chamber of Commerce bus shelters. The cost for each shelter is estimated to be around $1100, not including labor.

The idea of constructing the shelters came about as part of the research and demonstration grant which alloted money for buses and shelters. The money alloted last year, however, budgeted for added bus costs and construction of shelters, was delayed until additional money was received.

The bus shelters are not yet in full operation. Bus signs, schedules and outside bicycle racks are still to be included in the construction.

Space will also be alloted inside for free public notices. There is no anticipation of paid commercial advertising. The Student Senate Transit Service asks that students not put any notices on the glass since removal of these notices may result in scratching it.

Most students seem to be aware of the purpose of little buildings and may are already taking full advantage of them.

Southwest searching for new director

BY STEVE TETREAULT

Applications are now being received in Southwest from people wishing the position of Southwest Director next year. The "committee to find a new director" has received three applications so far from persons responding to advertisements placed in various newspapers and education journals.

Vaughn Jeffries, Southwest Director of Student Affairs and chairman of the committee, stated in the advertisement that "Candidates must have demonstrated concern for undergraduate students; demonstrated administrative ability and experience in institutions of higher learning; must have knowledge of management and budget systems; have experience in program development; and must have demonstrated ability to bring together students, staff, and faculty in cooperative manner."

Deadline for the filing of application has been set at March 15.

As a result of discussions and interviews held with various University students faculty members and administrators, the Search Committee has been able to draw up a job description for the position of Area Director. But Jeffries noted that "a person in a job like this must be very flexible. He has contacts all over the University and must be able to adapt to many things."

Jeffries added that he expects about 200 applications. Most of these will be checked out first by phone, with not more than one or two dozen outstanding candidates appearing before the Search Committee.

The Committee is currently studying the job description and history of the director position. The current Director, John Hunt, has announced that he will leave the job at the end of the semester.

Hampden serves as center

By STEVE TETREAULT
MDC Staff

Hampden Commons is being utilized much more often this semester, and is becoming a true student center for the residents of Southwest.

Bob Antil, Southwest Social Activity coordinator, remarked that it has been a tradition for dorms and organizations to be more active over the second half of the semester. He attributed this to two things.

"One is that organizations tend to be a little conservative in the first semester, sometimes a little tight with their money. They realize over intercession that they can afford a little fun, and they have it in the second semester," he said.

"The other reason is just the opposite. Several dorms have held functions so far in order that they, hopefully, can make money to take care of deficits," said Antil.

So far this semester, Hampden has been the scene of several house-sponsored parties, regular Southwest Assembly meetings, a visit by a hypnotist, Bob Joyce, the Southwest Resource Center, a local Munchies, and a cafeteria. In coming weeks, more events will be held there.

Antil also hopes to continue work on a Hampden Arts and Crafts Center. The establishment of a drinking-dancing operation would take big steps into making Hampden a complete student center. Presently the Campus Center and the Southwest Assembly are stalled in negotiations for such a facility.

Community school requests student help

The Valley Cooperative School is an alternative community school of 23 children (ages 3-12), their parents, 2 full-time continuity people and concerned volunteers. The school was created and planned by parents, who are responsible for basic decision-making and for working on a regular basis within the school. With many different adults as well as children involved in the community, a great diversity of models, challenges and support is expected. It is believed that real learning occurs through a sense of connection to experience, and that our diversity expands the possibilities for meaningful contacts.

The aim is toward diversity, away from stereotyping. Some concerns involve shaping the movement of the school. The categorizing of human beings, whether by sex, race, financial status, skills achievement or physique opposes basic beliefs about learning. A community of adults and children must meet on terms of their inherent equality and dignity as human beings. By liking each other, and together liking life, the bond which is the base for real learning is created. Given this bond; music, math reading and sciences, as well as feelings, thoughts, fantasies and experiences become exciting instruments through which people explore and learn to know life. The goals lean toward liking each other and learning together.

Of course, realities are not as idyllis as philosophy. Besides the enormous amount of effort which actualizing beliefs entails, there are many other needs, namely: more children (especially girls age 7-12, and boys age 10-12); equipment (anything and a good outdoor jungle gym); larger space (the school is now in 2 rooms in the basement of St. John's Episcopal Church); volunteers willing to come in for a regular period once a week; and last but never least, money. People are giving what they can monthly, and can barely cover rent, one paid person, and supplies. Interested students should call 586-2806, 584-4432 or 584-3711.

The group, Creative Consciousness, consists of twelve parolee inmates. These men will perform on instruments and read selections of poetry.

"Endgame" Sunday

Thursday and Friday, the MANHATTAN PROJECT will present Beckett's "Endgame" in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall at 8 p.m.

Under the direction of Andre Gregory, considered one of the most interesting and innovative directors of our time, the Manhattan Project's "Endgame" has been eliciting extraordinary reviews.

Tickets for these performances are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass students, others $3.00. Special group rates may be arranged by calling the Fine Arts Council Box Office.

Planning workshop

Representatives from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities will hold an informal panel discussion as part of a Community Arts Planning Workshop beginning at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Campus Center, room 101.

The Workshop is presented by the Arts Extension Service of the UMass Division of Continuing Education and is open to the public free of charge.

Present on the panel will be Louise Tate, executive director of the Council, Diane Perkins, program director of the Artists in the Schools Program, Jane Doerfer, program director of State-Local Partnerships, Susan Channing, coordinator of Creative Artists' Services, and Linda Lieberman, deputy director of the Council.

The Workshop will also include an informal talk by Louis Jansen, Community Arts Development director of the Arts Extension Service, on Arts Festival Programs.

Moliere lectures

Two consecutive lectures on Moliere will be given Thursday, at 8 p.m. in Rooms 911-915 of the Campus Center.

The lecturers will be Prof. Edith Kern of Smith College and Prof. Alex Szogyi of Hunter College. Prof. Kern will lecture in England on "Moliere and the Tradition of the Grotesque." Prof. Szogyi will lecture in French on "Moliere abstrait."

Cox rebroadcast

Archibald Cox came to Amherst on January 21, 1974 and spoke at Amherst College's Cage. Much and most of his speech was drenched in Watergate as was expected. A capacity crowd turned out to see the ex-special Watergate prosecutor, former and once again professor at Harvard University speak on an issue that clouds America ever so much today.

WMUA, 91.1 fm stereo in Amherst was there to record the speech and will rebroadcast it Thursday.

"Telepolitics"

Telepolitics, a WUMV production, presents the first in a series of video-taped press conferences with the candidates for November's gubernatorial election.

Attorney General Robert Quinn is the guest for today's show with Mark Vogler as the moderator and Collegian reporter Mary Vorderer and WMUA news director Gerry Brooks on the panel.

Air time for the half-hour show is 10:15-2:00 at the Video sidewalk of the Campus Center Concourse level. The WUMV production staff includes Chris Sophinos, Joseph Vera and Gary Burnham.

Wind ensemble

The Netherlands Wind Ensemble, making its first tour of the United States, will appear in concert in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst Thursday evening, March 7, at 8 p.m. as the fourth offering of the Fine Arts Council's Chamber Music Series.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall (Tel. 545-0202) and are priced at $2 for UMass-Amherst students; $4 for others. Special group rates may be arranged.

Climber presents slide show

On May 12, 1973 an American expedition succeeded in placing three of its members on the summit of Dhaulagiri, the sixth highest mountain in the world (26,795'). Tom Lyman, a UMass graduate, was a member of that expedition. He will give a slide show Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Lyman, who is also a former President of the UMass Outing Club, has climbed extensively in Canada, Mexico and the U.S. He founded the Eastern Mountain Sports climbing school is presently Dean of Men and Director of Outdoor Program at the White Mountain School.

Dhaulagiri is generally considered to be one of the most difficult of the high Himalayan peaks. Its summit is so well protected by steep ice walls, avalanching snowfields, and razor sharp ridges that the first seven expeditions failed before it was finally climbed by the Swiss in 1960.

Lyman's group, only the third expedition to reach the summit, was the second attempt by an American Expedition to climb Dhaulagiri. The first attempt in 1969 was tragically terminated when a glacial ice fall killed five American climbers on the approach to the southeast ridge. The 1973 expedition numbered seventeen climbers including all the survivors of the 1969 expedition.

A donation of $1.00 will be taken at the door.

Striking teachers want federal mediator

PLAISTOW, (N.H.)- Striking teachers in the Timeberlane Regional School District have asked for a federal mediator to enter their dispute with the school board.

The school board was to meet Tuesday night to discuss the demands of the teachers.

About 120 of the district's 150 school teachers walked off their jobs Tuesday after the school board refused to meet with the teachers to negotiate the final phases of a proposed contract.

Schools remained open in the districe except for the high school, which was closed down Tuesday when a problem developed with the school's heating pipes.

Substitute teachers and supervisors assisted teachers in keeping the schools open in the district that contains 2,500 pupils.

The contract dispute centers over the school board's refusal to negotiate mediation and arbitration for teachers, according to Donald Chase of the New Hampshire Education Association.

for people who walk on this earth...

If you've walked barefoot on sand or soil you know how great it is. Your heels sink low and your feet embrace the earth. Then you put on your shoes, return to the city, and become another concrete fighter . . . but the concrete always wins. You yearn for the earth that lies buried beneath the city.

The Earth Shoe is the first shoe in history with the heel lower than the sole... this helps return you to nature though you are forced to live in a cement-coated world. The Earth Shoe's patented design gently guides you to a more erect and graceful walk, and reduces fatigue and the aches and pains caused by our hard-surfaced city.

For men and women in shoes, sandals and sabots.

Weisner, Galbraith deny tax deduction charges

BOSTON (AP)-Two men have denied President Nixon's charges that they took the same kind of tax deduction he did for personal papers contributed to the government or public agencies.

One of them, Massachusetts Institute of Technology President Jerome B. Weisner, said he never took any tax deducation for donating papers to the National Archives.

The White House subsequently acknowledged that Wiesner did not claim such a tax deduction and said President Nixon regrets saying he did.

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said Nixon's inclusion of Wiesner in a brief listing of individuals who had claimed such tax deductions was based on news accounts citing Wiesner as one who had given his papers to the government.

The other, Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith, said he took a tax deduction for a donation of some private papers but left his public papers behind when he left government service.

Nixon, in his news conference Monday night, said Weisner, Galbraith, former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey and the late President Lyndon B. Johnson were among those "who made deductions such as I made in this particular case."

He was referring to a federal tax deduction of $576,000 taken by Nixon for the donation of his vice-presidential papers to the National Archives.

Gov't. to fight ban on GI drug program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Army commander in Europe told congressmen on Monday the government will appeal a court order against his surprise GI inspections and other steps against drug abuse.

Gen. Michael S. Davison said he was told U.S. Solicitor Gen. Robert H. Bork would seek an immediate stay of the court order pending the government appeal.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell ruled Jan. 14 on a class action suit filed on behalf of GIs in Europe that parts of Davison's "Drug Abuse Prevention Plan" were unconstitutional.

Testifying before a House armed services subcommittee, Davison called the court order an "impediment" to his drug control efforts in that he has ordered suspension of disciplinary action in drug cases uncovered by surprise inspections.

But Davison, a former commander in Vietnam, disagreed with Army Chief of Staff Creighton W. Abrams' reported statement that the drug problem in Europe is now as serious as it was in Vietnam.

Ehrlichman testimony by Nixon out

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Lawyers for President Nixon said yesterday that no state court can command the president of the United States to appear before its bench.

Such a move "would open the door to an unwarranted, unfetered, and an unconstitutional imposition" upon his office, the lawyers said.

The White House position was outlined in a brief filed in D.C. Superior Court. The court is considering whether the President must testify in a case now pending in Los Angeles against former White House adviser John D. Ehrlichman.

Nixon was subpoenaed last month by California Superior Court Judge Gordon Ringer as "a material and necessary witness." The suboena was forwarded to the District of Columbia court for service.

"In the 187 years since our Constitution was adopted no court, federal or state, has held that the president of the United States can be compelled to testify in person in compliance with a summons," said the White House brief filed by presidential lawyer and Boston native James D. St. Clair.

"The office of the president of the United States cannot be subjected to the command of any state court," he said.

Such as order, St. Clair contended, would pave the way for similar actions "by each of the courts in all of the 50 states. Therefore, we ask this court to reject this California state court's assertion of sovereignty over the president of the United States."

Ehrlichman's lawyers have until March 8 to file an answer. The President's lawyers can respond until March 13. A hearing on the matter is scheduled by Chief Judge Harold H. Greene on March 15.

The California judge had ordered Nixon to testify at a pre-trail hearing scheduled for Feb. 25. But the date was allowed to slide because the subpoena took eight days to get from Los Angeles to Washington and there was not enough time left for a hearing in the capital.

Ehrlichman is charged with conspiracy, burglary and perjury in connection with the Labor Day 1971 break-in at the office of Dr. Louis Fielding, Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist. Two others also are charged with burglary.

They contended the President's testimony is needed to support their claim that they were acting as federal agents on a national security mission.

The White house cited precedents going back to President Thomas Jefferson.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

Pisces can appear to be daydreaming but if you try to take advantage of appearances you could be in for a rude awakening. Pisces may seem to be far away but, in actuality, is aware, perceptive, prescient and capable of transforming dreams into viable plans. Pisces distills feelings into poetry, sound and motion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on process of selection. Refine and define--let others know what you need and expect. Be specific. Pay and collect. Deal with one who works behind the scenes. Be discreet. Cash could change hands in transaction of direct benefit to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take initiative. Let older individual know that you do have life of your own to live. Be independent, not arrogant. Be understanding, creative and see in light of reality. Study Aries message. Closed-door meeting may be on agenda.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are able now to open areas previously restricted. There is light as well as proverbial heat--Capricorn person could play significant role. Emphasize ability to separate fact from illusion. Excellent for special "media" appearance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent now is on friends and wishes. The two, however, may not go together. Key is to get rid of losing proposition. Hanging on to past would be an error. Know it and act like you know it. Romantic involvement may be on horizon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Set sights on goal. Accent ambitions. Clear away emotional debris. Maintain independent stance. Professional superior wants to know if you can handle additional responsibility. Present original, creative concepts. Response will be positive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with long-range plans, ability to communicate. Study distribution process. Clear away deadwood. Express yourself in direct manner. One who taught you in past could make reappearance.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What appears a difficult situation can actually be easily resolved. Key is versatility. Don't feel you must adhere to only one method. Test, experiment. Ask questions. Display intellectual curiosity. Funds that are restricted will soon be released.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis is on joint efforts, co-operation with mate, partner. Be thorough where legal affairs enter picture. Study proposed agreement, contract. Aquarius, Leo and another Scorpio could be involved. Wait, listen and observe. Defer direct action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be ready for possible change of scenery. Member of opposite sex could play paramount role. Basic work, specific issues are involved. Keep appointments concerned with health. Avoid extremes, especially in eating, drinking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent creativity, individual style, dealings with persons who have "young ideas." Purchase of luxury item could be on agenda. You are due for surprise--of pleasant variety. Don't fight progress. Go with tide and you succeed.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Stick to what is solid, familiar. Wandering too far afield might prove costly or embarrassing. Check values. Home, property, place of residence may be involved. Individual who is introspective decides to confide in you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Short journeys, visits, neighbors and relatives are emphasized, more so than usual. Get feet on ground. Find out what it is you really want to do. One with experience is willing to lend helping hand. Be receptive.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are direct, but sympathetic to needs of persons with problems. Many consult you and draw from you and seldom give much in return. You attract Aries and Libra persons. March and December could be your most significant months of 1974. You are a fighter when the cause is right; law and medicine hold strong appeals for you.

UMass 'lifters finish two, three, four in Boston Open

By ERIC WISEMAN

The cold weather outside didn't seem to affect the UMass olympic weightlifting team as they captured second, third, and fourth places in the Boston Open, on Saturday, Feb. 16th. Perenially a favorite, the Boston Open attracts the finest lifters not only from New England but the Northeast as well.

The biathon which determines placing, distributed by different body weight divisions, consists of the snatch (a movement starting from the floor to overhead in one motion) and the clean and jerk (the bar is brought to the chest in the first motion being completed by a second jerking of the bar overhead).

The middle-heavyweight division (198 lbs.) often, draws the largest crowd with this occasion being no exception. National champion Mark Cameron of York, Pa. had no trouble securing first as expected but the remaining eight lifters must still prove themselves. Among the remaining competitors were John Donnelly, Rudy Woloss, and Doug Cooney - all of UMass.

First to appear for UMass in the snatch was Rudy Woloss. Though this is his first year lifting, he proved himself a worthy competitor. Opening with 185 lbs. he handled it with ease - that of a revitalized champion. Next to appear was John Donnelly. Several weeks prior he dominated the Junior New England Championships. Would he have another fine performance? It took him two tries to "subdue" his opening attempt with 185 lbs. Rudy moved to 200 lbs and again easily overcame the apparatus. John attempted to keep pace with 200 lbs. on his last attempt but it all went for naught.

The bar was now increased to 250 lbs. Doug Cooney appeared with his trance-like walk to the bar, handling it as expected - very easily. Requesting 265 lbs. for his second attempt he again sent it overhead with a power-filled effort. Sensing his finest mement, 280 lbs. (a Mass State Record) was loaded on the bar. Approaching the bar with seeming confidence a miscalculation in technique resulted in a "no-life" - so close. The audience agreed that Doug will conquer this weight in the near future.

The final event, the clean and jerk, would determine the placing of the leaders. Rudy appeared first with 250 lbs. A good clean followed by a strong jerk characterized this lift. John chose 260 lbs. for a good lift. Rudy tactfully chose 265 lbs. to secure third place from his teammate. John now took 270 lbs. for another success. Finally Rudy chose 275 lbs. in an attempt to lengthen his lead and also to qualify for the Collegiate Nationals. Rudy approached the bar, coughed, (an epidemic of colds hitting the lifting team) and secured his grip. Such big weights for one so new to a difficult sport. Yet here he was among the best in the Northeast. Cleaning the weight in good form he failed the jerk portion. It was a critical moment. John had one attempt left. The leaders put 280 lbs. on the bar - a success would mean third. The will to excel must be evident to advance - and on this occasion the weights were obstinate.

The pressure shifted to Doug Cooney. A trip to the European championships last summer had a lasting influence on this athlete. The fall saw Doug win a New England Open doing some very impressive lifts. Opening with 315 lbs. in Boston proved to be no problem as he handled it with consumate ease. Having secured second place Doug attempted 335 lbs. but was unable to "subdue" the barbell on this occasion. The National Collegiates, to be held in several weeks, should bring the best out of Doug. Having placed fifth in the nation last year, Doug is indeed one of the brightest hopes for UMass.

As the Boston Open came to a close, "well done" could be heard from the spectator stands. Indeed the UMass delegation had proved themselves worthy competitors.

Intramural Basketball

The rule states that if two teams are tied at the end of regulation play (two fifteen minute halfs), they shall play a three minute overtime. If at the end of that overtime period the score is still tied, then the first team to go up by two points, wins. So, you think this is a fair rule; it depends on who you talk to - the Hamlin Skumks or the Wheeler Trojans.

The Skunks and the Trojans both were playing a fantastic game, with the lead switching back and forth. At the end of the first half, it was Wheeler-17 Hamlin-15.

But the Skunks fought back to tie it and send the game into overtime. And then into the sudden death overtime. And in overtime, anything can happen, and it did.

Wheeler won the jump at center court and broke fast for its basket. But the Skunks got back. And then it happened. A pass from the right to the top of the key..was intercepted by one of the Skunks, who then broke alone. Fast behind him, were two Trojans. In perfect unison, the two Trojan players leaped to block the potential winning shot. Only the shot didn't come, at least not until the two defenders had gone by. It was up, and good! Hamlin had won it 36-34.

Moving along into women's basketball, most of the games continue to be low scoring affairs, with a few exceptions.

Take the Brown Broads vs. the Johnson Jocks. Sound like two tough teams, right? Don't let them fool you! In a recent contest, the Broads slipped by the Jocks 9-2. Now you might think the Broads have some kind of defense, or the Jocks had an off night offensively. But if you really think about it, it could have been the other way around too.

In any case, watching the Broads (or rather, women) play intramural basketball, is a lot different from watching men. And at times, even more exciting.

You see, the girls are out to have a good time. Winning is second in their minds. Sure, some are out to kill, but most couldn't care less about being the Campus Champ. There isn't any pressure on them-they joke during the game, they fall down, miss easy layups, hit on twenty foot shots once in awhile, and even shoot at the other teams basket. They have this idea that intramurals are for fun.

Anyways, intramural basketball, (one of the top major sports participated in by students(season is almost over. Then come the playoffs for Campus Championship. But if your team just didn't make it, don't worry, you had a good time. And that's what intramurals are all about, right? Plus, there's softball season...-soccer...tennis...horseshoes...and more!

Bridgewater State ekes win over women hoopers, 56-52

By LINDA MACKLER

After holding the lead for two and a half periods, the UMass women's basketball team fell to Bridgewater State College 56-52 in WOPE gym last night.

UMass entered the second half ahead, 24-19. But with 4:38 on the clock in the third quarter, Bridgewater tied it up at 26-26. Neither team took a significant lead after this and with 56 seconds to go, Bridgewater went ahead 54-52 and stayed there.

Jackie Dunphy of Bridgewater was a major factor in this second half surge. After scoring only two points the entire first half, she came back to put in 4 in the third quarter and eight in the fourth.

The absence of Jenny Edminster also hurt UMass a great deal. Jenny has not suited up for two games now because of a possible stress fracture on her ankle. It is unknown when she will be able to return to the line-up.

With two seconds left in the game, forward Ann Foley fouled out. This, combined with Jenny's absence, put all the pressure on center Pat Glispin to score. Pat did come through with twenty points as high scorer and eight grabs as high rebounder but it just wasn't enough.

Coach Jane Farr can only look forward to the Regional Tournament for revenge. "We're two tournament teams," she said. "We've been placed in the same bracket and if we both win or if we both lose, we will face each other."

The junior varsity team took an even worse defeat. They fell to Bridgewater State 55-37 in a poorly played game.

The offensive team came up with a tie for high scorer. Kathie Dowd and Judi Tremblay both sunk six points. The team was not working together. Their passes were off and they were sloppy in running their plays. In the first quarter, they had four turnovers under the Bridgewater basket which all resulted in Bridgewater points.

In contrast, Bridgewater had an extremely well-disciplined team. Their record has now been brought up to 6-0. They had excellent ball control and a very effective press.

Coach Ellen Greaves of UMass said, "Bridgewater is an excellent team. They have a lot of height and a lot of speed which they put to good use. They are the best team we will face this year."

UMass will face Plymouth State College this Thursday in the WOPE Gym beginning at 4:00 p.m.

Harvard coach to retire

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — J. Bruce Munro will be relieved, at his own request, of the Harvard varsity soccer and lacrosse coaching duties he has held for 26 years, effective this fall.

Munro will remain at Harvard as head freshman coach of both sports, also at his own request, it was announced Tuesday.

Harvard Athletic Director Robert B. Watson said he had granted both Munro's requests.

Munro said the prime reasons for his decision were his age, he'll be 58 next week and increasing coaching pressures from the boom in inter-collegiate soccer and lacrosse.

"After 26 years, you start losing some of that desire and competitiveness," he said.

UConn, 77-69

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Jimmy Foster scored 18 points to lead a balanced attack that gave Connecticut a 77-69 victory in a seesaw basketball game Tuesday night.

The score was tied at half-time, 36-36, and the lead changed hands 17 times throughout the game.

Connecticut put some breathing space between itself and BC by running up a 12-4 streak in the first six minutes of the second half.

BC's Bob Carrington led all scorers with 25 points. Teammate Jere Nolan added 20.

Matmen blast Big Green

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

If green is the color of the Irish then come Saint Patricks' Day the fortunes of the Dartmouth College wrestling team are bound to change for the better.

Unfortunately that will be too late to help them this year. It was too late for the Big Green last night as UMass blasted them all the way back to Hanover with a 42-9 pasting.

It has been a bad year for the Big Green from every angle. They haven't been able to fill the first two weights, they had their defending New England Champ drop from the team this past week because of missed school work, and they are inexperienced at other weight classes.

UMass had twelve points before the wrestling began as Steve Ruggeri and Larry Reynolds picked up the forfeits at 118 and 126 pounds respectively. Russell Chateauneuf wrestled at 134 and was impressive from the word "Go" until the word "Pin" as he struck Dartmouth's 134 pounder at 2:39 in the bout.

Doug LeMire continued UMass' pinning way as he decked Bob Queeney at 4:26 to make the match score 24-0. Cliff Blom was constantly looking for the pin but had to settle for the big win as he decisioned Jim Keyes, 8-0. Blom was in control from the first takedown and pulled Keyes back on the mat three times in the last thirty seconds in an effort to pin him.

Steve Benson, wrestling his last match as a senior, ended Dartmouth's Dave Sweet's career early in the second period as he posted his fourteenth win and seventh pin of the season. Benson had it all over Sweet in every department so it was no surprise that it was a quick bout.

The 167 pound match was a David versus Goliath affair as Dartmouth's Kevin Young played Goliath and UMass' Steve Jabaut played David. Unfortunately Jabaut dropped a riding time decision to Young but wrestled a far superior bout. Jabaut has wrestled 150 a good deal of the season and is definitely sized for that weight class as he stands about five foot six. He was leading Young by virtue of an escape and takedown but lost a takedown and after a last second escape, the bout by riding time, 5-4.

Bob Spaulding wrestled one of his best bouts of the season at 177 as he beat Dartmouth's Jim Dawkins 12-6 in a see-saw bout that had Dawkins getting cranked to his back only to have the referee break the hold because it was illegal in his estimation. Dawkins picked up an escape immediately thereafter and almost came back but Spaulding prevailed.

The Big Green picked up a pin at 190 as their most talented wrestler, Charlie Estin, decked Robin Osborne fifty seconds into the second period. At heavyweight UMass picked up six more as Dennis Fenton caused Darryl Gibson to default at 4:41. Gibson was Dartmouth's surprise of the evening because he is defending NEUWA 167 pound runner-up. He bulked up to 198 and will wrestle heavyweight in the New Englands. He did nothing to improve his ailing shoulder that cost him the New Englands last year. He was ahead of Fenton for a while, took some injury time, fell behind, took some more injury time, and then defaulted as Fenton turned him on his back for the pin.

It was good to end the dual match season on such a convincingly winning note because the Minutemen will need all the confidence they can get for this weekend's New Englands at Dartmouth. The Minutemen looked like the weight drop could be the think that will put them in the ball park for the team title. PIN POINTS on the New England scene; both the small college and university division teams are prepping for their tournaments this weekend....-NEUWA at Dartmouth College and NEUWA Tourney qualify for the NCAA Championships at Iowa State March 14-16...The University of Michigan Wolverines continued as the number one team as they squeaked by the University of Iowa 21-16 by virtue of a disqualification at 190 for the Hawkeyes..The East won the East-West dual meet at Oklahoma State in the first part of February. The East won six out of ten bouts but had two NCAA Champs get upset at 142 and 167.

The complexity that isn't basketball player John Murphy

By MEG CAULMARE

Imagine six feet eight inches of city-cool assurance, wearing flashy clothes, speaking in slang, proud, strong, and not a little intimidating. Imagine the All-American Fraternity boy and athlete, the kind who knows he's good at what he does: the pampered basketball star.

Imagine John Murphy. By throwing all that rubbish out.

I found John in jeans and flannel shirt, barefoot, working on a paper. He invited me to sit down while he finished. He seemed shy but open, friendly, and totally unimpressed by my title of "reporter". His voice is amazingly deep, but very quiet. When he was done, a few moments later, he casually came over and settled himself in a huge stuffed chair, propped his feet on the bed, and faced me, waiting for the first question.

He smiled when he talked, glancing away occasionally, and showing only one nervous habit: he twists his hair through his fingers as he talks.

Boredom for a basketball players is answering the question "What can't you do because of your height?" Murph smiled and finished the subject with a concise "Buy clothes."

John was most willing to impress upon me that he's no different from any other student on campus, that he doesn't like being singled out, and thinks of himself as part of the college community; no better than anyone else. The only difference between John's basketball game and another student's studies is that basketball is a spectator sport, so "people come to watch".

And they certainly do. In the multiples of thousands. John Murphy has never been hit by the court version of stage fright. He says that in fact the team does better when there's a crowd. Some of the last few home games "were awful" to John because attendance ran down so that only parts of the bleachers were filled. He agrees that a crowd can only help. Though the Cage is a perfect setting for a real show, Murph's concentration is always and only with the game. He is not an entertainer, but a serious athlete.

Everyone assumes that college players would like to go on to the pros, but Murph came up with unconventional answers to the questions about his future. "I'd rather go to Europe where I'd be sure of playing. They're really big on basketball over there." Murph like the idea of being able to mix travel with his work.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian SPORTS

Basketball now is another question completely. John feels that Coach Leaman does an excellent job. He makes no effort to restrain his opinions about the players' actions; Murph sees it as Leaman's job to tell the team what's wrong, and his own place to work with that criticism in order to develop his game to the best it can be. He is his own harshest critic, and the worst moments on the court for him are the ones "when I do something stupid".

The only question Murph couldn't answer was the question of his real ability. "They say my talent is shooting," he said very quietly, but claims that he himself has no idea how much talent he has. He sees most of the game as a question of practicing to develop skills. A mental map of the court is also a great help, and Murph has memorized the floor so he knows how far he is from the basket at all times. "I should," he laughed. "I've spent most of my life there."

In high school John ran cross country, but admits "I came in last in every race." He had more time for books then, but now academics are secondary to games and daily workouts. Summers are hardly vacations, as he spends his time teaching basketball to kids ("Kids are great!")

For relaxation, and to get out of the house and away from books, Murph likes individual sports; tennis and golf being the two he mentioned most, along with an aside that he's a decent swimmer.

Now imagine John Murphy: he wants to be good at what he does.

Exclude The Violators

At their annual meeting held last January, the National Association of Football Coaches voted to disqualify any NCAA member under penalty for a violation from receiving votes for the top ten spots in the country.

The Basketball Coaches Association is considering taking similar action at their annual meeting to be held next month in Greensboro, N.C.

35 basketball coaches sit on a panel named by the UPI throughout the duration of the basketball season for the sole purpose of voting for the nation's top 20 teams each week. The same set-up is conducted for football during the fall season.

Perhaps a classic example of a situation where a team under penalty has made the top ranking in the nation took place this past season in football when the University of Oklahoma team was rated among the Top Ten all season long. During the entire season, however, the University was under penalty for a recruiting violation for the first of two years. Is it right that a team caught and punished for a blatant recruiting violation should be allowed for consideration in the Top Twenty or Ten regardless if it is basketball or football or any other sport? I think not.

For they have been punished. Let they who have committed the violation reap the full harvest of their crime. The Sooners finished second in the nation's poll last fall but will be seen nowhere next year because of the recent decision at the Football Coaches Conference held in San Francisco.

'Is it a good move?' you may ask. It is a move that will sufficiently embarass the schools who have continually violated the rules and heretofore gotten away with it.

Getting back to basketball...one team presently ranked among the top 20 and serving out a penalty is Long Beach State, ranked twelfth.

North Carolina State last year finished second in the country while serving out a recruiting violation.

This is all fine and dandy as far as the UPI polls are concerned as the coaches do the balloting there. But what about the AP poll? Would the writers who conduct that weekly poll feel obligated to follow suit? Members of the voting ranks are primarily members of either the Football Writers Association or the Basketball Writers Association and, although the organizations have made no official statements, it is my feeling that they will see the logical reasoning behind such a move and follow suit.

What does Jack Leaman have to say about the affair? "I think it is a logical move. Right now not everybody is playing with the same deck of cards. And what type of a game does that lead to?"

Not only are recruiting violations involved in a situation such as this. Eligibility problems also arise. Take the case in point of Jim Town.

Recruited by UMass as a senior in high school last year, the blue chipper was found not to meet with the eligibility standards needed to play. Here at UMass he is sitting out the year and awaiting next season. Had he attended some other basketball power, no names please, he probably would have had the matter sluffed under the rug and would be playing.

UMass is not a place that attempts to get away with things like that. Let's keep it that way.

Celtics over Pistons by 3

DETROIT (AP)-John Havlicek scored 36 points, 10 during the third period, to lead the Celtics to an 86-83 National Basketball Association victory Tuesday night over the Detroit Pistons.

Boston held off a final period Detroit rally which turned a 72-59 game after three quarters into a nip-and-tuck affair in the closing minutes.

Dave Bing sparked the Piston comeback, hitting 10 of his 22 points in the fourth period.

Bob Lanier was the only other Detroit player in double figures, scoring 16.

It was the fourth straight victory for Boston.

Looking for no. 20 UMass hits Fordham

By STEVE DECOSTA

What do they do for an encore?

The Minutemen travel to Fordham tomorrow for their first game since the Senior Night ambush of Maine.

They take with them a chance to notch 20th victory (19-4 record at present) and an almost sure berth in a post-season tournament.

There are several reasons why it would not be wise to expect another 70, or even 20, point margin.

—The Rams play their home games at Rose Hill on a court that has been likened to Curry Hicks, and we all know what the Cage can do to a visiting team.

—This will be Fordham's last home game, and, according to Jack Leaman, "it could be as emotional for them as Senior Night was for us."

—Though the Rams are young and inexperienced, they are quick, do not fold before the press, and use, in Leaman's words, "an especially effective press" of their own.

—They boast one of the top players in the East in 6'7 junior forward Daryl Brown, who Leaman calls "as good a player as we have played against this year.

Fordham is presently 8-14, but that can probably be attributed more to their schedule than to a lack of talent.

"Their schedule definitely affects their record," confided Leaman. "They play too difficult a schedule. I would call it the most difficult schedule in the East."

This season the Rams have lost to, and get this, Penn, Penn State, Princeton, Southen California, Boston College, Syracuse, South Carolina, Maryland, Marquette, and Notre Dame. In other words, if you have to be beaten, you might as well be beaten by the best.

But all does not loom totally dark for the Minutemen. They are coming off what can surely be called their best performance of the year against Maine.

"I think now we're playing about as well as we possibly could," said Leaman.

One problem for the Minutemen could be a lack of depth in the backcourt. Jim Burke missed the Maine game with what was termed the flu, but latest reports say Burke is still in the infirmary and could possibly be lost for the rest of the season with mononucleosis.

Turning to the inevitable tournament talk, the Minutemen seem like shoo-ins to go somewhere, but the question now is where.

"There is a real possibility that we could get an NCAA bid," assured Leaman. "Several of the major independents (Syracuse, St. John's) have expressed a real desire to go to the NIT." The thinking there is that this could open the NCAA door for UMass.

But even if the Minutemen do not receive that coveted NCAA invitation, there is little reason to believe that they would also be snubbed by the NIT.

Those are the questions that remain up in the air at this point. The answers will come tommorrow when the selection committees of both tournaments meet to send out their initial bids.

GLACIAL ECSTASY — Johnny Muse (21) raises his stick to signal UMass' second goal last week against New Hampshire. The skaters hope to have more of the same opportunities to rejoice and to break their Division One jinx tonight against Northeastern.

Skaters host Northeastern

By BILL BALLOU

The seeds are out, the game between inter-divisional rivals. "Who cares?" you might ask that Northeastern invades Orr Rink tonight at 8 p.m.

Actually, there's several reasons why this one should be worth seeing. For one, Northeastern-UMass games are traditionally very close and well-played, with three of the last four going into overtime.

For another, the Minutemen have lost their last twelve Division I games and Northeastern is very beatable.

And finally, this is the last chance UMass gets to play before the playoffs open (for them) in Boston Saturday night, and since they haven't played in exactly one week, it's a vital tune-up.

The Huskies, coached by former Bruins great Fernie Flaman, aren't a great Divison One team, but in the past few years have improved their lot considerably and are now quite competetive.

Still, a not particularly strong UMass team took them into sudden-death on their own ice last season, and if they can ever be beaten, it's now.

The Minutemen just can't shake the jinx that's seen them lose those dozen straight to top division teams. Last week they turned in their best performance of this season, were up by three goals, and still couldn't take New Hampshire (who incidentally is now third in the nation).

Last season they had UNH, Providence, Northeastern, and Colgate within easy reach and lost. It may be damaging, psychologically, to come so close yet lose to UNH, but it seems that playing so well against such a good team would do much for UMass' confidence.

It wouldn't be too surprising to see some unfamiliar faces seeing lots of action, and John Binkoski would seem likely to get some well-deserved ice time.

INCIDENTALLY: Scott Stuart, who's played some center in recent weeks, looks good there.....Tim Howes couldn't score before the Colby game and now can't miss. He's got four goals in his last five games.....

The same old story

As the shadows shorten and the day lengthens, the hockey season ends. Within two weeks another UMass hockey year will be history, which, when you come to think of it, is quite an accomplishment.

For once again the pucksters have survived a season of being the Athletic Department's step-child of UMass. For the 5x10-8 season Boyden has successfully hidden the skaters away like a senile grandparent who's put in a closet so he won't embarrass the family when company comes.

The main thing, of course, is that they have no rink. This is understandable, because several good reasons why UMass can't have a rink have been voiced. Three are:

1) If there was a rink and the roof collapsed, the University would be held responsible for all the personal injuries and would be faced with gigantic lawsuits.

2) A volcano could appear at the spot where the rink is, destroying the building and wasting all the time, effort, and money used in construction.

3) At the conclusion of the hockey season evil-minded profiteers may steal the red lights behind the nets and set up houses of ill repute, giving the university a bad name.

Actually, not having a rink is a blessing-in-disguise for members of the team. Because of it, they get a chance to do a lot more traveling.

For instance, in October, before Orr Rink is open, they're lucky enough to be able to drive up to Greenfield to practice. The university doesn't provide transportation, but who cares, the foliage is lovely.

And the Minutemen get to dress in the Cage and walk, thumb, drive, skip, or pole vault over to Orr when it does open for practices and games.

This is delightful on the way over, since, with all those pads and things on, players can keep warm and cozy. But it does pose difficulties on the way back, especially when they sweat (which often happens during practice), and occasionally colds result.

They even get to "truck on over" before and after games. Last week they played the No.2 team in the nation, New Hampshire, and after it was over four lucky UMies enjoyed the brisk ride back to the Cage in the back of a pick-up truck. "Invigorating," they said.

Picture this happening to, say, the football team.

The gridders are playing Alabama at Alumni Stadium. Dick MacPherson has spoken with his men as they dress in the Senate Bus Garage. Not enough players have cars, so several have to find their own way down. The inspired MacPherson's last words are "Don't take rides from strangers."

It's all part of a massive cover-up. The Boyden administration hopes that by pretending the hockey team isn't there, it'll go away. Then nobody will know that the team was, at one point, down to about four left-hand curved sticks and that Chick Rheault's goalie pads are held together by trainer Bill Smith's genius at using ace bandages.

It doesn't really matter, anyway. Everyone knows that hockey players will do anything to play. And despite the circumstances, the hockey team has managed to make the playoffs four straight years.

I mean, why tamper with success?

Senate approves acts of civil disobedience

By DEAN TUCKER
and MIKE HENAULT

The undergraduate senate of UMass gave a vote of approval to acts of civil disobedience here last night.

The action comes in the wake of the toppling of a Northeast Utilities owned weather tower in Montague by Amherst college grad and local resident Samuel Lovejoy.

In a motion that interupted the normal senate proceedings Senator William Steward moved the following motion be considered. "Be it resolved that the undergraduate student senate supports the right of any individual to take action consistent with normal principles, which does not endanger other individuals and for which the individual accepts responsibility for that act."

In a voice vote no nays were cast, however a motion to record the vote as unanimous was rejected by a handful of senators.

Lovejoy claims the tower toppling was an act of civil disobedience. He pleaded not guilty to the charge of malicious destruction in a Greenfield court last Friday. He hopes to use the pending trial as a forum for airing the pros and cons of a nuclear power plant in the Pioneer Valley.

The UMass Student Senate has condoned civil disobedience twice in recent years. Both cases involved support of Anti War activities in the area.

The Student Senate also grappled with a monies policy proposal. The spending plan would attempt to meet inflationary demands while keeping the students' tax rate at a minimum. Specifically, the policy statement will, — set the Student Activities Tax at 21.00 per student per semester. — maintain a budget ceiling for all UMass activities at $717,343.00, — establish Reserve Account requirements which would guarantee financial solvency to the Student Government Association., - allow $11,000.00 for Special Appropriation monies. This would mean a $6,000.00 increase over last year to give the program more flexibility.

A system of "Priority Categories" was postponed till next week. The categorization of UMass' fifty-two organizations could mean life or death for their budgets.

In several minor moves, the Senate moved to make "category changes" in the budgets of many studen programs. A category change allows money allocated for one area to be spent in another. The changes will give $330.00 to Belchertown State School for the purchase of educational equipment, and $100.00 for the advertisement of political candidates appearing on campus. Other allotment switches granted $1100.00 for Elma Lewis Lecture Series and $1700.00 to guarantee the future existence of a Third World Day Nursery.

Payroll inadequecies force Fac-Sen to form committee

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD

Inadaquacies in the present payroll system have forced a special committee of the Faculty Senate to deal with changing its implementation according to Faculty Senate Secretary Steven Fletcher.

Called the Personnel Policy Committee, it is not expected to announce anything definite until April.

Fletcher said the committee would only make "adjustments in implementation and technicalities." He emphasised that the basic payroll system will remain the same.

Professor David Clarke, head of the Personnel Committee for the English Department, attributes the cause of the problem to a misunderstanding between the Faculty Senate and Chancellor Bromery's Office. He explained that a year ago the Faculty Senate suggested a way of rewarding people, and the Chancellor misunderstood this proposal.

As a result a fixed system was implemented. The faculty did not want that. By the time the mistake was discovered, President Wood said it was too late to change it, since it would cause too many complications in the University system.

Under the present merit system, departments in the University can award pay raises to their faculty members under three catagories: extra-departmental service, outstanding service, and professional achievement. The departments get a fixed amount of money from the Provost's Office to use in each of these categoies.

Professor Clarke calls the present system "lousy" because many faculty members qualified for raises can't get them. As an example, only 15 per cent of the faculty in the English Department may receive raises for "outstanding achievement" no matter how many actually deserve them. The department only gets enough money in that catagory to give 15 per cent of its faculty raises.

He added that they often have to "rob" some people who deserve awards just to give raises to other deserving people.

The raises awarded in each catagory are: up to $400 for professional achievement and extra-departmental services, and $1000-$1400 for outstanding achievement.

The publisher of the Manchester Union Leader has threatened a Massachusetts Daily Collegian commentator with legal action because of a column she wrote February 20 about the University of New Hampshire Gay Students Organization (GSO).

William Loeb, president of the Union Leader Corporation made the threat in a February 26 letter which Collegian commentator Karen A. Monaco received yesterday afternoon.

"Your column is in extremely bad taste. Personally I think the best remedy would have been to have your mother use laundy soap to wash out your mouth," Loeb began.

"As it is, I am turning it over to the proper legal authorities with the hope they will find a way to bring legal action against you," the letter concluded.

Monaco said from her dorm by telephone last night she was appalled by the letter, but not worried. "I consider it more a threat to all gay people than to just me personally," she said in a statement.

"If there is such a thing as freedom of the press I have little to worry about," she added.

Monaco's comment ran on page eight of the February 20, 1974 Colleigan, under the headline, "Well, if the ballet slipper fits Meldrim...". It ran directly under the heading: "Opinion-editorial."

In her comment, Monaco parodied Thompson's views on homosexuals and made reference to the governor's childhood, ending by quoting a fictitious wire service account pretending to report that Thompson has been arrested for sodomy, lewdness, indecent exposure and illegal hitchiking.

Publisher Loeb has backed Thompson's fight to supress the gays at UNH through front page editorials and major news coverage of the continuing court battle, which is now in the federal court. The Union Leader is the largest circulation newspaper in the state and the only one which publishes in the morning.

A January 18 editorial, from which Monaco says she was inspired to write, said:

"This newspaper wonders whether (federal) Judge Bownes, for instance, realizes just how far out of step he is with the moral principles and the wishes of the people of New Hampshire when he tells the UNH board of Trustees that they must recognize and grant every privilege to a group of sodomites..."

Monaco, responding yesterday, said:

"Any person who would undertake to make such cruel, ignorant and fallacious generalizations about so large a segment of the American population and indeed even the population of New Hampshire, should have not only his mouth, but also his mind washed out with soap. Where was his mother?"

5 UMies busted, plead innocent

By DAVID SPARLING

Five UMass students pleaded not guilty to charges of posession and growing marijuana in the cellar of their Amherst home at an arraignment Wednesday at Hampshire District Court in Northampton.

Taken in the raid, occuring at 9:42 p.m. Tuesday night at the students' home at 97 Belchertown Rd., Amherst, were 27 marijuana plants growing under artificial light in the cellar, a quantity of additional marijuana and items related to marijuana use, according to the police.

The students, Michael J. Martin, 22; William H. Lavigne, 20; John Brooks, 26; Neil Benjamin, 20; and Paul Johansen, 19, when contacted by the Collegian could not offer a reason for the raid.

The raid, led by Lt. Clarence Rabb of the Amherst Police Dept., came after a two week surveilance period by Officer Gorden A. Jones.

Lt. Rabb told the Collegian that surveilance action "came as a result from a complaint of a citizen. We observed the house for a period of two weeks and as a result of his (Officer Rabb) observations a warrent was issued."

The Homestead

By JAN ALEXANDER

Michael Oehler, a Northern Idaho homesteader for the past five years, described himself last night as a "conscientious objector to the industrial revolution".

Speaking before an audience of 150 in the Public Health Auditorium, the bearded, heavy-set outdoorsman said that he had dropped out of college and "out of the system altogether" in 1960. Then came eight years of traveling around the country until he invested in 40 acres of timberland.

"Land is a great investment", Oehler said. "When I bought in '68, my land cost $4,000. Now it's worth $12,000."

Oehler outlined a step-by-step process for homesteading. "There's no more land available now for free, so you have to buy it. You can find land that's up for sale through real estate magazines, which also show comparative values around the country. Good land still exists in Northern Michigan, Northern Wisconsin, West Virginia, and parts of Maine. Then you put a down-payment on the land and build the smallest house you could possible live in for a year."

Oehler is a firm believer in the do-it-yourself school of thought. He built his own underground house from "recyclable materials", and subsists mainly on food which he has hunted, grown or gathered himself.

The homesteader drew diagrams on a blackboard to show the floor plan and dimensions of his one-room home. "The entire cost was only $50.00, since I was able to salvage a lot of the wood for it, plus all 14 windows", Oehler proudly pointed out.

Oehler spoke extensively about the joys of country life. "Sometimes I do heavy work for 10-14 hours a day, and that puts me in good shape. The food gives you more energy because it's fresher, and with more energy, you can do more. There have been times when I felt so good running through the woods and everything, that I couldn't stand it anymore and I'd go home and get stoned!"

"My goal in life is to achieve peace and serenity", Oehler continued, "and I'm doing that right now."

Oehler decried the growth of technology and the establishment's power. "We're dependent upon the system for everything except air," he said. The homesteader cited smog alerts and plastic palm trees along Florida's highways as proof of the coming of Thomas Huxley's Briva New World. "Huxley is the only true prophet in America in this century", Oehler stated.

Michael Oehler will be speaking again tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Educational Unit No. 2, near Dickinson Hall.

Music from Marlboro: a rare experience

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Fine Arts Reporter

Rarely is a university audience permitted to savor such excellence in chamber music virtuosity as last night's performance by Music from Marlboro. Anton Bruckner's Quintet in F is one of the composer's few chamber music works, and one in which he rejects the traditional light liricism of chamber music and weaves a beautiful contrapuntal texture with the richness of symphonic orchestration. Traditionally, called the "disguised Symphony" Quintet in F nevertheless allows equal development of violin and cello parts in the development of musical theme. The first movement is characterized by a surprising spriteliness, while the second movement delicately reiterates the scherzo theme finally ending on a whisper. The finale, typical of Bruckner and of symphonic orchestration, ends in a final increment of sound.

Bartok's Contrasts for piano, violin and clarinet is a deliberate juxtaposition of 3 solo instruments. The work was originally commissioned by Benny Goodman and it is clearly a setpiece for Goodman's versatility. Originally composed for a studio recording, the work is an unusual concert choice. From the standpoint of the pianist, Contrasts requires little more than technical competency since the expressive percussive qualities of the piano are deliberately muted.

The instrument's versatility is limited to bell-like sounds and lower case rumblings. Last night's performance continued this tradition. In addition the clarinet overwhelmed the violin but this might perhaps be remedied under recording studio conditions (as originally intended) where the volume could have been electronically modulated.

Mozart's Quintet in D is the work of the Mature composor. The contrapuntal flow is balanced and somewhat melancholic, perhaps the projection of the sad personal life of the composer into his music. It is the last of Mozart's great works composed at the technical apogee of his career. To denigrate the quintet as being merely competent would be a grave injustice.

However, the popularity of this work and the number of outstanding musicians who have performed unfortunately reduces its impact. However, the Quintet in D rounds out a very sophisticated program.

Debate over impeachment grounds still continues

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Justice Department study made public Wednesday reports there is no historical basis for the "political power" position that a president can be impeached by the House merely because it has the votes to do so.

Vice President Gerald R. Ford, as minority leader of the House, held the view that the House could impeach on any grounds. Former Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst told the Senate last year that Congress, if it has the votes, does not need facts to impeach.

President Nixon took the much narrower view during his news conference Monday night that the House could not impeach a president without first finding evidence that he had violated criminal law.

At a news conference Wednesday Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe sided with Ford despite the report. Saxbe said he did not think the House will impeach Nixon "unless they come up with something I am not aware of."

"I don't have a firm view," said Saxbe. "I personally don't question what Gerry Ford said. If they were so inclined, they could impeach because they don't like his necktie.

"But I think the House will be reluctant to go down this road if they didn't think it would be a charge that could be upheld in the Senate," Saxbe said.

The final three sections of the five-part Justice Department study on impeachment law, begun in October, were released Wednesday. The study, described as an objective historical survey, is being sent to the White House Watergate Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski and the House Judiciary Committee, which has initiated an impeachment inquiry against President Nixon.

In the overall summary, the study says, "There are persuasive grounds for arguing both the narrow view that a violation of criminal law is required and the broader view that certain non-criminal 'political offenses' may justify impeachment.

"One conclusion which clearly emerges is that the 'political power' positions advanced by Mr. Kleindienst in the 1973 Senate hearings on executive privilege no need for any 'facts' or by Mr. Ford in 1970 regarding the Justice William O. Douglas investigation any ground adopted by the House are not supported by pertinent historical sources..." the study says.

It points out, however, that the near-successful impeachment of President Andrew Johnson has been interviewed by some as an example of the "Political power" view and that it was ctiticized on that ground.

In ending, the study says, "There is, however, fairly wide support for an essential premise of 'political power' position, i.e., that judicial review of congressional impeachment action is unavailable."

Exorcist okayed

BOSTON (AP) - A Boston Municipal Court judge ruled on Wednesday that the controversial motion picture, "The Exorcist," is neither blasphemous nor obscene.

Judge Theordore A. Gllynn dismissed complaints brought by Rita Warren of Brockton against the Sack 57 Theater Corp. which is showing the film in the Boston area.

"I have viewed the picture and ruled that it does not meet the guidelines of obscenity as laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court," Glynn said in his one-page ruling.

"I have ruled that the picture was the best evidence. Nothing is to be gained by further testimony or argument."

Women's Lib a needed ingredient

By PAUL BRADLEY

The women's liberation movement is not only a good thing for women, but also a needed ingredient in society, Dr. John Money, Professor of Medical Psychology and Pediatrics at Johns Hopkins University Medical School, told a group of 150 five-college students at Amherst College's Music center Monday night.

"It is absolutely necessary, he said, to find something for young women to do between the ages of puberty and child rearing. A career should be pursued also, so that when the woman is completed her child rearing, she should have something to do aside from purely domestic chores."

Dr. Money said that the differences between the sexes, as they exist today, are a result of child-rearing techniques that make a child identify with a certain pattern of behavior, and that this is transmuted through the family. These sociological and environmental factors play the most important role in the development of gender identity, according to Dr. Money.

Then the differences between the sexes, he said, are results of the long period of child rearing. "The absolute differences betwen the sexes," said Dr. Money, "are remarkable few. The only absolute differences are those involving the reproduction process itself." Differences such as facial hair and bone structure are distributive differences because the determining hormones appear in both the male and the female, although in varying amounts.

Dr. Money claimed that most professionals in his field were not shocked by the rapid rise of the liberation movement. "Until this century, the life expectancy in this country was 45. Due to public health and medical knowledge, this figure is now 75. At the same time," Dr. Money pointed out, "the age of puberty has been steadily decreasing at a rate of four months every ten years."

Dr. Money then noted that this unusually long period of time between puberty, marriage, and parenthood has to be filled with something rewarding for the individual. Hence, follow the demands by women for equal opportunity in choosing a career.

Dr. Money cited birth control as a very useful means for the liberation of both sexes. Birth control provides us with the opportunity "to seperate recreational sex acts from procreational sex acts," he said.

Although there are important hormones that to a certain extent determine gender identification, Dr. Money stressed the factor of post-natal development. "The deep intensity of gender identity is so impressed that we naturally assign sex roles."

THE MALL

What does it mean to you?

(Part III: Downtown Amherst: Can it survive against malls and shopping strips?)

Buying ice-cream in the mall.

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Any new store in an area poses a threat to the existing shops of the town. So much for one store. What about 33? What exactly has been the effect of the mall with respect to the Amherst shops.

"The Mountain Farms Mall hasn't really done anything as far as we're concerned," said one local store owner who asked to remain anonymous.

"My sales from August to Christmas were bigger than any other period, he said, but possibly they could have been better — who knows?"

He pointed out that it is hard to judge the effect of the mall because the shopping area was opened at about the same time the gasoline shortage began to get acute. He said Amherst should survive the new pressure because, as he put it, "there is still more variety uptown."

Alan Thompson, owner of Thompson's Men Shop in Amherst, said: "The only thing the mall has effected is our Friday night business."

"The center of Amherst provides more goods and services than any mall," Thompson said.

With the current gasoline problems the merchants in Amherst seem to agree on one point: Since the downtown shopping area is within walking distance from many parts of the town, including the campus, their shops should fair well in spite of the mall.

"I think malls fight with malls, not established downtown areas," said Thompson. "It may effect us, but not as much as inflation will."

Many of the merchants in Amherst have been in the town for several decades. For example, Thompson's store has been in operation since 1887. The feeling among these owners appears to be that if their bussinesses survived this long nothing (not even a mall) should effect them too drastically now.

Another aspect to the impact the mall has had is the very welcome increase in student employment.

With the rising costs of the University and simply life in general any increase in employment for students is most desirable. Almy's employs 30 students, all part-time. Some of the smaller stores also have a generous amount of student help. (Beau Britches: six part-time, The Weathervane: one part-time, Paperback Booksmith: three part-time).

This series has tried to examine closely a new neighbor that sits big and innocent on Route 9. It has cars from Northampton and Greenfield that clutter the highway only to end up in a mass somewhere in its 1200 space parking lot. It causes a few, but seemingly not too many, grey hairs on the heads of some Amherst merchants.

Meanwhile, though, it provides some necessary spending money to many UMass students. It also serves as a place where many lose some of their boredom walking by the maze of shops. Not mentioned before, the mall gives the community a few more outlets for entertainment with its four theaters and nightclub.

However, it appears that only time will tell if Amherst was truly ready and in need of a mall such as the one that replaced some farmland in 1973.

Rochester Prof discusses Presidential dilema

By DONALD WILHELM
MDC Staff

Prof. Christopher Lasch

Is Watergate the result of Nixon's personality and his unfortunate choice of associates? Or is it the inevitable outcome of today's political system, a system in which the power of the Presidency has vastly increased at the expense of Congress and the Cabinet, a system in which half-truths by media experts replace the simpler declarations of years past.

These and the ramifications of these events were expressed in a speech Wednesday night by Professor Christopher Lasch of the University of Rochester's History Department, in a lecture sponsored by UMass' Departments of History and Political Science.

Prof. Lasch said that today's system of a strong Presidency surrounded by a group of loyal aides has led to a situation in which these aides "have insulated the President from the intrusion of everyday factual events, and have shut the President off not only from dissent but from conflicting advice and opinion".

And this is nothing that arrived with Nixon, according to Prof. Lasch. President Kennedy's decision during the Cuban missile crisis and President Johnson's decisions during the Vietnam War reflect the result of the same sort of situation. And, this has been developing since the thirties, when more democratic means of decision making were mired by the increasing size and complexity of the governmental system.

In addition, Prof. Lasch said "The rise of the mass media has made allegations of true and false irrelevant to evaluations. The advertising and public relations industry has often taken to using statements that are not technically unture, but are radically misleading and are designed to be."

Because of the complexity of the news, and of the public's sophistication to cruder forms of propaganda, such tactics have become commonplace. "Product X has twice the pain reliever doctors recommend most" is an example of this. And this carries over to presidential press secretaries as well. The public may not believe or correctly appreciate the plain truth, but it will believe simplified half-truths, by many media men's logic.

Prof. Lasch holds little hope for the future of our democracy unless drastic reforms are undertaken. The sheer complexity of today has rendered the democracy of revolutionary days, to use Ronald Ziegler's word, "inoperative."

Calley released

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Lt. William L. Calley Jr., the only man convicted for the massacre of Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, was released from custody yesterday by a civilian judge.

"I feel I could be useful to society," Calley told the judge.

Calley, 30, who has nearly exhausted his appeals for the murders of at least 22 Vietnamese, smiled and waved at friends as he walked out of a federal courthouse here, free for the first time since President Nixon ordered him held in an apartment three years ago pending appeals.

Calley signed an order allowing him to be released without paying the $1,000 bail set by U.S. District Court Judge J. Robert Elliott.

Calley declined comment on the day's events.

He left the courthouse and went by military escort back to Ft. Benning, where he has lived in an apartment since March 1971 while appealing his convictions.

At Calley's side yesterday as she has been in the five years he has faced charges for leading the My Lai massacre, was his red-haired girlfriend, Anne Moore.

Miss Moore told the court there was no reason to believe Calley would not honor the terms of bail. "He had ample opportunity before he was confined and he never considered it," she said when asked if Calley would flee.

"I feel it necessary to be able to consult more freely with my attorneys...Also, there's a financial need," Calley told the court.

An informed court source, who declined to be named, said Calley left the court by military escort because he had received a threat. The source refused to elaborate.

Calley's appeal is now before Army Secretary Howard W. Callaway, who reportedly met with military attorneys following the decision yesterday. The Army had no comment on the judge's decision.

After Callaway rules on Calley's appeal of his 20-year sentence, Nixon has said he would give the case final review.

At Wounded Knee

Booby trap found

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A dynamite booby trap with a delayed fuse was found in one of the bunkers abandoned by militants who held Wounded Knee, S.D., a federal marshal testified Wednesday.

James Propotnick of Minneapolis, a specialist in demolitions, said his team of four men checked more than a dozen locations where defenders had dug in for the 71-day siege.

On trial are Dennis Banks, 41, St. Paul, and Russell Means, 34, Porcupine, S.D., for their alleged roles as ringleaders in the occupation that began last Feb. 27.

Charges against the two American Indian Movement (AIM) leaders include burglary, theft, firearms violations, assault and conspiracy.

Propotnick testified that 80 to 100 marshals and some FBI agents - he couldn't estimate how many - wnet into Wounded Knee to safeguard the area after the last holdouts gave up last May 8.

Under cross examination by defense attorney Douglas Hall, Propotnick said one bunker had an "anti-personnel device" set to go off manually.

He said it was located at a bunker near the Big Foot Trail, the main road leading into the village from the south. Propotnick added:

"There was an ammunition box with some dynamite in it and there was pull-type fuse. It had a wire strung from it. If you had walked over it, it would have exploded after a 15-second delay."

He was not asked how much dynamite the box contained.

The marshal testified he found several anti-personnel grenades in a house and dismantled them. He said he found molotov cocktails in a church. Propotnick said the firebombs were not set to explode.

Some of the bunkers were rather elaborate, said Propotnick, being fashioned from cinder blocks and lumber - "Good wood, I don't know where it came from."

In San Francisco

More Hearst food

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) — Organizers stockpiled food and prepared to resume Thursday a $2-million giveway designed to feed the needy and help win freedom for kidnaped heiress Patricia Hearst.

Foodstuffs, including fresh meats and produce, were delivered Tuesday and Wednesday to a San Francisco warehouse. Food will be given to everyone who asks at about a dozen Northern California locations, said a spokesman for People in Need.

Miss Hearst's father, newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst, has offered $2 million to the People in Need program in response to staggering demands to feed all of California's needy. The terrorists Symbionese Liberation Army claims to hold Miss Hearst as a prisoner of war and demanded the food as a condition for negotiating her release.

The Hearst family waited nor the SLA break a seven-day silence — the longest from them since the 20-year-old coed was abducted from a Berkeley apartment on Feb. 4.

In the last tape recorded message, SLA Leader "Cinque" denounced the Hearst offer and demanded that an additional $4 million in food be available by Thursday. He threatened to cut off all communication and hold Miss Hearst indefinitely if the demand is not met.

The Hearst Corp. has promised the additional $4 million if the SLA releases the college sophomore unharmed.

Chaos and violence struck one of four food distribution center last Friday when trucks were late and food supplies short. Organizers postponed resumption of the giveaway Tuesday in hopes more preparation and distribution points would halt further trouble.

Shockley to be debated

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Physicist William B. Shockley and civil rights leader Roy Innis have tentatively accepted an invitation to debate Shockley's genetic theories next month, a student sponsor says.

The event probably will be March 14 sponsored by the Caliopean Society, society president Martin Gatter said today.

Two other campus groups earlier invited one or both of the speakers but then sithdrew the invitations.

Shockley, a Nobel Laureate in physics, theorizes that intelligence is related to race and proposes voluntary sterilization for persons with lower IQ's.

Innis, executive director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) refused to debate Shockley at Princeton University last year when the sponsors closed the controversial event to the public.

Gatter said his group of 25 students is trying to raise enough money to meet expenses of the debate.

"No one is cooperating. When you have as guests a Nobel physicist and an executive director of the Congress of Racial Equality, usually you can fine a college master who will house them," Gatter said.

Brooke says impeachment a must

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The rule of law requires that Congress continue consideration of impeachment proceedings against President Nixon, Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke said Wednesday night.

"In my opinion avoidance of the impeachment process at this time would have a far more devastating effect upon the fabric of the American body politic than the impeachment proceedings themselves," Brooke said.

"For their avoidance would mean the relinquishing of one of this country's most precious heritages-the rule of law,"the Massachusetts senator said in an address prepared for the student body of Marquette University.

Brooke, who last November urged Nixon to resign, siad the greatest threat of a constitutional confrontation would be if the President refused to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee, which is conducting an impeachment probe.

Should that happen, Brooke said, "If through defiance or reluctance, the President seeks to impede or thwart the impeachment investigation, he may very well find himself subject to impeachment on these grounds alone."

Brooke said he is not convinced that enough evidence exists to remove Nixon from office. But he said there is ample evidence to warrant the investigation.

The senator said it would be better for the nation if Nixon were to resign, rather than to face impeachment.

Should the President resign, the nation would be spared "The prolonged agony of impeachment," vice President Gerald R. Ford could assume the presidency and spend his time solving U.S. problems, and the threatened crippling of the two-party system could be ended, Brooke said.

He scoffed at statements that Nixon's resignation would set a precedent wunder which future presidents. "would be hounded out of office when enough voters became disenchanted with them."

But, Brooke said, "This president is not being asked to leave office because of a fundamental disagreement with his policies and a concommitant slump in the polls.

"On the contrary, resignation is suggested because president Nixon, based on the misdeeds of so many of his chief subordinates, no longer commands the consent of the governed," Brooke said.

Top Michigan lawman hits metro bussing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The courts should not seek to achieve social goals, the Michigan Attorney general argued today before the Supreme Court.

Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley urged the court to overturn an appeals court decision ordering busing of school pupils across Detroit city and suburban boundary lines.

"This case was argued on the theory of a single school district violation," he said in oral argument before the Supreme Court.

However, he added, at the remedy state, the district court decided to pursue a social goal.

This is the classic case of a remedy in search of a violation," he said.

Michigan officials and 43 suburban Detroit school systems are appealing a ruling by the U.S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati that the only constitutional way to desegregate Detroit city schools was to include predominantly white suburban school systems.

The State of Michigan contended in its brief that there was no showing that either the school authorities or any state agency deliberately attempted to fix or alter demographic patterns to affect the racial composition of the schools.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, originator of the suit, contended that the "deliberate confinement of black children to a core of schools within a line separating them from reciprocally white schools - is not constitutionally different from gerrymandering school attendance zone lines around black neighborhoods."

J. Harold Flannery, an attorney for the NAACP, Argued that school district lines "are not more than artifacts of convenience" and that school segregation and housing segregation are "mutually interlocking devices."

He said school district lines were drawn in such a way as to conform to segregated housing patterns resulting in "segregative school practices operated in lockstep with area-wide segregative housing practices."

Rep. candidates to run on merit

Think administrations record might cause trouble

By WILLIAM L. CHAZE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's advice to the contrary, some congressional Republicans seeking re-election say that running on the administration's record would cause them trouble at the polls.

Others, however, say they agreed with the President when he said at a Monday news conference that "it will be a good year for those candidates who stand for the administration" because peace and prosperity will decide the elections.

But all of the dozen House and Senate Republicans asked to comment on the President's remarks Tuesday said they would be running independent campaigns, focusing on their own records.

Most felt that Nixon's own popularity would be as much an issue as "peace and prosperity."

"To say that his popularity is not going to be an issue is not quite accurate in my opinion," said Rep. Pierre S du Pont of Delaware, running for a third term. "The President's situation-Watergate et al-is one of the three or four major issues.

"I've never gone down the line with the administration and I intend to continue my independent ways in the campaign," he said.

Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, former head of the Republican Party, said that in his remarks, Nixon "was putting the best face possible" on the situation faced by GOP candidates.

Dole said that in his own campaign "we haven't been trying to avoid the administration. But we've been trying to underscore our own candidacy."

Similar remarks were made by Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon.

"I don't think I'm going to wrap the mantle of the administration around me or take occasion to deny it," he said. "If I had to say vote for me or against me solely on the basis of the administration's record, it would be a liability."

Rep. James R. Grover Jr. of New York said Nixon was "speculating that things are going to be at a high point for the administration by election time."

Grover, who has served six terms, said that the energy crisis may well undercut prosperity as an issue the Republicans can confidently campaign on.

Rep. Joel T. Broyhill of Virginia said he agreed with Nixon that the administration's efforts to "bring peace to the world" and stimulate the economy are helpful to candidates.

"Nixon himself would be the kiss of death in any campaign," said Broyhill, whose district includes part of suburban Washington.

Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi said that he planned to talk about the administration's successes, but would attack Nixon for his budget proposals. "I'm not going to hide the fact that I'm a Republican, but I'm going to run on my own record"

"I don't think you could say the administration's record is an asset," said Lott.

Ehrlichman refused guilty plea twice in L.A. court case

WASHINGTON (AP) — John D. Ehrlichman received and turned down as offer within the last two weeks to plead guilty to a single charge in return for his cooperation with Watergate prosecutors, his attorney said yesterday.

If he entered the plea, said lawyer Frank H. Strickler, Ehrlichman was promised he could avoid more serious charges, expected shortly from one or more of the three Watergate grand juries.

Strickler said he expects President Nixon's former domestic aide, already facing trial in Los Angeles on state charges, to be indicted in more than one Watergate case.

Ehrlichman was offered an opportunity to plead guilty charge of violating the civil rights of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, Dr. Lewis Fielding. He was in charge of the group that broke into Fielding's office in September 1972 searching for Ellsberg's records.

Such plea-bargaining would have involved a promise to co-operate with investigators and to testify for the government at any future trials.

Ehrlichman's former assistant, Egil Krogh, accepted a similar deal, pleading guilty to the civil rights violations charge. He has begun serving a six-months prison sentence at Allenwood, Pa.

Ehrlichman is scheduled to go on trial in Los Angeles Superior Court on April 15 on state charges of burglary, conspiracy and perjury. Two other members of the White House Investigations Unit, known as the plumbers, also are scheduled for trial there.

Asked if the testimony sought from Ehrlichman included presidential involvement, Strickler said, "It's only fair to say that we know of nothing that would have satisfied a prosecutor along these lines."

Ehrlichman's California lawyers are seeking the testimony of President Nixon to support their contention that Ehrlichman was acting in the interests of national security in the Ellsberg case and that the plumbers unit had presidential sanction.

Without the President's testimony, Ehrlichman's lawyers are expected to ask dismissal of the charges on grounds they are being denied evidence available to prosecutors.

Senators urge dollar check-off

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ten senators joined yesterday series of Senate speeches urging the nation's income taxpayers to use the dollar check-offs on their tax forms.

By checking a box on the federal income tax form, each taxpayer may direct that $1 of his tax payment be placed in a fund for equal division to major political parties to finance the 1976 presidential election campaign.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., aid "this is one way to get away from the fat cats that have been dominating presidential elections for too many years.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, called it "a chance for the average citizen to do something about what went wrong in 1972."

Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., who joined his Republican colleague, Sen. William V. Roth of Delaware, in arranging for the Senate colloquy, emphasized however, that the fund was established by a law enacted in 1971, "before Watergate."

Sen Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said the fund is going well, but not yet well enough. Early 1973 tax returns, he said, show 14.4 per cent of taxpayers using the checkoff option, compared with 3.1 per cent on 1972 returns.

Emergency energy bill passed

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House passed emergency energy legislation Wednesday, providing for an oil price rollback and giving President Nixon the authority to order gasoline rationing.

The measure how goes to the White House where it faces an almost certain veto.

Final passage came after motions to strike several of the bill's more controversial provisions, including the price rollback and rationing authority were defeated by roll call votes.

Earlier, the House reversed its Rules Committee and voted down a parliamentary rule that had threatened to kill the bill.

The vote on final passage was 258 to 151, short of the two-thirds vote that would be needed to override a veto.

According to figures from a House committee the rollback provision would reduce gasoline prices by up to four cents a gallon at the pump and cut propane prices in half.

A motion to strike the rollback section from the bill was defeated 238 to 173.

The House turned down the parliamentary rule on a 259 to 144 vote.

Instead, it adopted a compromise rule proposed by House Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W. Va., floor manager of the bill, calling for full-scale roll-call votes on the price rollback, rationing authority and a section giving the President temporary authority to put energy conservation plans into effect without first seeking Congressional approval.

Under the original rule, a challenge to the legislation could have come on the rollback provision on the grounds that it was drafted by a Senate-House conference and was never voted upon by the full House.

William E. Simon, right, administrator of the Federal Energy Office, and Under Secretary of State William H. The meeting, chaired by Donaldson, is the first one for the group established by the Washington Energy Conference.

Gas reserved for golden agers only

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — "Born in 1899," read the hand-printed sign displayed by one spry motorist here.

"He's holding it up for me to see," said Richard Parks, who has been restricting afternoon sales of gasoline at his service station to motorists over 70 years old.

"It's worked out wonderful," said Parks, 57, who began the plan Monday because of concern that older motorists either could not or would not wait in long lines for gasoline.

The older folks must still obey Maryland's mandatory odd-even gasoline rationing system. But between 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. each day, the pumps are all theirs at Parks' station. No identification is required since Parks figures his eyes won't fool him to much.

The state energy office said Parks didn't appear to be breaking any rules, such as one which prohibits preferential treatment for regular customers.

Coal miners refuse to work; need gas

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Appalachian coal miners, saying they cannot get fuel for their cars, continued Wednesday to refuse to dig fuel for the nation's steel mills.

Up to 15,000 miners stayed away from their jobs in southern West Virginia, enough men to produce about 140,000 tons of coal daily, according to state agencies and a coal association. Most of this coal is metallurgical, a high-grade type used mostly to make steel.

Officials said gasoline was moving into the area, but blamed the Federal Energy Office and unnamed oil companies for slow deliveries.

A United Mine Workers representative at Welch, in the heart of the affected area, said most stations were closed and that gasoline was hard to get. He said he believes station owners and oil companies are holding fuel back.

But a similar shutdown in adjoining sections of southwestern Virginia eased some Wednesday, and a threat of shutdowns of mines in eastern Kentucky was reduced with increased supplies of gasoline.

"All the announcements and promises from Washington mean nothing," Senate Majority Whip Robert C. Byrd said in a letter to the FEO, "until the needed gas actually reaches the pumps."

Federal Energy Office confuses applicants

A homeowner seeking more fuel oil this winter 1 may, 2 may not or 3 must use a Form 17 supplied by the Federal Energy Office.

The homeowner should seek the increased allocation from 1 his supplier, 2 the state or 3 the FEO.

The correct answers depend on which of the FEO's 10 regional headquarters the homeowner asks. Unless he lives in Boston.

"I don't think he can do it. I never heard of it," said a spokesman at the FEO's New England office.

The confusion about homeowners and heating oil was typical of the varied and often contradictory responses from FEO regional offices to a series of identical questions related to the energy crisis.

The questions dealt with federal regulations and policy, not state or local situations. Answers came from regional administrators or public affairs officers. In most cases, they were off-the-cuff replies, not formally prepared responses. The officials did not know their answers would be compared with those of other FEO offices.

Does the federal government now have the power to ration gasoline?

"No, I don't think so," said the information officer at the Atlanta headquarters.

"I think it does," said a New York office spokesman.

"It is possible that gasoline rationing may be implemented under the Emergency Defense Production Act," said the regional administrator in Seattle.

The question was posed to the FEO in Washington. "It doesn't have the power to ration," said a spokesman.

He called back.

"There is some confusion about that," he said. "The position is that we would prefer to have specific authority from Congress."

Who handles complaints about gasoline or home fuel prices?

"They contact the Internal Revenue Service," said the San Francisco office.

"They can either call us or the IRS," said the Philadelphia headquarters.

"This is the place," said a spokesman in the Atlanta office.

The FEO in Washington said such complaints should go to the economic stabilization section of the IRS.

All the regional offices agreed there was no way for service station operators to give preferential treatment to regular customers at the gasoline line pumps. But there was some debate about exactly what that meant.

"He can't discriminate, but he can go ahead in a way in which he can take care of his own regular customers," said the Atlanta office.

An FEO spokesman in Dallas reached for the regulations: "Let me read to you. If they have as a normal business practice before the mandatory allocation program a relationship of providing certain preferential treatment in connection with the sale of products to commercial accounts, or bulk commercial accounts, they may continue to serve people in that manner."

"Commercial people can get preferential simply because they are commercial, but there's got to be no discrimination," said the Boston office.

For the average citizen, just asking the regional FEO a question can be a problem. Ask the local information operator for the telephone number of the Federal Energy Office in Philadelphia: "There is nc Federal Energy Office."

Call the federal information operator: "I'm going to give you three numbers because all day we've been getting complaints they can't get through."

She supplies three numbers and signs off with a cheery, "Good luck." Recorded announcements reveal that the first two numbers are not in service. The third is busy, 14 times.

How can a service station operator apply for an increased gasoline allocation?

"He fills out a Form 17. It goes to the supplier. If the supplier OKs it, that's as far as it goes. He gets the stuff," said the Boston office.

"They make application to our office. A Form 17. We have them," said the Denver office.

"He goes to his supplier," the Dallas office said. "Sometimes the suppliers to require them to fill out a Form 17 just to have the guy's signature on a piece of paper. Or some of them have an affidavit or some of them just ask for a letter."

Mass. gas allocation to begin arriving

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts motorists may have a gasoline windfall for the first two weeks in March.

Consumer Affairs Secretary John Verani said Wednesday that the Federal Energy Office's most recent gasoline allocation of almost 13 million gallons will begin reaching the pumps within two days, but the deliveries will be spread out over about two weeks.

Should regular gas customers get preferential treatment? MDC staff member, Bob MacKay, Jr., reports on State House debate of this question. (see page 16)

This allocation, plus the regular allocations for March, should make more gasoline available for consumers during the next two weeks than at any time in the past month, Verani said, in an interview.

He said his office has begun notifying suppliers by telegram on how to distribute the latest allocation.

Verani said he is hopeful that regular March allocations from the federal government will be based on February's extra allotments so the state does not have to seek additional supplies during the month.

The latest 12.9 million gallon allocation will be distributed throughout the state, but 25 per cent has been targeted to metropolitan areas where supplies have been particularly low.

The allotment represents an eight per cent increase over Massachusetts' original allotment.

Originally, the state was supposed to distribute the entire 12.9 million gallons of gasoline by the end of the month. But Verani said this was logistically impossible, and that requirement has been dropped.

Many problems face extraction of shale

DENVER (AP) — The figures show billions of barrels of oil locked in the rocks of three western states. But don't count of seeing much of the precious stuff anytime soon.

Enormous engineering problems are involved in squeezing the oil from the shale and much of the oil may be too expensive to produce.

The government reports 16 million acres of deposits in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming, with a possible yield of more than a thousand billion barrels of oil.

Two-thirds of the vast tracts are considered of eventual commercial value, with yields of 25 gallons or more of oil per ton of shale. That could mean 600 billion barrels, the Interior Department says.

Proven world oil reserves — recoverable oil in liquid form known to exist in the ground — are currently estimated at 600 billion barrels, with about two-thirds of it in the Middle East.

"Even the most rosy predictions don't portray shale as a complete solution to the nation's energy troubles," said Dr. Charles H. Prien, head of the chemical division at the Denver Research Institute.

Prien sees the development of the industry this way:

First, prototype mines and processors that may produce a dribble of 40,000 or 50,000 barrels of oil a day about 1980. Next, an output of one million barrels a day in another few years. Finally, a tapering off of production by the end of the century.

Opponents continue battle against planned refinery

CONCORD N.H. (AP) — Opponents of a planned refinery for New Hampshire's seacoast spent much of yesterday commuting between legislative hearings here and a refinery presentation in Durham.

About 300 persons jammed a legislative hearing in the morning that was considering a bill to allow Durham voters the right to reject the $600 million refinery proposed by Olympic Refineries, Inc., of New York.

The hearing was continued in the afternoon. At night, Olympic consultants scheduled a four-hour slide show and lecture to present their plans to residents of Durham, home of the University of New Hampshire.

Rep. Dudley W. Dudley, D-Durham, said she was sponsoring the bill that would allow the town to decide its own destiny, according to the home-rule traditions of New Hampshire.

The measure would prevent the state from overriding local zoning regulations.

An Olympic spokesman said the firm opposed the bill. William Craig, a lobbyist, said the House committee was "burrdened" with deciding whether the refinery will be located in New Hampshire or another state. The company has indicated it would consider sites in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Durham was the only site under consideration in this state, the spokesman said.

The all time great deception of a red-blooded American

By HOWARD SPIER

The Nixon Administration has perpetrated one of the all time great deceptions upon the American People. I am referring to the case of the missing 18 minutes on a tape which was part of the White House collection subpeoned by Judge Sirica's Grand Jury Investigation.

During the time in which the lapse in the tape was discovered, Richard Nixon was very busy trying to restore his integrity and legitimacy as the leader of our Country. Naturally when he was told of the missing conversations he became very distraught. How could he now convince the American people of his righteousness? The tapes meant a great deal to Mr. Nixon for he hoped they would clear him of any wrong doing. Now the President was forced to manufacture a viable explanation in order to keep the American people from completely turning on him. As a result he did what any red blooded American would do - he hid behind a woman! Thus the President prepared his personal Secretary, Rosemary Woods, as his scape goat. He prompted her to tell the public and Judge Sirica that it was her own fault that there was an 18 minute lapse in the 'tape' in question. Everyone by now knows of that crazy explanation that was even illustrated by Ms. Woods while testifying in the court room.

Mr. Nixon was very pleased with this explanation and probably thought 'he had it made'. There was only one thing wrong - nobody believed him! He appealed to his biggest pushovers - the American people! Even they could not buy his story! Seeing that his popularity had once again plummeted further, he returned to his Oval room and tried to dream up a better explanation for the missing conversations - one which everyone could believe! Thus he did what any red blooded American would do - blame his misfortunes on the unknown. What developed was actually quite interesting. However, his story would only work if he had the right person to divuldge it. Rose already had her chance and blew it. And Ron couldn't be found. So Mr. Nixon turned dispairingly to General Hague. If anyone could convince the American public to believe this astounding story of the missing 18 minutes - certainly General Hague was that man. So Mr. Nixon persuaded the General to inform the American people that this entire episode was caused by the 'workings of mysterious forces'.

For awhile this explanation worked. Then some genius finally asked, "Can you define just what those mysterious forces are, General?" Baffled, Hague could not utter a single explanation. Thus, once again, the American people became further disenfranchised with the President.

Fearing that the end was near, and that his popularity was falling into the twilight zone, the President once again re-treated to his Oval office. It was as if there were 10 seconds left in the game and the President was trailing by 20 points. "What does one do in this situation?", asked the President, "Call on Dr. J.?" As it turned out, Dr. J. had an appointment in New York and could not be reached. So Mr. Nixon again did what any red blooded American would do, he turned to God for his final salvation. However, it seemed as though even God was looking the other way.

The question was, "How does one get in touch with God?" The answer came to the President in a flash. He realized like anything else, in order to see the 'top gun' you had to deal with a middle-man. Thus Mr. Nixon rushed to the phone and feverishly dialed his good buddy, Reverend Billy Graham. Mr. Nixon grew more and more impatient as the phone reached its thirteenth ring. If anyone could give God a call, certainly Billy was that 'anyone'. Thus the President beseeched Reverend Graham to help him with his problem. The results of this meeting were viewed coast to coast by millions. Reverend Graham captured a thirty second spot on television and calmly asked the American people to turn their heads towards the sky and pray. So, while everyone had their heads turned upward, Richard Nixon furtively stole away to the winterland, leaving only David Fry to take his place.

It was God's will...

Letters To The Editor

Weiss is nice

To The Editor:

This letter is really to Fred Weiss who writes columns for the Collegian He had another good one in Tuesday, and among some other thoughts he said he sometimes wonders if anyone out there really reads what he says. Well, I do, and have been since I read a column of his on October 15 of last year — coincidentally a significant day for me because it reminds me of a lot of political events in 1969 and 1970. That column was about Spiro Agnew and I thought it was especially good. I even sent copies of it to some people I know. Since than I usually check to see if Fred has a column in the paper and have saved some like "State of the Union" and "Trucked up in D.C.". Maybe I should have said something before, but it was something I "never gor around to doing" which is the reason a lot of thins don't ever get done that should be. So I think it's time for me to say so. I happen to think you're pretty good, Fred.

Power speaking stuff

To The Editor:

I was fortunate enough to read the "Residence Hall Organization Proposal" recently sent out from the offices of West, Dean, Fitzpatrick, Hampton, and Gage. After reading the twelve page memorandum I felt throughly disgusted. The administration seemingly wishes to put more of their say into the residence halls — the only place that we as students currently have control. Many of the ideas are great, like better facilities and upkeep — but just as many are merely "This is power speaking" stuff. Are we going to sit back and let them form a governing body over our private lives too?. If you can get your hands on this proposal do! Let us fight it while it still is only a proposal.

Children are sacrificed for jobs

To The Editor:

I am quite surprised to discover how many women on this campus are so "idealistic". Idealistic meaning that on the issue of abortion they believe that every fetus has a "right" to live.

A right to live what kind of life?

When a woman gets pregnant and knows that if she has to bear a child it will be an added burden to her and to society, what kind of life and love can she and that society offer to that child?

When someone can prove to me that every child born will have a good (and non-economically discriminating) education with decent facilities, when not one child will go hungry or cold, when mothers won't have to sacrifice jobs for children, or, as is more often the case, children for jobs because of limited or non-existent free, qualified day care centres — when society can take economic responsibility for those unplanned children, then I will believe that they do indeed have something to live for.

Let me clarify my stand a bit more. Abortion is an issue which I support in our times, in our given society. However, it would be wise for us to realize that abortion is not and cannot remain an end in itself. Its roots are deeply imbedded in social, economic, and political reform. But, again, the way I see it, there's a lot of reforming to be done before I can believe that an unwanted or unaffordable child will not suffer the ills of our society.

For now, let the woman who is in the position to take responsibility not only for her own body, but for the birth and health of her child, decide.

Please write to your Congressmen. Let's keep this right to decide alive.

Stand up and shout

To The Editor:

This note is directed to Joe Formica who wrote "Nixon is a person" to the editor.

I must thank him for reminding me that Nixon is human. Admittedly, I do forget that — and that is wrong. However, I would like to say something to justify (to some extent) my bad habit.

Mr. Formica states that Nixon is human - that he committed only a few sins in order to get what he wanted which is something we all do.

In my opinion a problem arises. At times, while we are being realistic about our corrupted state, we tend to cite an approval for it. I feel that we are learning that it is necessary to stand up and shout something we feel is wrong. That is exactly what many people did about the war in Viet Nam.

I would be interested in knowing whether or not Mr. Formica could apply his reasoning in good faith to leaders of different countries in different eras....

Maybe now I will remember more of Nixon's personal humility, but I will never, never use that to shut my eyes or quiet my voice to his action. Never.

Add/drop cards are edible

To The Editor:

Recently your paper has been carrying letters announcing the presence of groups on campus which up until now have received little or no recognition. Particularly after your recent article on "naturalness" entitled "Good riddance Euele Gibbons," Euele Gibbons Gastronimics Anonymous would like to reveal its efforts to unearth an alternate eating plan to dining commons, vegetarians and those indulging in refined sugar products.

One need only to look around one's self here at UMass to discover edible eating matter. However, one must be certain that he, she or whatever, knows what is and isn't edible. Therefore, we have compiled a list of some results from the early stages of our research for your benefit.

Dining commons trays are edible, but only the yellow ones.

Organic chemistry books are edible.

I.D. cards with T.O.C. stickers are edible. But, eat sparingly as sometimes morning-after side effects are prevalent.

The rubber tree in Berkshire Commons is edible except on every third odd-numbered Tuesday.

The reserve desk in the library, the television in the Blue Wall, the juke box in the Hatch and all Pinball Machines are edible.

Add-Drop cards are edible. (Do not bend, spindle or mutilate — just eat.)

No. 2 lead pencils are edible.

The Course Discription book is edible except for pages containing Food Science, Organic Chemistry and Bio-Chemistry. These pages tend to give the eater indigestion.

Last, but not least, all doorknobs are edible provided they are served with granola.

After dining, Euele Gibbons Gastronomics Anonymous recommends the wooden bench in front of the Student Union as an excellent toothpick.

Good eating. Ay-up!

Go west politicos

Politics is a topsy-turvy business. There are those who will tell you that there is no such thing as political science, since political events are too complex to analyze systematically. Everything that happens politically, they will tell you, happens by accident. It is impossible, they say, to study the attitudes and beliefs of the voters who determine the outcome of elections, because very few people hold any definite opinions about a broad spectrum of issues. But that's their opinion.

In my opinion, politics can be understood in a systematic way. Certainly, the events of the past year have made things difficult for those who desire to predict trends in our political environment, but it is possible to make some sense out of what appears to be a jumble. We can make some sense if we merely accept the fact that the jumble is not in our heads, but in Richard Nixon's head.

In November of 1972, the overwhelming majority of voters cast their votes for Richard Nixon, in what was generally believed to be a decisive repudiation of the ultra-liberal philosophy of George McGovern. In the 1968 election, 44 per cent of the voters cast their ballot for Nixon, and over 13 per cent cast their ballot for George C. Wallace. If one combines the votes of Nixon and Wallace, the 1968 election must also be considered as a decisive repudiation of liberal-domocratic philosophies. In both those elections, the "experts" sought to evade the crucial trend discernable in the results: the American electorate is swinging to the right.

After Nixon's re-election, many commentators begrudgingly acknowledged the conservative drift of voting behavior. But Watergate and the energy crisis, they will argue, have brought Americans to their senses. These commentators are obviously looking forward to November, with its predicted backlash against Republican congressional candidates.

Certainly, no one will argue that there is a devastating revulsion against Richard Nixon. And he certainly deserves it. But do Republicans deserve it also? Simply because they belong to the GOP along with Nixon?

Many will argue that the loss of Gerry Ford's House seat in a recent election is a harbinger of things to come. But they overlook that in another off-year election, Robert Bauman, a conservative Republican from Maryland, won a House seat despite efforts by his opponent to make an issue of his friendship with Spiro Agnew.

So the question is: will a revulsion against Nixon turn into a reversal of the conservative drift of the electorate? The answer is: No.

As far as the Republican party is concerned, there may be some setbacks in the upcoming election, but it must be remembered that the Republicans survived the corruption and scandals of the Grant administration and also of the Harding (Teapot Dome) administration. And the Republican standard bearer in 1976 is likely to be either Vice President Ford or Ronald Reagan.

So what about the Democrats? Are you looking forward to the Democratic Party's furtherance of the repudiated McGovern philosophy? No such luck. As it stands now, the most active hopefuls for the 1976 nomination are Senator Henry Jackson, whose chairmanship of the Senate's energy committee gives him millions of dollars worth of television exposure; and Governor George Wallace of Alabama. Yes, Wallace. You don't think he stands a chance of having any influence over the Democratic Party? You're in for a surprise. His long standing constituency remains intact, fortified by a strong sympathy appeal. With the right type of organization (ala McGovern in 1972), the Wallace movement may just move the Democratic Party back into the conservative camp. Then where will the liberals go?

The next boat to Shangri-La, perhaps.

Political trends

During the summer, a group of White liberals from within the boundaries of route 128, got together and decided they would have a caucus. They further decided that this caucus would be held to endorse candidates for the offices of Attorney General and Secretary of State within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The office of Attorney General will be officially up for grabs as soon as Bob Quinn gets around to announcing his obvious candidacy for Governor. On the other hand, the office of Secretary of State will not be vacant, but the hope of the caucus is to endorse a liberal candidate that will be able to defeat incumbent conservative Democrat, John Davoren.

It is the contention of this writer that the caucus organizers have completely forgotten about Western Mass. until recently and that a strong showing of citizens from Western Mass. could turn the tide of the caucus, and perhaps, the general outlook of Massachusetts politics. The commonwealth has existed too long while ignoring the views of a substantial portion of its population. This caucus could make a difference.

Let me explain. Although the candidates for Attorney General have announced no intentions to abide by the caucus decision, the candidates for Secretary of State (excluding Davoren) in the Democratic party have announced that they will support whichever candidate wins the caucus. This adds a great deal of credibility to the caucus, in the fact that now, the caucus is much more than a group of Eastern Mass. liberals getting together and spouting off how they think the state should be run. The caucus is now a binding convention with far-reaching affects.

Those affects could be better summarized by the three liberal candidates for Secretary of State; Paul Guzzi, Larry DiCara, and John Bussinger. It is these three candidates that will be in the forefront of this event. They are vying for an office that is usually occupied by old time bureaucrats who intend to retain the office until they die, and really do very little to alter the scope and purpose of the office. The incumbent, John Davoren is such a person.

To the contrary, the opposing liberals that will be presenting themselves at this caucus have based their campaigns on a wide variety of issues ranging from Public Campaign Financing to the general conduct of statewide elections. They will present themselves openly and announce the intended purposes of their candidacies. This will provide for a more than interesting, life or death struggle.

And Western Massachusetts should be there! The caucus will be held on March 23 in the Framingham Town Hall, and the caucus organizers have attempted to stifle student participation by imposing a one dollar pre-registration fee or a two dollar registration fee at the door. This could be considered almost openly hostile to students and underpriveleged groups, but there are efforts underway now on practically every major college campus to organize student participation in the March 23 Framingham caucus, despite the attempts to deny it. Here at UMass, a group headed by Ellen Regal is attempting to get students together in an effort to attend this caucus, and all those interested are urged to call Ellen at 546-6754.

It is important that students from Western Mass. should be present at this caucus, if the state is to be responsive to the needs of both students and Western Mass. citizens. If the caucus of March 23 takes place with the conspicuous absence of both these roups that is expected, then we had might as well kiss our state officials goodbye until the next election year. However, if students from Western Mass. can emerge as the worthwhile continuous force that they have the potential of being, we might see a new era of responsiveness in Massachusetts politics.

Civil disobedience

Last Friday, a member of a Montague commune confessed out of court to deliberately toppling a $50,000 weather tower on the site of a proposed nuclear power plant to dramatize the nuclear power safety and environmental debate.

Last night, the UMass Student Senate, while not condoning or justifying the action of Samuel H. Lovejoy, 27, in wrecking the tower, affirmed the right of an individual to commit an act of civil disobedience according to the dictates of his conscience.

Lovejoy pleaded innocent to a charge of malicious destruction later Friday morning in a Greenfield court, and hopes to use the pending trial as a forum to air the pros and cons of nuclear power production.

The Collegian cannot condone Lovejoy's action because it was violent and interfered with the personal property of another person -- in this case Northeast Utilities Service Co., the owner of the wrecked tower. But the Collegian supports the vote of the Student Senate last night endorsing civil disobedience as a viable means to effect change in society.

What Lovejoy did was wrong, although his motivation and the result of his action are both right and beneficial to UMass students who will share the risk and responsibility of having a nuclear power plant in their back yard.

We don't know what the risks are. What we do know is that those risks should be appropriately aired for everyone to hear before irreversible steps are taken to construct the $1.35 billion double nuclear power plant at the Montague site.

Two things strike us as unfortunate. First, that Lovejoy was unable to think of a non-violent way to dramatize the issues involved in the nuclear plant site debate. It is a comment on the press that we only respond when a violent act is committed.

Second, it is sad that we have been subjected to yet another example of a failure of the system to deal with a legitimate issue before it reaches the crisis stage. That Lovejoy had to make a gigantic, horrendous, symbolic act to get the attention of us all is a distressing comment on what it take to get real discussion of important policy in a pluralist society.

Not a "Kingfish"

To The Editor:

In my three years here I have become accustomed to the barely literate, frequently vulgar, intellectually incoherent commentary that seems to be the Collegian's idea of student journalism. Stupidity and incompetence are forgivable, or at least tolerable. What is not, is a stupidity married to smugness and arrogance, which, I am afraid is the only way one can characterize the Collegian's behavior in the incident of the Bromery cartoon.

In the first place it was extremely bad judgement and poor taste to print the thing. It was racist in the worse tradition of American journalistic racism coming out of the anti-black propaganda of the Reconstruction. If the Collegian staff cannot recognize this, then that is an index of how poor an education they have received. This is not to suggest that any criticism of a black by a white is racism as Reid Fishman suggests in his stupidly dishonest attempt to cloud the issue. Nor should Chancellor Bromery be exempt from valid and deserved criticism, or even caricature, any more than any other public figure.

No one is arguing those positions, and for the Collegian ho print only such patent distortions of the issue is to compound their initial vulgarity and poor taste with journalistic dishonesty, since I cannot believe that Fishman and Saidfer's were the only two letters they received on this subject. For, if this is true, then the general campus community is indeed as insensitive, boorish, and vulgar as the Collegian, and as a black member of this community I prefer not to believe that. Were there other letters?

Now, I should like to explain why the cartoon was beyond the bounds of decency and good taste. The depiction of the Chancellor was racist because it transformed him into a fat, jowly, processed-haired, "Kingfish" type (you remember him from Amos and Andy?) Now, I have met the Chancellor, and he is, as one would expect, a gracious and articulate man, not given to modes of speech like "Dat's me, folks." Therefore the cartoon, was on its face, racist and ugly, not to mention its pointless and crude lack of wit, because it chooses to operate on the level of racial stereotype. That is a certain and recognizable style of projecting onto a race of people, characteristics intended to insult and parody. If the editors of the Collegian can't see this, then they should be doing something else.

The graceless petulance of the Collegian's apology, and their subsequent attempt to obscure the issue is even more reprehensible than the original insult. But then, it does require a certain decency which is clearly beyond their personal resources.

The explanation that "well, they are only recapitulating the racism of their parents," is really not acceptable. It is of no comfort because presumably in 1974, this college generation is supposed to have had the benefit of social and educational experiences denied their parents. They do not even have the excuse of ignorance, and that is why they are so thoroughly despicable.

Racism after DuBois

To The Editor:

I have been reading the Collegian for many years and have rarely felt moved to write a letter about its contents--silly or serious. I must, however, comment on the racial slur against our Chancellor that appeared in last Friday's MDC (2-22-74). If anyone doubted the grim prognosis of David Graham DuBois concerning racism in our society, he had only to see this "darky" cartoon featured among your "funnies" to be convinced of its likelihood.

One cannot help wondering why this kind of humor at this time? I hate to think.

Chancellor Bromery deserves an apology. What you deserve I'm not certain, but I hope you'll get the education you so obviously need.

Racism condoned?

To The Editor:

On Friday, February 22, the Collegian's cartoonist gave way to his baser instincts and resorted to racism in his depiction of Chancellor Bromery. The massage of that cartoon was clear: It is strange to this cartoonist, that a "nigger" is at the head of this University campus. He knows, of course, that "niggers" are fat, slimy, illiterate and dumb-Jesus, is they dumb! It blows his mind to think of one of "dem" ever presuming to head anything. What a joke.

Needless to say, every Black on the campus was enraged by this cartoon. And, needless to say, the Collegian's staff heard about this anger. So what does Monday's Collegian bring us? More insults! The lukewarm, half cocked apology to Chancellor Bromery (and Black folks) which the Collegian's editor published was more infuriating than the cartoon itself.

"We regret this slur on an individual and a race. It is certainly not our intention to widen the gap between blacks and whites on this campus." the editors say, but then, in an inept rhetoric which talks of democracy and censorhips and freedom of the press, etc., they boast that they will continue to, uphold their cartoonist's, "or any person's, right to express an opinion in his own way on these pages."

Bull! The cartoonist is a part of the Collegian's *staff (our cartoonist the editors say) and not a guest cartoonist. This means that the staff condones his racism and therefore, shares it. Otherwise, the Black community would have received from the editors (who, of course, do not wish to widen the racial gap) a firm committment that no other such cartoon would be forthcoming from within their ranks. To hedge out of such a committment and to expect the Black community of this campus to be duped by such hedging is really an insult! The entire Collegian staff must believe that "niggers" are dumb and illiterate and as easily manipulated as cattle.

No way. The Collegian must bear responsibility for what appears in its pages by its staff. And "niggers" got sense enough to know that! If responsibility is what the staff of the Collegian wants, then they have got it in this instance. Accept it; and that means, of course, accepting the fact that when one of your staff insulted the Black community, you all condoned it. Otherwise, of course, he would be peddling his cartoons to another paper today.

For your insulting apology to the Black community, we the undersigned say, no thanks.

Censorship bogey

To The Editor:

I think the Collegian editors missed the point in their editorial on Don McGilvray's childish attack on Chancellor Bromery. Certainly the function of editors should not be to censor unpopular views, but rather to exercise their editorial prerogative to insure a responsible press.

The Collegian exercises this prerogative daily in deciding which "Letters To The Editor" are to be accepted and which rejected. Foolish and senseless letters tend not to get printed. Why, the, is the bogey of censorship invoked when Collegian readers ask that these same journalistic standards be applied to regular contributors as well?

Some minimal standards are necessary if the Collegian is to be more than just an uneven hodgepodge of sophomoric articles and cartoons.

It's not a question of censorship, but of mature journalism.

Is UMass turning inward?

To The Editor:

The last several years have seen a remarkable growth of interest on the part of Amherst campus undergraduates in contact with foreign students, in overseas study, and in participation in on-campus international cultural events. Student Senate support for these activities has helped to make them possible.

The Budget Committee of the Student Senate at its session last Sunday afternoon voted down the funding request of the International Programs Office. If this action is not reversed, next year the Amherst campus will be a far less cosmopolitan place.

1. Events such as the International Fair weekend, scheduled this year for March 16-17, China Night held last Sunday, India Night, and other foreign cultural presentations will be much more limited or will not be feasible at all.

2. The fifty or more American undergraduates who are able to study abroad each year because of Student Senate support towards their international travel costs next year will stay home. That crucial extra cost of travel they cannot afford. The wider experience and outlook they bring back to fellow students and to the campus at large as a result of foreign study will no longer be a vital element subtly broadening attitudes, stimulating curiosity, and raising students' personal and professional ambitions.

3. Out-of-state American undergraduate students wanting to study abroad because they are generally not eligible for scholarship support from the Financial Aid Office will find their only on-campus source of scholarships for overseas study eliminated.

4. Undergraduate foreign students who meet with an unexpected catastrophe will no longer be able to borrow money from the International Programs Office, the single source of loans available for them for the years the Senate has funded this loan fund. With relatives far away, with currency restrictions which prevent their getting money quickly drom home for emergencies, and with no other University office able to help, their plight will be critical.

The International Programs Office will appeal the Budget Committee's negative decision to the Executive Committee of the Senate. Should this appeal be successful, the IPO funding request will go to the full Senate. This letter is written in the hope that students and faculty committed to maintaining and even strengthening the international life of the Amherst campus through the kinds of activities so far funded by the Student Senate will make known their views to the Student Senate Executive Committee by noon Thursday February 28.

Barbara B. Burn Director
International Programs Office

Focus on real issues

To The Editor:

In response to the recent allegations of Collegian cartoonists Don McGilvray's intent to deliberately depict Chancellor Bromery "in the demeaning fashion of a Balck sterotype," as suggested in Monday's MDC Policy, I would like to chastise the irresponsible editor who wrote it.

I think it is personally demeaning to Mr. McGilvray that he was not even consulted by that particular editor before a decision was made to run the editorial--for only Mr. McGilvray knows the intent of racism of the cartoon.

Furthermore, I chastise the Chancellor for not approaching Mr. McGilvray and trying to smooth this matter over in a diplomatic fashion-rather than making it into a big black-white issue to further polarize this campus racially.

I condemn Mr. Bill Densmore, the managing editor of the Collegian for interpreting Mr. McGilvray's intent of "overt racism or disrespectful treatment" of a campus official.

Who the hell is Bill Densmore to speak in apolegetic behalf of Don McGilvray--who I trust has a conscience and mind of his own.

Furthermore I chastise all people across the campus for citing one little cartoon--AND MAKING A MOUNTAIN OUT A MOLE HILL!

Unfortunately indeed there is extensive racism on this campus, but why don't the Chancellor, Mr. Densmore, the Collegian and all those condemning Mr. McGilvray address themselves to the real symptoms instead??

Students are second class citizens

To The Editor:

I would like to take the time to make public to those who are not aware of it, a deceitful policy being followed by certain departments on campus--in particular, the math department at Arnold House.

The policy concerns the question of tenure-who will get it and for what reasons. (The usual criterion are given as teaching ability, research work and participation in committees etc.)

The Board of Trustees at U. Mass. have passed certain documents insisting that equal weight be given to the under-graduate teaching ability of any professor up for tenure. These have been circulated by the Provost's Office to all the faculty. Also, I was assured by the Head of the Math Dept. that equal consideration was given and will be given to a professor's undergrad. teaching ability as concerns his or her tenure position.

But....in apparant contradiction to what the Board of Trustees have decreed and to what I was told personally, among the people having been denied tenure at Arnold House are those held in the highest esteem by the students who know them and who have been the most willing to devote the greatest portion of their time and energies to the undergraduate student body.

Again, in contradiction to both the Board of Trustees' decree and to what I was told personally, Provost Gluckstern claims that it has been the "policy" that each department was allowed to decide on how much undergrad. teaching should be considered AND that the Math. Dept. has decided to give it NO WEIGHT!!! (In all honesty, I must admit to having received this information second hand, but I can vouch for it's accuracy.)

Obviously, someone is lying! Also, it appears that ALL undergrads are being blatantly and intentionally lied to when they are assured that they have some input into the decision-making processes at this institution, though perhaps not blatantly enough for some.

To accept this as I was advised, is to accept a second class citizenship or worse. The decisions and actions of the P.E.S. (the decision making body concerning tenure at the departmental level) have assaulted individualism. (Remember Mike Best and his roubles with the Economics Dept.) Their policy, which trivializes and dehumanizes the students, FOR AND BY WHOM THEY EXIST, is a disgusting affront to all students who believe they should have some input into the educational processes effecting them.

It becomes clear that the actions of the PES and the administration are done for other than altruistic reasons for the benefit of the student body.

I would like to quote a thought put to me, in disgust over the "disgusting duplicity regarding undergraduate teaching at this institution", by one of the professor's involved:

"It (fighting the PES) has taken alot out of me and I'm looking forward to leaving. Perhaps it is more healthy that I should look forward to the discovery of an institution which respects the activities of a scientist as a whole and respects the student as a person."

I have taken it upon myself to speak out and I hope other concerned students will voice their outrage and demand that the truth come out as to what position and importance an undergraduate really has at this TAXPAYER supported institute, so as to allow us and others a free and educated choice in selecting a school (not U. Mass. at present) which serves the interests of the students and not the administration's and-or the faculty's self-interests.

It is of tantamount importance that the student body demand to know Whitmore's official policy as concerns the undergraduate program. (Dean Edds and-or Provost Gluckstern would be the best people to see.) And if the official position is favorable (eg recognizes that the University exists for and by the student body and that the students DO count and have a say as to policy decisions effecting them), get it documented and hold them to it. Our education is a road that should be shaped, ultimately, by ourselves; with guidance from those with more experience than urselves for sure.....but not to the exclusion of our own needs and interests.

Play it again Tumbleweed

To The Editor:

The band "Tumbleweed" played at the Blue Wall once last semester and received a tremendous response. They also played there at the beginning of this Spring semester and despite the fact that they were missing a vital piece of equipment, their music was still welcomed.

Those who have seen "Tumbleweed" at the Blue Wall or elsewhere, know that the band can get the crowd moving.

The fact is that "Tumbleweed" is not scheduled at the Blue Wall this semester, the reason being that the people in charge of hiring bands at the Blue Wall don't know how enjoyable and well received "Tumbleweed" has been.

What the situation comes down to is this: anyone that would like to see "Tumebleweed" at the Blue Wall must make their feelings known in the paper, at the Blue Wall or preferably to the people on the hiring committee. I have no ties with the band - I just like to hear them play.

I would like to see "Tumbleweed" perform at the Blue Wall this semester. Where are the rest of you that enjoyed their tunes those nights?

Let's hear it!

Ugly person contest

To The Editor:

In response to the letter by Bill MacDonald et al in Tuesday's Collegian, Alpha Phi Omega, The National Service Fraternity, would like to make the following statement:

For the past twenty years or more, chapters of Alpha Phi Omega across the country have been sponsoring Ugly Man contests. In recent years, the term "man" has been used in the general sense, and both females and males have been free to participate. At the University, APO has run many Ugly Man On Campus (UMOC) contests, but in the past years interest has declined. If there really are people on campus interested in reviving this contest, please drop a note to:

Alcohol selling in dorms illegal, attorney says

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

In the past two weeks a number of special problems have arisen which University students can avoid with some warning.

1. Signing Contracts. Anyone who executes a contract for an installment purchase at a place other than a store may cancel that contract by written notice postmarked within three (3) business days. Most merchandise offered by intinerant salespeople will not be competitive with store sold products either in quality nor in service.

2. Travel. Be sure that the charter flight and vacation plans you make are with reputable organizations that at least have a history of bringing travelers back! Ask for references.

3. Discrimination. There are many varieties of illegal discrimination and some, unfortunately, which are not prohibited. If you feel that you are the victim of discrimination because of race, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, receipt of public assistance or because you have minor children, you should file a complaint with the Massachusetts Commission Agains Discrimination in Springfield or Boston.

This applies to discrimination in the sales of gasoline or oil products as well. The only sort of discrimination that the Attorney General has supported (regardless of the view you have of his position) is a positive preference for regular or contract customers at gas stations. Such a practice should, it seems to me, mean that for something like every ten customers one would be entitled to preferential sales under the Attorney General's ruling.

It does not mean and should not be interpreted as meaning that a class of people, such as students, can be discriminated against! If you feel that such a practice is in operation at any station, please let this office know with specific details.

4. Drugs. Massachusetts has new drug laws, to be sure, and they are relaxed in many respects compared with the past. However, Speed, so-called, is treated more harshly, almost like heroin, and only first marijuana offenses are given light treatment. It is not worth being paranoid about the fact that there have been several raids recently and all appear to be related to undercover police activity of one sort or another. It is reckless at the very least, however, to assume that the police are either disinterested or will not enforce the drug law.

If drugs of any sort experience a growth in usage it is reasonable to anticipate a firm law enforcement response. For persons who elect to use chemicals the fact remains that the law has very stern provisions and both courts and law enforcement agencies take a dim and determined view of most of them.

5. Shoplifting. It has become common for individuals convicted of shoplifting to pay a minimum of $50.00 and often $100.00 to the court as a fine or costs even for nickel-dime theft. Remember that if merchandise is put out of sight in a bag or coat or anything else inside a store that constitutes shoplifting even if you never try and leave without paying.

6. Breaking Leases. Anyone who has a lease should remember that breaking it is difficult and requires a number of specific grounds. Usually in May, such grounds are not provable. If you have a lease and expect to be unable to complete it, it is a good idea to seek subleasees at the earliest possible time. If all else fails, see the landlord about the problem first. You may be able to arrange a way out of the situation with a minimum of loss to yourself. If you do leave, be sure and return the key and tell the landlord that you have left or the unit cannot re-rented to save you later liability.

7. Tenancies without leases. Those tenants who do not have formal leases should be alert to the notice requirements of their tenancies. If you expect to terminate your tenancy before June remember that you must give notice during April or you may become liable for rent in June.

8. Beer and Wine Licenses. Organizations, dormitories and groups who plan Spring bacchanalias including any form of sale of beer and wine should be sure that license application is made with the Board of Selectmen of Amherst in time for the party. The Board only considers licenses on the first and third Monday of each month and the agenda is prepared the preceeding Friday. University permission is required and should be sought several additional weeks in advance, though the appropriate offical, Head of Residence, Area Director or Dean. The Selectmen will want to know who is going to be responsible for cleanup and control. Late applications will not be considered until the meeting two weeks later.

No license is available for sale of liquor and whiskey. There is no lawful system for selling alcohol without a license. Entry fees, tickets, chits, sales of the container, glass or cup are all unsuccessful in avoiding the statute. The safest procedure is for each person to bring their own. Almost every other method risks heavy fine, possible jail and a resultant problem in ever owning a license.

Sargent judicial nominees will have lasting effect

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent has now appointed 60 per cent of all Massachusetts judges, a record that may never be broken.

Last week's Executive Council confirmation of Rep. Cornelius F. Kiernan, D-Lowell, as special justice of the Somerville District Court and John P. Pollis of North Attleboro as special justice of the Attleboro District Court increased Sargent's judgeships to 157 out of a possible 261 appointments.

Sargent, elected lieutenant governor in 1966 and named acting governor in 1969 when Gov. John Volpe joined the Nixon administration, has been able to do this because of his length of tenure and a 1972 constitutional amendment which requires state judges to retire at age 70. Sargent was elected in his own right in 1970 and will in December become the first governor to fulfill a full four-year term.

The 1972 constitutional amendment created 38 immediate openings last year and caused many subsequent retirements. Many state judges used to stay on the bench into their 80s.

Sargent, a Republican, has been criticized by some members of his party for appointing Democrats to about one third of all judicial vacancies.

The governor's chief counsel, William G. Young, says his office mainatins 1,600 dossiers on prospective judges and that anyone who asks for consideration gets it.

But the list of Sargent's appointees is accented by former district attorneys, former assistant district attorneys, former assistant attorneys general, and former state legislators.

Kiernan was the 11th state legislator or former legislator to be confirmed in the past three years alone.

Young says about a dozen state legislators annually asked to be appointed judges.

The list of Sargent appointees also includes, among others, two former executive secretaries to the Executive Council, the governor's former chief secretary and his former legal counsel, plus a few former associates of former Gov. John A. Volpe.

Since Sargent became governor in 1969-when Volpe went to Washignton to become Transportation Secretary-only three judicial nominations have been rejected by the Executive Council.

Meanwhile, Sargent has named six of seven members of the state Supreme Court; all six members of the state Appeals Court, created in 1972; 25 to 46 Superior Corrt judges; 100 of 164 full and part-time District Court judges.

Sargent has named 13 of 27 judges in Probate Court; two of three state Land Court judges; three of six Juvenile Court judges and the two Housing Court judges in Boston and Springfield.

He has named the chief justice of every state court, plus 31 District Court clerks and six registers of probate.

They call it the Cage, and for those of you who've never been there, you've missed a large part of the UMass experience. But it's more than the Minutemen themselves that make the Cage such a trip. It's the cheerleaders and the band to lead the fanfare, coke and candy to cure the munchies, and WUMV, WMUA, and the Collegian to relive the two hours of madness.

But most of all, what makes the Cage what it is is the people in it. Whether you come with "a friend", or with "the guys", the phenomenon is the same -- basketballmania.

And after it's all over, check the scoreboard -- ten out of ten times, the Minutemen are on top. So ends another wild season at the Cage...See you at the Blue Wall!

EPA may order fines

BOSTON (AP) — The city of Providence, R.I., and two Rhode Island companies could face fines of up to $10,000 for failure to comply with sections of the Federal Water Pollution Control Acts, the Environmental Protection Agency said Wednesday.

The city and the companies have 30 days in which to comply with the EPA orders before they could be brought into court.

Providence is the first city in New England to be cited under the 1972 amendment to the water polution statute.

According to John A.S. McGlennon, regional EPA administrator, the city has failed to supply the agency with all information needed to write a permit for control of discharges from the Providence Wastewater Treatment Plant into the Providence River.

McGlennon added that Providence has told the agency they would supply the information shortly.

The Yawgoo Finishing Co. of Slocum, R.I. and the Hope Valley Dyeing Corp. of West Warwick, R.I. were the first industries in New England to be cited by the EPA.

Watchdog Organization raises $25,000 from contributors

BOSTON (AP) — The new state government watchdog organization, "Citizens for Economy in Government," has raised more than half of its money from six businesses giving the maximum suggested amount — $25,000.

The six are Boston Edison Co., the First National Bank of Boston, The John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., Massachusetts Mutual Life, New England Mutual Life, and the Norton Co. of Worcester.

The Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. gave $22,500 and an affiliate, Liberty Mutual Fire Insurance Co., gave $2,500.

On the list of 49 businesses contributors released by the group, the six account for 52.6 per cent of businesses giving and 53 per cent of all donations.

Donations of $10,000 or more accounted for 85 per cent of all the money raised; of $5,000 or more, 92 per cent; of $2,000 or more, 97 per cent.

The report lists 13 donations of less than $100 each, including one for $65 from the Electrical, Radio and Machinery Workers of Pittsfield, the only union listed as a contributor.

He said advertisements had attracted nearly 500 responses and a telephone campaign "by late March should show progress toward our goal c. 10,000 supporters."

Flynn testifies to House that reading crisis exists

Representative Raymond L. Flynn (D-Boston) in testimony last week before the Joint Legislative Committee on Education stated that House Bill 5029 is vital legislation which "would for the first time guarantee every child in the Commonwealth the right to read". This bill is co-sponsored by many Boston and Springfield legislators who understand the serious problems the lack of reading skills are having in their cities.

Representative Flynn has been conducting meetings with education leaders, teachers and parents over the past several months to help develop this much-needed and long overdue reading legislation.

"The reading crisis in Massachusetts is not just an education problem. It is a people problem. Thousands of Massachusetts citizens, young and old, are handicapped socially and economically because they cannot read. Jobs are unobtainable, opportunities denied, and a large segment of the people of this state never achieve their potential," stated Rep. Flynn.

"Reading is the gateway to learning for a child, yet we allow 35 per cent of our children to complete school with serious reading problem", Flynn continued.

"There is a remarkable statistical relationship between a person's ability to read and the degree of his success in adult life. Figures point out that 60 per cent of the convicts in Massachusetts prisons can read only at a 5th grade level and over one-half of our unemployed cannot fill out an employment application", Flynn stated.

Flynn's "right-to-read" bill would require mandatory classroom time for the teaching of reading skills, summer and after-school reading classes, tests to detect medical problems including sight and hearing defects and the updating and universal use of modern visual aids including closed circuit and public educational television.

New teachers, called reading specialists, would be hired and increased individual attention would be given each pupil in reading classes. Colleges and universities training teachers would offer advanced reading technique courses for teachers.

The bill also calls for the creation of a special reading evaluation task force in the Department of Education. "With a cooperative effort among the federal, state and local authorities, we can take a giant step in heading off many of the social problems such as high crime, growing unemployment and chronic welfare which have their root in illiteracy", continued the South Boston legislator.

"The decade of the 70's will see the 200th anniversary of our Nation. A most appropriate celebration of that event — a celebration that would honor the true spirit of the democratic concept, and recognize the fundamental importance ascribed to education from the beginning of our Nation, would be to secure for all of our citizens that right to read which so long ago made possible the feasibility of a democratic society and continues to undergird its strength. This legislation would give us that long over-due start," concluded Flynn.

Car sputter?

Don't blame it on the crisis

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — If your car goes sputter, cough, spit, or jerk don't blame it on "bad gas" during the energy crisis.

That's the advice from officials in the state's Division of Standards, who test 250 samples of gasoline a month, selected at random from stations all over the state.

"The gasoline is testing out now the way it always has in previous winters," said Edward Stadolnick, chief administration of the division.

There have been stories, and even some articles, to the effect that low-quality gasoline coming into the state can damage your engine, lower your mileage and make the car even harder to start.

Rubbish, says John Norton, supervisor of inspections.

"We had hundreds of complaints last summer about gasoline that smelled bad. Service station operators thought it had been contaminated with diesel fuel.

"It sure stank, but it passed all the tests,"Norton said.

The problem was that the gasoline had been refined in Europe, where gasoline does not contain compounds that would mask the odor. The distributor added some of those compounds and the complaints stopped.

Gasoline is a mixture of compounds, some of which vaporize at 100 degrees Fahrenheit this is what causes "vapor lock" in the summer and others become vapor-that is, boil-at higher temperatures.

One standard test for quality is the boiling point of the highest compound in the mixture, usually around 400 degrees. Laws of 37 states, including Massachusetts, don't permit the sale of gasoline with compounds that boil above 437 degrees.

Regular gasoline being sold today usually has its highest boiling point around 370 degrees-about that of high-test in normal times-since refiners are squeezing out every possible gallon of home heating oil, and the higher-boiling compounds go into the oil.

Reward awarded

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The New Hampshire Executive Council has voted to distribute a $10,000 reward it promised ten years ago for information leading to the conviction of the murderer of a 14-year-old girl.

The council acted at the advice of Atty. Gen. Warren G. Rudman who said that 40 per cent of the money would go to Dorothy Maheu, the next-door neighbor of Edward Coolidge, convicted in 1964 in the shooting death of Pamela Mason of Manchester, a babysitter.

Rudman said other informers who should share in the reward money were Bernard Sperro of Haverhill, Mass., Earl Harris and Joseph Bushey, both of Goffstown, as well as Gerald Gravel of Manchester.

Collidge was convicted of first degree murder and was sentenced to life in the State Prison. Last year, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the conviction and Coolidge later pled to second degree murder and is now serving a 25-40 year term at the prison.

Rudman also suggested that Manchester radio station WKBR, which had offered a $2,000 reward distribute it on the same basis.

Miss Mason was a babysitter hired by Collidge.

Yale club loses liquor license

HARTFORD (AP) - Mory's, an exclusive eating club at Yale University, will be unable to serve liquor for at least 21 days under a recent court decision, the state Liquor Control Commission indicated today.

The commission ordered the all-male club to surrender its liquor permit March 8 as a result of a state Supreme Court decision Tuesday that the club's board-election policy did not meet state regulations.

"They're going to be out of the liquor business until they get a new license-if they do," Commission Chairman George J. Montano of New Haven said today. The 62-year-old club must reapply for a permit and then wait 21 days for anyone to object formally to the commission, he said.

In the event of objection, another 10-day wait is required while the commission decides whether to conduct a public hearing on the issue.

A group of New Haven residents complained earlier that Mory's was discriminating against women by not allowing them to join the club. They probably will raise the objection again, according to Katheryn Emmett, an attorney representing them.

Although the Court of Common Pleas ruled that the commission had no grounds to revoke Mory's liquor permit on the basis of discrimination, Ms. Emmett, as she prefers to be called, said a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision could affect that ruling.

spring are aimed at "cashing out" various services and putting more

He said the present program would run out June 30, 1975. "We believe a three year extension will provide the opportunity to continue to evaluate the program and to make improvements," Thomas said.

Health plan needed, says H.E.W. Sec.

BOSTON (AP) — Caspar W. Weinberger, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said Wednesday"the time has long since come for a national health insurance plan from which no one is excluded."

Weinberger, addressing a regional seminar here, said he hoped to see passage of such a bill this year.

Although praising the "conciliatory attitude" of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., Weinberger said he would find it hard to compromise with Kennedy's national health insurance plan because it "junks the existing system" of private health care.

The biggest hand-up in passage of both the health insurance proposal and the department's $6.3 billion education budget is the "awfully sluggish" pace of Congress, Weinberger said.

The secretary added that the crucial issue in education is a federal effort to replace some 30 narrow and restrictive grant programs with several broader categories.

He said President Nixon is prepared to veto the Senate's version of the education budget which does not make those changes in grant categories.

Welfare reform is another major priority of the administration, Weinberger said.

"We believe the 1975 department budget will raise another million people out of poverty." he said, "giving them the means they need to bring their own potential into full force."

HEW Assistant Secretary Stanley B. Thomas Jr. said the agency will request a three year extension of the Head Start program, now serving some 379,000 pre-school youngsters across the country.

Weinberger also assured the audience that the Boston Head Start program is "not in danger. The children will not be allowed to suffer," he said.

Local Head Start officials are embroiled in what Weinberger called a "local dispute" with federal officials over how the governmental funds are to be used. Weinberger said he wants less money going into administrative costs and more into programming to directly benefit children.

Child care debated

STATE HOUSE, BOSTON — Foster child care for more than 6,000 children in Mass. is "a sham," according to the Director of the State Office for Children.

Director David S. Liederman made the statement Monday at a hearing before the House Committee on Ways and Means on the $2.7 billion proposed state budget for fiscal 1975.

The hearing concerned the $1.4 billion budget request of the Office of Human Services, of which the Office for Children is a part. The Office for Children is asking $20 million for fiscal 1975.

Many foster children are "pushed around" and treated "rough," Director Liederman said. He remarked that some orphans are rammed through anywhere from five to seven foster homes.

Director Liederman termed it "a shame" 750 orphans were eligible for adoption last year but could not be released to foster homes because the state "could not do the paper work to put them in the homes."

Rep. Joseph D. Early (D-Worcester) did not totally agree with Director Liederman. Rep. Early, vice-chairman of the committee, questionned the Director's remarks about children's services being "neglected" by other departments.

"We give those departments enough money to deliver services they're supposed to deliver, services they don't deliver and services to several other states," Rep. Early observed.

"The clients simply are not getting the services," Rep. Early added

In other comments before the committee, Secretary of Human Services Peter C. Goldmark remarked that costs for his office were not "skyrocketing" as some of his critics claim.

"Contrary to conventional wisdom," Secretary Goldmark said, "the average annual growth of the Human Services budget has been about 7 per cent while the budget outside Human Services has increased 15 per cent."

Secretary Goldmark also noted that his office's proportion of the budget has decreased. In fiscal 1971, Goldmark said, Human Services got 58 per cent of the budget while in fiscal 1975 it is receiving 51 per cent.

Is special treatment okay?

By BOB MAC KAY, JR.

A bill to prohibit gasoline dealers from serving only regular customers has been filed with the Mass. Legislature.

Rep. Anthony Michael Gallugi (D-Wakefield), who filed the measure, says it would make gasoline "a public commodity." The late-filed bill must be admitted to the Legislature by a vote of the House of Representatives.

The bill reads:

"No person shall discriminate against the public in the sale of gasoline, motor fuel, automotive lubricating oil, or any automotive product."

Penalties for first violations would be a fine of up to $500 or imprisonment for up to one year.

Second violations could be punished by suspension of the dealer's operating license for a maximum of three months, and third violations by license suspension for a maximum of one year.

The State Division of Standards would oversee implementation of the proposed legislation. The Division presently regulates the quality of gasoline sold in Mass..

Rep. Gallugi filed the bill, he says, because the Oregon plan of voluntary gas rationing is not working.

He cites continued long lines at gas stations and people's going to stations to buy gas on the wrong days.

Commentary; One problem with favoring regular customers is defining them. What is a regular customer? Gasoline dealers have varied answers.

And another problem is the present lack of coordination throughout the state in serving customers. Gallugi's bill would help establish rules for selling gas in every city and town.

But, would regulation serve the public interest? And, most importantly, whatever happened to the independent gasoline dealer's right to run his own business as he sees fit?

Parking policy

A questionnaire has been developed by a sub-committee of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women to obtain reliable information about the needs of the University community in the area of child day care. The data obtained will be used to make realistic recommendations to the appropriate Vice Chancellors.

The questionaire is available at the following locations: Everywoman's Center, North Village Day Care Center, North Village Resource Center, Bowditch Hall, Day Care Center at New Africa House, Commuter Affairs, Financial Aid Office, Student Activities Office, and the Campus Center Information Desk.

For further information, contact 5-0801.

Day care study

The Parking and Transportation Council, an advisory council to the Chancellor composed of representatives from the major campus governance groups, is currently considering policy recommendations for the 1974-75 parking-transportation system.

The Council would like to explore and better understand the prevailing attitudes of the users of the system and therefore is soliciting opinions from the campus community. Anyone who has constructive recommendations regarding next year's parking-transportation policy is invited to submit them, in writing, to the Council. All such recommendations should be sent to Professor Alan Gross, Public Health Building, before March 22, 1974.

Montague tower

MONTAGUE (AP) — A 500-foot weather observation tower is expected to be replaced next week, according to Northeast Utilities engineer Kirby Gearing.

Most of the tower toppled last week after its supports were loosened.

Police have charged 27-year-old Samuel H. Lovejoy of Montague with malicious destruction of personal property in the incident.

The tower has been used for testing weather conditions at the Montague Plains site, chosen late last year by the Connecticut utility for a $1.35 billion twin nuclear power plant.

Phone Co. profits rise

BOSTON (AP) — The New England Telephone Co. said in its annual report Tuesday that it had improved earnings and significantly improved service in the region during 1973.

William C. Mercer, company president, said that during 1973, earnings per share were $2.66, compared with $2.59 the previous year.

Mercer said all measures of telephone company service last year "were at levels that assured good service to customers" The company has sufficient capacity to handle potentially higher volume because of travel restrictions associated with the energy crisis, he added.

NORTHAMPTON VOLUNTEERS:

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.

It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war.

You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The way people feel about astrology often reflects their tastes in other areas. The hard-nosed skeptic who shouts, "It's all bunk!" usually lacks intellectual curiosity and makes a poor companion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money and extravagance could team up to create havoc. Know it and be factual. Take nothing for granted. Friend who appears to know plenty may be striving for attention. Refuse to be sold proverbial bill of goods.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accept responsibility. Cycle is such that you are aided by one with visions of expansion. Show that your own vision is not limited. Means perceive potential. And remember to laugh at foibles, those of your own and others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Long-range view is essential. If you limit yourself, you invite setback. Aries, Libra persons are in picture. Finish rather than begin--strive to get finger on pulse of public. Broaden appeal. Gain additional outlets.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New approach is most likely to succeed. Bring forth "hidden" creative talents. Permit yourself to express, to speak up, to imprint style. This is no time for modesty, false or otherwise. Self-assertion is key to fulfillment. Act accordingly!

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Trust hunch. One who pulls strings is willing to listen and be influenced. Follow through on call--see one in command. Bypass those who wish to rip you in maze of red tape. Aquarian may play significant role.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept. 22): Avoid trying to be something you are not--those who cannot accept you as you are should be cast aside. Be selfish in that you like yourself. Means stop apologizing to one who is "holier-than-thou." Revere your own feelings. If you care for yourself, you also can love others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emotions could "run over." Means what had been contained or thought to be under control probably is the opposite. You need outlet to express. You can find your way now if persistent. Throw aside barriers which are artificial, which have been made by jealous associates.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Change is necessary. One who does plenty of reading may be posing as an authority. Know it and do some personal investigating. Compile data. Avoid direct confrontations. Let others reveal their plans. Play your own cards close to chest.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Strive for harmony on domestic front. Make changes at home but, in the main, consider needs of loved ones. Put up with inconvenience, if necessary, to accommodate one who is sensitive and bruised emotionally. You make yourself happy by being sympathetic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): See in light of reality. Romantic notions are fine--in proper perspective. However, it is necessary now to define terms, to know what you are getting--and giving. Pisces, Virgo persons might figure prominently. Money picture is brighter than is apparent on surface.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Power play is featured. Let others understand that you are not without allies. Stick to principles. Watered-down versions will not suffice. Know it and act accordingly. Friendly advice now is worth real money.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have to give up something of apparent value. In actuality, you could merely be getting rid of unnecessary burden. Know it and be positive in attitude. Some who do plenty of talking are basing assertions on rumor. Know it--respond accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, creative, independent and stubborn. You also are sensitive, surprisingly shy--although not many would know it. Persons born under Leo and Aquarius are drawn to your sphere of activity. November could be one of your most significant months of 1974. You can make money with Aries but should be cautious in dealings with Gemini and Sagittarius. Family adjustments are featured this year--your lifestyle improves and so does health.

Smith insults women

To The Editor:

After reading the article concerning "Intramural Basketball" by Russ Smith (Weds. 2-27), several things caught my attention and should be brought to light.

These "girls" Mr Smith, if you hadn't noticed are women. Furthermore, these women are not dribbling idiots who engage in intramurals for the sole purpose of finding their good times exclusively in "falling down", "missing easy lay ups" or even accumulating "twenty foul shots once in awhile".

Men involved in intramural basketball may also fall down once in awhile or miss that easy lay up, but this is all within the fun of the game. So, Mr. Smith, next time you dribble on down to Boyden to observe the boys and girls falling down or missing easy layups, during intramurals, take a closer look at the individuals who are having their fun. You may discover that women as well as men can shoot for those baskets, and not only that... but remain on their feet throughout the entire game!!!

100 quite a feat

To The Editor:

I am absolutely amazed at the letter that appeared in yesterday's paper by Mr. Phil Rhoitman. Somehow I cannot believe that he is a coach here at UMass, or at any other school. I am also an avid sports fan and I appreciate a good game of basketball I or any other well-played sports event.

Why were 5000 students strong arriving before 5 and packing the Cage in an hour with enthusiasm? To thank and congratulate Al Skinner, Peter Trow, John Olson and Rick Pitino for their tremendous years of representing this school in a manner unmatched or unsurpassed by anyone and to show appreciation of their individual talents at a sport that has taken hours (too many to count) of hard dedicated work, for missing Thanksgiving and Christmas vacation with their families so they could practice is why the students took this last opportunity to see these guys perform their feats and to thank them for the last time.

In the preliminary contest the crowd saw a well played game between the J.V.'s and Thanes Valley. With a little more than two minutes left to play the JV's went over 90 point mark and the fans went wild, shouting and rooting for that 100th point, not because it would have meant winning by 31 but because it would mean a sign of a major accomplishment — a sign of a well-played game. You ask me why that is? When was the last time that the JV's scored 100 points? When was the last time the Varsity scored 100 points, Mr. Rhoieman? Take a look at the scores in the Sunday morning papers and see how many schools across the country scored over 100 on Saturday!!!! Is it still not a major accomplishment?

So I say to you that the 100 points that myself and the other fans were cheering for was not for the humiliation of the fine Maine team, but a fitting end to four of the greatest years of UMass history. To me it was a sign of a team pulling together for one goal. My feeling would be the same as yours had the starting five remained in the game and scored over thirty points each and has beaten Maine by 100 points. The way the team was playing they certainly could done this. THAT WOULD HAVE BEEN POOR SPORTSMANSHIP AND UNNESSARY HUMILIATION!!!

If this had been the case I would not have stayed around cheered for that 100th point. I would have been long gone, but there was not much more Coach Leaman could do. He had the reserves in from midway throught the first half. Like yourself, I too, was disappointed at the fans throwing things on the court. This was poor sportsmanship on the part of those people but what can you expect from a campus this size?

This is why wanted that 100th point. To symbolize the great end to the great Class of 74!

WEREN'T YOU TRYING TO REACH THAT MEANINGLESS 100TH POINT??????????????????????????

Stephan O'Conner

Former Bruin signs with Whalers

BOSTON (AP) — The New England Whalers of the World Hockey Association announced Wednesday night the signing of forward Fred O'Donnell, who balked at being traded by the Boston Bruins to the Vancouver Canucks in the National League.

Whalers general manager Jack Kelley said that O'Donnell, 24, had been signed to a multiyear contract, effective next Oct. 1. Kelley said negotiations had been under way before O'Donnell was traded by the Bruins to Vancouver early this month.

"I'm very happy to be joining the Whalers," O'Donnell told a news conference. "They have shown me a first class organization. Just the over-all situation, my personal life and such, made the decision for me."

Probation enough

To The Sports Editor:

Apparently Mike Brophy would like to be in charge of conducting top twenty polls for the two major wire services in both football and basketball. (re: Exclude the Violators, Feb. 27) While some, Brophy included are entitled to their own, "straight," opinions on the matter, I would like to let them know where they are so hard-headed.

Granted, the University of Oklahoma Sonners were placed on athletic probation by the NCAA for a period of two years. However, this act was not the fault of the players on the team. And it was the players (as in the case of the North Carolina State basketball team) who went out, under a lot of pressure, on the field of battle, and helped their respective teams compile records worthy of national recognition. It was the Oklahoma football team who deserved to be ranked number two in the country. Polls are made on the basis of won-loss record and not by whether a team is on probation or not. It is the playing of the games that counts first and foremost.

Enough has already been done to these teams - and I agree that probation is a just punishment. However, to take away a high ranking that the players have overcome to earn (at Oklahoma quarterback Kerry Jackson was declared ineligible because someone else tampered with his high school transcript) is a downright shame. Oklahoma has one more year of probation (they won't be allowed to play in a bowl game) and for the next two seasons, none of their games will be allowed on television.

I say to hell with all this added bull. Enough has already been done to the players by placing a team on probation. Taking away a ranking they have struggled hard to earn is just going too damn far. Case closed.

BB clinic to be held Saturday

Coach Bergquist and the UMass baseball squad will conduct the 7th annual version of their instructional baseball clinic Saturday that every year provides baseball coaches and players from around Western Mass. a chance to get a look at some of the latest in coaching theories and playing techniques.

Stan Benjamin, northeast area scout for the Houston Astros will be on hand to talk about and demonstrate some of the basics of bunting and hitting, while Archie Allen, the noted baseball coach of Springfield College for many years, will talk on baserunning.

Members of the 1974 version of the diamond Minutemen will be on hand to demonstrate various skills and to talk with the younger ballplayers who attend the clinic.

Jeff McKay, the new JV baseball coming season, will deliver a short talk on "motivation".

Although there is a slight admission charge to the general public, a current UMass ID will get any student in to the event who wishes to attend. The talks start at 9:15 and run until 1 that afternoon.

Marlboro warm-up for Marathon

By Ken Cormier

The traffic in the center of Marlboro, Massachusetts stopped at noontime Saturday, as 150 people poured out of the junior high school onto Main Street for the start of the Cullinan Ford Last Chance Marathon. Onlookers stared curiously at the assembly of variegated dress which milled about, ran in place, or stiffly waited in the thirty-eight degree weather. Stiff wind gusts of up to forty miles per hour ripped into the group.

The first five miles was like a picnic, as a tail wind drove the runners along with little effort. The circular marathon route (a standard 26miles, 385 yards) created a side wind after five and a half miles, and the lighthearted air of the runners disappeared. Their bodies swayed under the staggering blasts of wind which were increasing in their occurrence and duration, and the temperature began to drop. Icy blasts swept off the lakes along the route and sand buffeted the runners' faces.

Then the hard part came. The thirteenth mile through the eighteenth were into the wind. Heads bent into the wind, the marathoners' eyes became glazed and their noses dripped in protest. The marathoners swore, pleaded, and prayed to the Wind Maker, all to no avail. The headwind was jaded into a side wind as the marathon circuit headed north and the temperature kept dropping. Their energy spent, they finished, 121 of them. Of the finishers, almost one hundred qualified for the Boston Marathon (slated for April 16) with times better than 3:30.0. The winner of the Last marathon was Ken Mueller with a time of 2:32.31.

Among the Amherst delegation to qualify was Steve Gardner, Mark Elmer, Dave Eiben, and Charlotte Lettis. Each of these qualifiers finished within one minute of each other at three hours and eight minutes. Charlotte's husband, Tom Derderian, who has already qualified for the Boston Marathon with a time of 2:26.0, paced the Amherst group for the twenty-six miles. Two other Amherst residents to finish were Mary Cushing and Ed Sandifier at 3:26.0.

Marathoners are a rare breed of people who come from all walks of like, and all ages. The one thing that they have in common is a passion for completing the impossible tasks they have set for themselves. Marty Cavanaugh, a 76 year old man finished the Marlboro Marathon in 4:56.10.

Tourney bids to be announced today

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

Nine teams will get the call Thursday morning to join the fight to give college basketball a national champion other than UCLA for the first time in eight years.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association was scheduled to invite nine at-large teams to its postseason tournament via telephone calls at 9:30 a.m. local time.

The National Invitation Tournament also was to begin issuing invitations Thursday to the annual affair at Madison Square Garden beginning March 16 and ending March 24.

Considered shoo-ins for at-large invitations to the NCAA tournament were second-ranked Notre Dame and eighth-ranked Marquette.

Other candidates were 11th - ranked Pitt, 12th-ranked Providence, No. 14 South Carolina, No. 16 Creighton, Boston College, Maryland-Eastern Shore, Massachusetts, Rutgers, St. John's of New York, Syracuse, Cincinnati, Dayton, Detroit, Marshall, South Alabama, Southern Illinois, Houston, Oral Roberts and Hawaii.

A school that gets an at-large bid has 30 minutes to accept. "I can't remember anyone declining," said an NCAA spokesman.

The nine at-large teams will be joined in the NCAA tournament by winners of 16 major conferences, including the Pacific-8 in which UCLA currently is tied for first place with Southern California.

First-round NCAA games will be played March 9. The four regional champions will advance to the national semifinals March 23 at Greensboro, N.C., and the championship game will be played at Greensboro March 25.

The NIT in recent years has drawn runnerup from several major conferences but this year it will be hampered by the debut of another tournament-the Collegiate Commissioner's Association.

The CCA has agreements with eight conferences to send teams to a tourney to be held March 14, 15, 17 and 18 at St. Louis. The teams will be determined after conference titles are decided.

The Big Eight, Big Ten, Missouri Valley and Western Athletic conferences will send teams to the CCA, and four remaining teams will be picked from the Mid-American, Pacific-8, Southeastern, Southern and Southwest conferences.

Braves beat Celtics for first ever

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The Buffalo Braves, led by Bob McAdoo and former Providence College All-American ERnie DiGregorio, defeated the Boston Celtics for the first time after 22nd consecutive losses 122-104 Wednesday night in the National Basketball Association.

Boston captain John Havlicek, the team's leading scorer who suffered a leg injury in a victory at Detroit Tuesday night, watched as the game in street clothes and Buffalo capitalized on his absence.

The Celtics spurted to a 34-22 first period lead, but the Braves out-scored them 37-18 in the second quarter as Randy Smith hit for 15 points.

McAdoo, the league's leading scorer, finished with 37 points and DiGregorio 20. McAdoo, who had 15 rebounds, and DiGregorio, who had 15 assists, each scored 10 points in the final period as Buffalo shook off a Boston challenge which had closed the gap to four points.

Dave Cowens led the Celtics with 23 points, while Jo Jo White had 15. Cowens also grabbed 23 rebounds.

NL gets DH-for exhibitions

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — National League baseball clubs will be permitted to use designated hitters for the first time this spring when they play exhibition games on the road against American League teams and the NL club manager agrees to the experiment.

In a bulletin sent Tuesday to managers, general managers and umpires, Charles Feeney, National League president, spelled out the change in policy from last year when designated bitters were prohibited for either club in interleague spring training exhibitions.

Under the designated hitter rule adopted by the AL last year on a trial basis, a 10th player is in the lineup as a batter only, in the place of another player.

Feeney's bulleting said:

"The designated hitter rule may be used in games when the American League club is the home club in spring training games only, but the National League manager must give consent...

"If such consent is not given, neither club shall employ the rule.

"The designated hitter shall not apply for either club when the NL team is the home club."

Rote wins, Rose steals show

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

ROTONDA, Fla. (AP) - Kyle Rote Jr. proved to be the superstar of the 1974 superstars, but some sort of medal should have gone to Pete Rose, the scrappy outfielder of the Cincinnati Reds.

It could have been inscribed: "The man who tried the hardest and got the most out of his equipment."

The stocky, 32-year-old baseball star, in some respects, was the real sensation of the two-day, 10-sport test of versatility involving 12 of the world's most famous athletes.

Until last November, he had never swung a tennis racket. Yet he stunned the tournament by beating the tennis favorite in the first round, Karl Schranz of Austria, and coming within an inch of erasing Jim McMillian of the basketball's Buffalo Braves, who says he's played tennis all his life. Schranz, who plays top-flight tennis, was dazed.

"He just kept running all over the court and pushing the ball back," the Austrian skier said. "He played like a girl, but he was terrific."

"Tennis is a good game - I have good reflexes at the net," Rose said.

He also entered the golf competition. When he teed the ball up, it marked the third time in his life he had been on a golf course.

He needed a par on the last hole to beat John Havlicek out of fourth place. He got it. He swings a golf club with a baseball grip.

"My specialty is determination," Rose said. "I guess you'd call me more of a competitor than a great athlete." Pete also entered the weight-lifting.

"I'd never lifted weights before," the 5-foot-11, 195-pounder said, "so 20 minutes before the competition I went to this weightlifting expert and he showed me a few tricks."

Rose lifted 200 pounds and placed fourth. He was barely beaten out of the finals in the 100-yard dash. He proved an expert cyclist and was one of the best on the tough obstacle course.

"This is a competition for the hard bellies," Rose said. "Look at me - I've been on the banquet circuit for the last three months. I'm soft. The football guys are coming off a hard season, the basketball guys are in the midst of their season and fellows like Bob Seagren and Kyle Rote have been working out for three to six months. "I wish this came along after I'd played a 162-game season - it might be different." Now Rose goes to the Reds' training camp at Tampa.

NO. 1 SUPERSTAR—Kyle Rote Jr. fooled everyone by winning The Superstars

ABA plots to snare Walton

DENVER (AP) — Although San Diego possesses the negotiation rights to Bill Walton, each of the other nine American Basketball Association teams have a shot at signing the UCLA star, according to Denver Rockets Coach Alex Hannum.

"I can see nine teams standing in line to get a crack at him," said Hannum, who is also the Rockets' president.

Under current ABA bylaws, a team can give any other franchise a 48-hour notice that it intends to contact a particular player off that team's negotiation list, then has a period of two weeks to sign the player.

Consequently, all of the other ABA teams could make a legitimate claim for Walton some 48 hours before he plays his last scheduled collegiate basketball game.

Hannum said the Rockets were in an unusually good position to try to draft Walton. Denver has a special bonus draft selection as a result of the settlement which allowed Spencer Haywood to jump his Denver contract two years ago and sign with Seattle of the National Basketball Association.

The bonus had been expected to be exercised upon the merger of the ABA and NBA.

The bonus selection would be the first by an ABA team only, and would precede any regular draft selections. denver would have to flip a coin with the NBA franchise which possessed the No. 1 pick in that league, however.

Since the merger of the two leagues is no longer a contingency, Hannun said Denver can exercise the bonus pick at any time.

Asked why the Rockets did not use the privilege to select Walton last spring, Hannum said, "Simply because we thought the chances of signing Walton at that time were negligible. For us to use that pick then would mean we would now have the same rights to Walton that San Diego has."

Walton already has turned down pro offers reportedly in the $2-million-plus range and has stated he would prefer to play with a California franchise.

There is some speculation that his tender knees would not hold up over an 80-to-100 game schedule, but Hannum agrees with those who feel the gamble is worth it.

Lame duck Whalers win, regain first

BOSTON (AP) - John Cunniff, recently recalled from the minors, scored two goals and the New England Whalers regained sole possession of first place in the World Hockey Association East Wednesday night with a 5-3 victory over the Toronto Toros.

Cunniff, a former Boston College star, hiked his scoring production to five goals in four games since being recalled from Jacksonville of the American Hockey League.

He broke a 2-2 deadlock by firing a 25-foot rebound shot into an open net late in the second period and then tallied the fifth goal on a partial breakaway in the third period.

Tim Sheehy, Al Karlander and Mike Byers were the other New England scorers as the Whalers moved two points ahead of Toronto in the East Division race.

Pat Hickey scored two goals and Gavin Kirk contributed one for the Toros, who blanked the Whalers 2-0 in Toronto Sunday night.

Visa trouble...again

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Luis Aparicio failed to report on time Wednesday at the Boston Red Sox spring training camp here as Manager Darrell Johnson greeted 40 players at the first full squad workout.

Johnson said Aparicio was held up in his native Venezuela because of visa trouble and was expected in camp Thursday or Friday.

Juan Marichal and Orlando Cepeda also were absent from WEdnesday's workout but were expected Thursday, Johnson said.

Lea-men ram Rams ...another rout

By STEVE DeCOSTA

NEW YORK - UMass 93, Fordham 66.

If it was an omen of things to come, it was certainly a good omen.

The Minutemen neared perfection in nearly all the aspects of basketball last night, as they convincingly defeated the Rams of Fordham, 93-66 at Rose Hill.

Granted, it wasn't Madison Square Garden, and there were only 2500 people in the stands (1000 less than capacity) but any win in New York is a big win.

The Minutemen played their best road game of the year as they seemed intent on showing off their talent to Pete Carlisimo, chairman of the NIT selection committee.

The victory was the result of a well-balanced team effort. Jack Leaman termed the contest "Outstanding" from his point of view and called it "the best all-around performance I've had at Massachusetts."

The five starters for the Minutemen reached double figures, led by Al Skinner with 24. John Murphy finished with 20, followed by Peter Trow who finished with 18 points while, according to Leaman, "doing a great job of beating the press."

UMass broke the game open early as they snapped an 8-all tie with five straight hoops to go up by 10. The Rams never recovered and pulled no closer than 8 as they trailed by 12, 42-30 at the half.

Daryl Brown led Fordham with 24 points and 12 rebounds, but six of his hoops came when the outcome was no longer in doubt. John O'Neil chipped in with 18.

The Minutemen continued their torrid shooting from the field as they hit for 54 per cent of their field goals, including 63 per cent in the second half.

The Rams actually outshot UMass, but a strong press that forced numerous turnovers and individual brilliance in the man-to-man defense held down the number of shots Fordham could get off.

Indicative of the type of defense played by the Minutemen was the fact that Fordham turned the ball over 18 times, compared to seven for the winners.

The wait for word on a possible tournament invitation could end today. Both the NIT and NCAA selection committees meet this morning.

The NCAA's board will invite major independants to fill out their field, while the NIT will send out their initial bids.

UMass will play somewhere, that is almost a certainty. Now it's only a matter of where, when, and who. The answers to these questions could come today.

(Staff Photo - Steve Smith)

Peter Trow, shown dribbling against two University of Maine Black Bears, scored eighteen points last night in the 93-66 UMass victory over Fordham, and did a great job of beating the press. After such a convincing win in Fun City the Minutemen should almost be shoo-ins for a tournament bid.

Female gymnasts beat UNH, SS

By CANDY GROSS

The only bright spot in last night's gymnastics tri-meet against Salem State and UNH was the performance given by the UMass women, as they outshone their competitors with a final score of UM 94.02, SS 60.93 and UNH 50.50. It was another case of UMass capturing at least the top three places in all events.

Margie Combs snatched first place on vaulting with an 8.9. Teammates Marian Kulick and Heidi Armstrong took the next two places with 8.47 and 7.97 respectively. Both Salem and UNH placed only one girl in the sevens with a 7.57 from Michelle Plaisance (SS) and Sue Gould's 7.13 (UNH).

On bars, senior Betsy East dismounted her way to a winning 8.27 Heidi Armstrong placed second with 6.3, freshman Carol Rogers followed with a close 6.23 third and Marian Kulick placed fourth. UNH and Salem failed to attain even one score of five points.

The halfway score of UM 46.14, SS 32.51 and UNH 30.34 indicates the overwhelming difference in the competitive levels of these teams.

UMass' beam team took the top four places led by Jodi Hitt's 8.1. Heidi Armstrong, showing strongly once again earned a 7.77, followed by the steady performances of Marian Kulick and Gail McCarthy.

Floor Exercise brought a welcome performance from Margie Combs who, upon landing her back layout, found she had captured first with an 8.97. Smiling her way to a well deserved second place was Marian Kulick with an 8.17. Alicia Goode, showing some stronger tumbling, captured third with 7.8.

Salem State's Joanne Gentleman took fourth with some cleaner tumbling than exhibited by other competitors of the two away teams. The event score for floor came to UMH 12.36, SS 17.09, and UM 24.94.

Both UNH and Salem lack the needed higher level moves on all events. This was a primary problem in their routines, which added to the drastically lower scores in last night's meet.

Attendance last night was somewhat lower than at previous meets. Hopefully, the last home meet this Saturday will take place before a capacity audience as it will be honoring the team's four seniors. Southern Connecticut, being one of the higher ranked schools in the East, should prove somewhat more interesting for the spectators.

ON AND OFF THE BEAM....Last night's individual scores may seem somewhat different, in odd numbers as they ended. This resulted from the absence of one of the four judges. Usually, to arrive at a score, the high and low judge's score is thrown out and the middle two are averaged. Last night it was necessary to average all three scores resulting in the peculiar points....Graduating seniors — 'Ms. Vex', 'The Beast', 'Co', 'Legs Weak' - look for the story in Friday's paper.

An unidentified Northeastern defenseman is a picture of dejection in sharp contrast with UMass' Kevin Conners (22) who has just scored the first Minuteman goal in last night's 6-6 tie. The win should set the UMass vessel upright as the Minutemen start the playoffs Saturday night.

Blade boys rally; tie NE in overtime

By BILL BALLOU

Throw away the thesaurus; find some new adjectives and make up a couple of new adverbs, because the words that could describe this one ain't been uttered yet.

"Incredible" is about as close as you'll come, and that's pretty tame when you're trying to comprehend the wild finish that highlighted last night's 6-6 tie with Northeastern.

Only about 700 fans saw the Minutemen break a 12-game Division One losing streak, but none of the 700 even considered leaving early.

Most of the thrills were packed into the last fifteen minutes of hockey, a span of time that included the last seven minutes of the third period (in which five goals were scored) and the ten minutes of scoreless overtime.

Things were moseying along rather dully through most of the game. The Huskies, on goals by Duncan Finch and Bob Desjardins led the Minutemen 2-1 after two periods. UMass had the better of the play, but Kevin Conners' first period goal was all they had to show for it.

Then, early in the third period Northeastern broke it open, or at least it seemed that way at the time. Evan McPhedran fired a 35-foot slap shot past Chick Rheault at the 3:00 mark, but Mike Merchant got it back for UMass on a short stuff at 4:59.

But linemates Jim Martel and Dave Sherlock hit for goals at 5:44 and 9:12 respectively and the UMies were dragging.

Then things began to happen.

First, with about eight minutes left in regulation, Jack Canniff took Rheault out to give John Binkoski some ice time.

Then, at 13:26 Jim Lyons scored on a breakaway to make it 5-3. A "so-what" goal if there ever was one, it seemed. But at 14:37 Tim Howes fired in a 40-footer, his fifth goal in his last four games, bringing the UMies within a goal. Binkoski was playing superbly in goal and the Minutemen were now flying, so it was no shock when Lyons' weak shot from the left win broke through goalie Bill McKenna just twelve seconds later to tie it up at 5-5.

But the insanity hadn't run its course yet.

Billy Harris was sent off for tripping at 15:38 and, shades of New Hampshire, Northeastern scored. Dave Sherlock tipped a shot past Binkoski at 16:35, putting the Huskies ahead again. But not for long.

Almost exactly one minute later, at 17:36, the Minutemen tied it up. This time the hero was Jim Lynch, whose vicious 30-foot slap shot had new goalie Tod Blanchard (he had played the first period) ducking. It zipped over his shoulder and the score was 6-6.

Sudden death wasn't quite the same, but both teams had chances to win it. With Rheault playing goal again, UMass held off the Huskies. Their best chance came with only about two minutes left when Sherlock went in alone only to be broken up from behind on a diving play by Brian Mulcahy. A bit earlier Steve Nims had walked in alone but lost control of the puck on his stickhandle.

So it ended 6-6 and ended a 12-game losing streak to Division One teams, as well as ending the Minutemen's regular season. They finished at 9-11-1 overall and 9-6 in Division Two.

Noah Webster, where are you?

INCIDENTALLY: UMass outshot the Huskies 45-39....The last Division One team UMass beat was Northeastern back in 1972....16 of the Huskies were Canadians....Mike Ellis, out of action since before the Yale game is scheduled to return Saturday night. His replacement, Bill Mintiens, played his best game of the season last night....

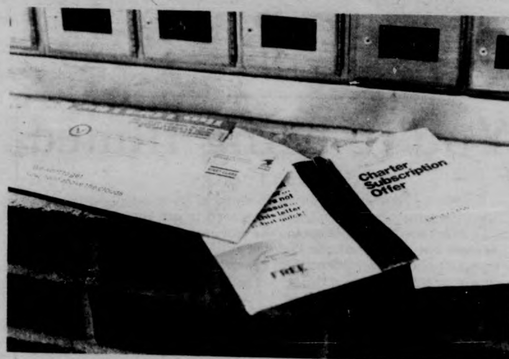
Student addresses are big business



(Staff Photo-Hal Henyak)

Even if the only other missives you receive are from ma and pa, it looks as though junk mail will never stop flooding your dorm mail box.

By SHERMAN BOYSON
MDC Staff

University addresses of students at UMass are commercially available to any company that is willing to pay for them.

That is the conclusion of a week long Collegian investigation into the process of how mailing lists of UMass students for commercial use are compiled and distributed.

The investigation was instigated when the U.S. Naval Aviation Office sent out recruitment material to almost all male students of UMass. The Navy had obviously gotten a list of student names and addresses.

Director of Public Relations, Dan Melley, said that "the list of student addresses are not given out to non-campus groups. Campus organizations, with the permission of the Dean of Students, may, however, have the list."

Melley suggested that the Navy's list "could have been easily compiled by buying a telephone directory at the university store for 25 cents." He also suggested that a campus organization such as ROTC or the veteran's organization, could have supplied the Navy with a copy of the list. Calls to the two groups revealed that neither had given out copies of the list.

Melley mentioned that "the Navy had requested the list about two years ago, but were turned down."

Telephone calls were made to the Navy to determine exactly how they compiled the list. The recruitment material listed a Pelham Manor, New York address as being the center of the recruiting office. There was, however, no such listing of an office in the New York phone directory.

Through questioning of the Naval station at New Rochelle, it was learned that the Pelham Manor address belonged to a non-military company who had been contracted by the Navy to send out the recruitment material. The company, Listsax Computers Services, told the Collegian that they had gotten their mailing list from Chapman Direct Marketing Company of Manhattan. The spokesperson for Listsax suggested that a William Sutherland be contacted at Chapman.

Sutherland would not talk to the Collegian. Instead, the call was transferred to a Robyn Mendoza. Mendoza was very reluctant to answer any questions. She said that the list was "commercially bought, but I cannot reveal the source." She then informed the Collegian that "if you want any more information, you will have to contact Grey Advertising in New York City." It seemed that Chapman was only handling the account for Grey Advertising.

When pushed for more information, Mendoza said "the lists are commercially bought." When asked if they were compiled from telephone lists, she replied "definitely not. Lists of student addresses are commercially available from registrar offices at universities".

This statement was directly refuted by UMass Registrar Ralph Jones and Dean of Students William Fields. Dean Fields said "the only non-campus groups that get access to the list are public service groups. Definitely, a

Nuclear Objectors

A political party is born

By DENNY MATTEAU
MDC Staff

A new political party is being born over in Montague: the N.O. party. "NO Party" stands for "Nuclear Objectors Party", and seeks to run a slate of anti-nuclear leaders in the elections, in May. Twenty-eight positions in Montague's government are being contested. They include the major positions of Town Moderator and One Selectman, as well as many committee openings, including some seats on the school committee and finance committee.

In an interview last week, Seth Many, proprietor of the No End Bookshop, in Turner's Falls explained the general platform of the NO Party. "The party is not simply a one issue party," he said. "It's a two issue party, and our issues are the two that all civic activity is ultimately concerned with, death and taxes."

"The tax section is basically this: we have plans that can reduce the tax rate in this town to zero within a decade, and we won't need the Nuclear Plant."

When asked to explain the party's plans, Many said "Number One Point is to stop, in its tracks, the use of public funds for private special interests."

As an example of this kind of use of funds, he cited a recent town meeting in which some thirty thousand dollars worth of property was sold to a private club for five hundred dollars. "That's just the surface," he said, "I haven't looked into this in any depth, but the town as presently operated has become a party to all kinds of centralized schemes which constitute a continuous drain on the income of every citizen. I really believe this town could generate revenues, generate an annual wage to all citizens, in twenty years."

In pursuing this goal, the NO Party would "develop the principles of a co-op community, taken from those used in food co-ops and credit unions," he continued, "This would permit the community to fill its own social needs: medicine, food, shelter...the needs now badly met at much greater cost by the present system."

"And then there's the death program, so-called because if we don't act now, that's exactly what it will be!" he said., in reference to the nuclear power plants. "We're really concerned about the seven nuclear plants that will eventually be put in this area, at least seven." According to Many, besides the presently controversial twin plants planned for Montague Plain, another twin set is being considered for the same plains, as well as more in Northfield. "Northfield was an alternate site," he said, "but the Atomic Energy Commission's alternate sites have tended to become additional sites."

The reason for concern, according to Many, is "the worldwide threat presented by the 200 plants planned for New Engaand, as a whole. The Atomic Energy Commission does not know enough about the dangers of radioactivity, although they claim to. The AEC cannot handle nuclear energy, and won't admit it," he charged.

"Remember the Thresher? The nuclear submarine that went down off Cape Cod, killing 19 seamen?" he said, "We don't know that that was a nuclear failure. It could have been a technical failure, or human...but what does it matter? If there's a failure at a plant here, it's not going to sink out of sight, out of mind."

Seth Many explains the platform of the N.O. political party.

"The latest thing was out in Hanford, Washington. The same waste center that would be receiving the first wastes from the Montague Plains," said Many, "In June, 1973, their tanks leaked one hundred and fifteen thousand gallons. They found out when they measured the levels in the tanks that that much waste had gone, leaked out into the ecosystem. Charles Bragge says these things are safe?!"

Seth Many also said that a Boston television station ran an Eyewitness news report about a New Jersey nuclear plant situated on the coast. He said that, according to the report, the plant caused a ten to twelve degree rise in the temperature of the water, which then attracted a sea animal known as Toraedo worm. The worms act like termites and destroyed the wooden piers and the boats in the Marina, completely ruining the lifestyle of the community. "The worst part of this incident is that the plants there disclaimed responsibility for the effects of their activity," he said.

To explain what he called the "untrustworthiness" of the Atomic Energy Commission, Many said "the government and the AEC are in such a position of face-saving that to admit ignorance in the face of the billions of dollars they've poured into this is to dmit dangerous incompetence."

The No Party, in the specific issue of the Montague Plains plfants, intends to fight the "Interconnected power interests: We see the consequences of current policies in our gasoline lines and in our supermarkets. Objectors are popping up everywhere as they become aware of the ways in which all these issues are of the same material," according to Many.

"I can't give you a list of the people we're supporting yet, because we've still got to have our convention. It will probably be on the Ides of March, (the 14th) because, taking it symbolically, that's when imperial power is challenged."

Labor party takes lead

LONDON (AP) - Harold Wilson's Labor party, helped indirectly by a Liberal upsurge, took an early lead Friday in Britain's crisis election.

The Laborites gained 11 seats in the 635-member House of Commons from Prime Minister Edward Heath's Conservatives and one from the Liberals after returns were in from 198 election districts.

Indictments due today

WASHINGTON (AP) — The long-awaited and multiple federal indictments of former high officials in the Nixon administration will be returned this morning by the grand jury investigating the Watergate cover-up, sources said yesterday.

There was the possibility, also, of indictments springing from other grand jury investigations in the Watergate aftermath: the 1971 break-in at the offices of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist; illegal corporate campaign contributions; the milk fund and ITT cases; and violations of federal campaign laws.

Southwest Resource Center offers gay counseling

By B.J. ROCHE

"There are two problems I have to deal with," says Counselor Nancy Schroeder of her job. "First are people who are just in the process of questioning their sexuality, and second are people who have realized they are gay who may be having problems of some kind."

Nancy Schroeder is a gay counselor for the Southwest Resource Center.

A graduate student in Human Relations, Ms. Schroeder has had experience working in a mental institution as well as having done counseling in a prison for a year. She first began working for the Resource Center when it opened last January. Since then, her job has consisted of personal counseling, counselor training for Women's dorms in Southwest, as well as community education regarding homosexuality.

She sees her work as being two fold. First there is the attitudes of "straight" people towards gay people, and second is the results of those attitudes: gay people who are oppressed. Counselor training is important in that most women counselors are not gay, and may not be able tohelp gay women with their problems.

The Community education aspect is also important in helping people to accept gays, thereby lessening the oppressiveness of being gay. "Unbiased reingorcement" is what the Center offers people who are in need of counseling.

Though she does counsel men, most of her requests have come from women, some of whom do not live in Southwest.

Gay counseling is an institution which has come recently to focus. It is seen as a much needed form of counseling. Ms. Schroeder has connections with other Women's Centers in the area, and sometimes works in conjunction with the Southwest Women's Center.

Her services are open to residents of Southwest and she is located in the Southwest Resource Center, Hampden Dining Commons.

Next week the Collegian will print a series of articles concerning Gays at UMass, and the University of New Hampshire and Maine.

Nursing home personnel begin negotiating contract

By JANE MARINO,
MDC Staff

Local Union 1199, unlicensed hospital personnel at the Amherst Nursing Home, is presently undergoing negotiations for wage increases, working hours, vacations, holidays, and the reduction of a two year term of agreement to a one-year contract.

Their present contract which is due to expire March 14 now states that all unlicensed personnel receive two dollars an hours with a nickel raise every six months. The Union is asking for a two dollar and fifty cent starting wage with a nickel raise every six months which the administrators have thus far refused.

The Union is also asking that all personnel may have every other weekend off if requested as opposed to every third weekend off in the present contract.

A two week paid vacation after one year and three weeks after three years, plus the addition of two more holidays is also being requested. The contract now grants a one week paid vacation after one year and two weeks after three yeaes, and seven paid holidays.

So far the administrators have refused these requests. They have offered an increase in wages of two dollars and ten cents an hour with a ten cent raise every six months for a year and a nickel raise every six months thereafter, but the Union will not accept it.

Ms. Suzanne Temple, nurse aide and Union delegate said "With the economic conditions in this country the way they are now, we don't feel that two dollars and fifty cents is an unreasonable amount to ask for. We will stand firm on the wage increase, every other weekend off, and the reduction of the contract period from two years to one. If the agreements are not made by the fourteenth of March we are no longer under contract and have every right to strike."

Cont. Ed. offers paralegal program

By BONNIE COHEN
MDC Staff

A paralegal program is being instituted through the School of Continuing Education in an effort to "train people to get jobs", according to Harvey Stone, coordinator of the program.

According to Stone, who also serves as pre-law advisor for UMass, "a paralegal is whatever his or her employer wants her to be". It is hoped that the program will be flexible enough to meet the needs of students with varied work and educational experience.

The program, which is being offered on the campus of Springfield Technical Community College, is open to applicants who are presently serving as legal secretaries, graduates of four and two year institutions of higher education, legal assistants in need of certification, and others possessing a high level of motivation and work experience.

Projected to commence its first class in the fall of 1974, the curriculum could be completed either on a full time basis, or through part time study, both to be offered in evening sessions.

As for aspiring lawyers who hope to increase their chances of getting into law school by completing the course and working as a paralegal, Stone said, "it couldn't hurt", but quickly added, "but the way the law school situation is now, it probably wouldn't help either."

You're being filmed

By FRITS GEURTSEN

If you've had a movie camera pointed in your direction for no apparent reason recently, there's no need to get uptight about it.

Chances are the people behind the camera were Jim Cooper and Al Caso, two undergraduate students at UMass, who are filming the campus police for an independent research project in sociology.

"We're not cops," said Cooper, "but everyone's reacting to us as if we were."

"Last week we were filming in the Bluewall and a lot of people got upset. Six complaints were called in that night about police filming in the Bluewall. We're not cops, and we're not connected with them in any way."

The film, which is intended to be a documentation of the social organization of the UMass police, has been in progress since October.

The two students are pesently trying to get some funding for their project.

"Right now the money's coming out of my G.I. check," said Cooper, "But I can't keep that up. Film is pretty expensive. We approached Dean Field of Student Affairs but he gave us a flat no. The commuter assembly is considering our request right now."

Cooper and Caso would like to see the film used as part of the Freshmen Orientation program.

"We think there's a definite need from the student viewpoint to know exactly what the police are on campus for and what they do."

C.C. Governors looking for student workers

By JULIE SMITH
MDC Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors said last night that they are having problems hiring students for the 11 to 7 and the 7 to 3 shifts.

Among other duties, the committee oversees the hiring of students in Food Services. So far, they are having problems finding students to work during the day and late at night. $400,000 of the budget is set aside for student employment.

The 21 member board also discussed why students aren't employed at the crafts shop. Michael Curran, Finance Committee Chairperson, approached Ms. Worman, head of the Crafts shop about this matter.

Ms. Worman said students couldn't be found that weee proficient enough in crafts and that they don't have the time to work at the center due to class conflicts. Non-students are presently employed there. It was suggested that more money be spent on advertising to find students able to work at the center.

The possibility of increasing the price of goods sold at the crafts shop was also discussed. It was felt that to break even, a per belt price would have to be $6-8. At this price however, the committee felt the operation would die.

The Board passed a raise in the pricing schedule for student hotel rates from $9.75 to 10.75. A price of 11.25 was first suggested but it was lowered to $10.75.

There was a difference of opinion discussed about the need for an increase in the student rate. Since the total cost per room of the hotel is $8.50, it was thought that should be the price asked. Others felt that anything charged above this price, the profit would be returned to the students. It was felt an increase was needed for maintenance of the rooms.

Next week, the Board of Governors would begin the discussion of tte campus center budget.

Dave Winchester, Vice-Chairperson, stressed the need for student volunteers to workon the committees of the Board of Governors. He felt students should find out what is available for them through the campus center and Student Union. Interested people should go to their office on the 8th floor of the Campus Center.

Fac-Sen approves 5-college major in Black Studies

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

A 5-College major in Black Studies and a Western European Area Studies program both gained the approval of the Faculty Senate at their regular meeting yesterday at the School of Business Administration.

In other discussion, motions were passed calling for a new review of the Graduate program at UMass, and for financial aid to be made available to part-time grad students.

Also, Provost Robert L. Gluckstern reported on an administration proposal for a five year tenure program, with 3 per cent of the faculty designated as following a "non-tenure track."

"A 5-College major in Black Studies is an attempt to pool and formalize the existing departments within the 5-College community," stated Castellano B. Turner, who reported on this motion from the Academic Matters Council.

"This would legitimize the sharing of people and ideas, with students still getting their degrees from the college or university in which they are enrolled," added Turner. The motion then passed unanimously.

Team teaching and new courses would be the main results of the concentration in Western European Studies, as it was proposed by Academic Matters.

This "area" study would parallel already existent programs such as the Latin American Studies program. The program was approved.

In response to the "one man" Graduate school study performed by Mortimor H. Appley, the Graduate Council reported to the Fac-Sen their desire to see new studies launched or completed which would allow for more faculty input.

One of the motions passed pertaining to this topic called for the maintenance of graduate enrollment at UMass not below its present level, assuming that undergraduate totals did not slacken either.

Financial assistance to part-time grad students was also suggested by the Grad Council and approved by the Fac-Sen.

In Provost Gluckstern's remarks, he said that the 3 per cent (proposed) non-tenure track segment of the faculty could include "visiting facutly, faculty brought to the University for a limited time, and teaching associates."

This percent would increase in subsequent years to approximately 10 per cent according to Gluckstern.

"We need to provide some level of flexibility," stated the Provost. "We cannot turn off future faculty flexibility."

The meeting was recessed until next Thursday.

The balconies of the five Southwest towers will continue to be unavailable for student use until money can be found to make potential suicides from them impossible.

The balconies, located on the 5th, 12th, and 19th floors of each building, were closed after a former UMass student jumped to his death from one of them last November.

Floyd Martin, assistant director of the Southwest Residential College, reported that the Southwest administration felt justified in closing the balconies after the last suicide." Ed Waddington, an Amherst resident and former, was the third person since 1968 to jump from a tower balcony. Waddington, and another student in 1971, jumped from Washington Tower. A third student jumped from Kennedy in 1968.

A few days after the last suicide, the administration, headed by Martin and Southwest Director John Hunt, met and decided the balconies should be closed. The windows were bolted shut from the outside, and the doors were locked.

Martin reported that alternatives to sealing the balconies off were considered, "but are impossible now because of a lack of funds."

Alternatives include screening in the balconies, or encasing them in glass.

The decision to close the balconies was made entirely by the Southwest administration. A spokesman for the security department said "apparently the Southwest office took it upon themselves to close the balconies after the suicide.

N.H. governor may take legal action against commentator

By DAVID SPARLING
MDC Staff

Legal action-threatened by Manchester Union-Leader publisher William Loeb because of a column written by a Collegian commentator satirizing the Governor of New Hampshire-will not come from Loeb but possibly from the Governor.

MDC commentator Karen A. Monaco said yesterday she sent her opinion-editorial of February 20, in which she described New Hampshire governor Meldrim Thompson's life as a heterosexual and his phony arrest, to Loeb in Manchester, N.H. following its Collegian publication.

Loeb wrote Monaco a letter on February 26 saying he would "turn it (Monaco's column) over to the proper legal authorities with the hope they will find a way to bring legal action against you."

Concerning the MonacoLoeb situation, UMass Attorney for Students Richard M. Howland said yesterday, "whatever 'legal' course Mr. Loeb contemplates by his letter it would seem to me that he lacks an understanding of journalistic law, the First Amendment, and relies on lack of wit, humor, or compassion."

When contacted yesterday, Loeb would offer no comment but his attorney, Ralph Sullivan of the firm Mulloy and Sullivan in Boston said, "Since neither Mr. Loeb nor the newspaper (the Union-Leader) are mentioned in the Monaco article they would not be involved in a legal action against the author."

"Proper legal authorities," Sullivan continued, ""to my mind would be referring to the Governor and his attorneys." Governor Thompson, acting in his capacity as an ex-officio trustee of the University of New Hampshire recently offered a minority opinion in the Trustees' recent decision to recognize and fund the UNH Gay Students' Organization. The Union-Leader has editorially supported Thompson's view. Monaco's column was written in response to these actions.

Efforts to find Governor Thompson's position on the matter yesterday were unsuccessful. A press aide of Thompson's was unavailable for comment.

His secretary, however, acknowledged that a copy of the Monaco article was on her desk, though she said she doubted anyone but her had seen it.

Monaco said last night she would "sit tight and wait and see what happens."

Alex Montgomery digs greenhouse plants

By CAROL SCHIEB
MDC Staff

By February, everyone is pretty tired of the cold, barren trees and are looking forward to Spring. It's still a long wait until the green lawns, heavily foliaged trees, and red geraniums appear, but in the meantime there's still some hope. Durfee Conservatory provides a preview of what many of us will be leaving New England to see during Spring Vacation.

Alex Montgomery, who maintains Durfee Conservatory, the tropical plant greenhouse next to French Hall, is a pleasant, interesting, and very friendly person. When asked to define what his responsibilities include, he answered, "This is hard to define, for instance this morning I have to prepare for the classes that will be coming in."

"I have a list of plants that need labeling for each professor so that when they come in, their students can identify the plants they will need to know. I take care of the plants here: trim, water, and fertilize. I give tours through the greenhouse to other schools, teachers, and small groups of, say, four or five people", he said.

Alex acquired his horticulture experience by working with plants all his life. "It was in the family and goes all the way back to my Great Grandfather", he said.

While walking through the conservatory, you become completely enveloped by plants and one wonders how it is possible to carry out such a large responsibility successfully. Alex responded to this by saying, "All knowledge isn't written in a book. You keep learning more and more each year. It is a good place to learn because there are a lot of smart people and smart professors around here. I can learn from them."

Alex gained his tropical plant experience from 1959-1960 at the McKee Jungle Garden in Vero Beach Florida. "It was one of the first gardens established as a tourist attraction", he said.

When asked when he became affiliated with UMass he quickly replied, "I can remember that because it was the day after Easter, April 22, 1962. I've lived in Hadley all my life so UMass has always been familiar to me. You know that it used to be a school mainly for Horticulture and Agriculture".

Durfee Conservatory was built in 1955. The original was built in 1868 and was connected to the President's office. When the office burned down in 1955, the original conservatory was torn down and Durfee was built that same year.

Since the plants, their sizes, needs, and pots differ so much, Alex waters everything by hand. However, the Conservatory has automatic steam and air systems which work on thermostats.

Besides functioning as a growing place for plants, Alex explained that the conservatory is also used by the Plant and Soil Science Department headed by Dr. Franklin Southwick. It is used by majors as well as non-majors taking classes such as propagation courses. It's used by the Botany department, and also by other students and the general public.

The plants come from many parts of the world. When asked to elaborate, Alex replied "That's a toughie! Let's say the U.S., that's a fact...also South America, China, Japan, Europe, and Australia, to name only a few."

Durfee provides a home for plants that many people have never seen, such as the Banana tree grown most anywhere in the tropics where it is warm and there is no frost, the Coffee tree from Mexico, and the Chickle tree from Guatemala. Alex elaborated by explaining that "the gum 'Chicklets' was named after the Chickle tree. The tree produces a latex which is used as a basis for all chewing gum". Other trees he mentioned that can be found there were orange, lemon, and lime trees.

Alex Montgomery in Durfee Conservatory.

Alex feels that his rarest plant is the Australian Grass tree found in queensland, Australia, and New Zealand. It resembles a delicate green waterfall of long, slender, and fragile leaves that extend up and out from the stalk of the plant. Alex said that "It takes 75 years to mature and at that time stands about eight to ten feet tall". Presently it reaches about two and a half feet and has flowered three times.

When asked if those people that go in feel free to ask him for help, Alex proudly replied "They really and truly do. I don't teach officially you know, but I tell people what I know when they need the help. I do the best I can, and when I don't know an answer I suggest where they can go for further help".

Alex occasionally needs extra help, but runs the conservatory pretty much on his own. "Sometimes students come in for an hour or so and give me a hand. They don't have to be Plant & Soil Science majors, one girl was in here last week that's a Dancing major!", he said.

Alex summed up his everyday responsibilities and personal satisfaction gained in his work by saying "I like plants and I like people and it's a wonderful combination for working in a place like this.

Anyone is welcome to visit the conservatory at any time, although it's wise to make an appointment with the secretary in the main office of French Hall for large tours.

Diplomatics relations with Egypt resumed

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Proclaiming "a new era," President Anwar Sadat announced yesterday he is resuming full diplomatic relations with the United States and inviting President Nixon to visit Egypt.

He added that Arab oil ministers will meet this month to decide whether to lift the oil embargo against the United States.

With Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger at his side, Sadat declared to newsmen: "As long as Dr. Kissinger is handling the whole thing, everything is okay."

The American secretary was in Cairo to confer with Sadat on, among other Middle East topics, efforts to arrange negotiations between Israel and Syria on disengagement of their Golan Heights forces.

Asked whether recent progress in getting the Syrians and Israelis together enabled him to give Kissinger cause for optimism on an end to the oil embargo, Sadat replied:

"The oil ministers will be meeting in March and they will take the decision. It is not my decision. It is the decision of all the Arabs."

The main leader of the Arab oil boycott is Saudi Arabia, a strongly Moslem country whose King Faisal has insisted that Arabs must regain the Golan Heights and East Jerusalem before turning the oil spigots back on.

Kissinger met with Sadat for 3½ hours at Sadat's rest home near the pyramids at Giza just outside Cairo. They looked over maps of Syria's occupied Golan Heights, on the northeastern Israeli border.

Asked afterward what advice he would give President Hafez Assad of Syria, Sadat said: "To give Dr. Kissinger the opportunity to work out and achieve what he has achieved on the Egyptian front."

That was a reference to the troop disengagement pact engineered by Kissinger for Egyptian and Israeli forces in the Sinai peninsula. The Egyptian and Israeli troops completed the first phase of their pullout last month.

Solar beats atom, he says

MONTREAL (AP) — Solar power is a better energy source than atomic power because of potential disasters from a sabotaged nuclear reactor, said Sir George Porter, a British photochemist and 1967 Nobel Prize winner for chemistry.

Porter, director and Fullerian professor of chemistry of the Royal Institution of Great Britian, said Tuesday energy derived from fossil fuels, fast diminishing, should be replaced with solar power rather than nuclear power.

"What really worries me is the possibility of sabotage of nuclear reactors and the fact that the world is as anarchic as it is," he said.

New gov't after violence in Ethiopia

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Ethiopia's rebellious soldiers forced Emperor Haile Selassie to name a new prime minister yesterday and grant pay raises demanded during three days of nonviolent mutiny.

The emperor went on nationwide radio to announce he had asked Endalkachew Makonnen, a 47-year-old diplomat who had been telecommunications minister, to form a new government. Selassie called for calm and promised no reprisals against the mutineers.

There was no immediate reaction from the noncommissioned of-revolt involving nearly all Ethiopia's 40,000 soldiers, sailors and airmen.

Observers said the emperor's measures appeared to stand a good chance of ending the country's gravest civil crisis since an attempted coup in 1960. The rebels, reflecting widespread feeling among civilians as well, had privately accused former Prime Minister Aklilu Haptewold of inefficiency and failing to meet problems of inflation and famine in drought-hit Ethiopia.

Selassie made his brodcast hours after dissident troops in battle dress appeared at Addis Ababa airport and banks, main roads and other key points in the capital.

It seemed to be a show of strength in support of some hard bargaining at the palace between the emperor's military aide, Lt. Gen. Assefe Demisse, and a mutineers' delegation, rather than an attempt to seize the city.

But the soldiers declared an 8 p.m. curfew for Addis Ababa.

Later troops set up a road-block on the only route to the airport and began checking drivers' identities. Long lines of traffic backed up.

Observers speculated that the soldiers were looking for former cabinet ministers who might be trying to escape.

The U.S. Information Service library closed but most civilian activities went on normally during the day.

The emperor disclosed that he had accepted the resignations of former Prime Minister Haptewold and 18 other ministers.

The emperor said pay and benefits would be raised for all ranks, with a private's base pay going to $56 a month from $50. The rebels had demanded base pay of $75 which would have doubled the rate of two months ago.

Brooke wants model spending code

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., yesterday called on the Republican party to develop a model campaign sending code in time for this year's congressional elections.

Such a code would help restore the GOP's "battered" post-Watergate image, Brooke said in remarks prepared for a Republican audience in Madison, Wis. The code outlined by Brooke would include:

-Stricter limits on the size of individual contributions.

-Limits on the amounts wealthy candidates can contribute to their own campaigns.

-Spending ceilings on every race.

-Complete disclosure of all campaign receipts and expenditures.

Brooke said the reforms should be adopted by all GOP candidates regardless of whether any election financing proposals now pending in Congress are enacted.

The Massachusetts Republican said a voluntary code was one of several campaign initiatives needed to stave off a Democratic sweep in the coming elections.

"We must recognize the fact that millions of Republicans who can in no way be considered responsible for the inept and illegal activities of Watergate, are being blamed," he said.

Speaking at the Dane County Republican Party Lincoln Day Dinner, Brooke also urged reform in the method of chosing a vice presidential candidate.

Brooke, who occasionally is mentioned as a possible contender for the number two spot in 1976, called for a process that would make the selection of the vice presidential nominee a shared responsibility of the national convention and the presidential candidate.

Food prices up higher than ever

One year after rumblings of consumer discontent which prompted boycotts and demonstrations over rising food costs, the family grocery bill is higher than ever. An Associated Press market basket survey shows the tab is 16 per cent above last March's level.

"Shopping is a real problem," complained a Miami, Fla., woman. "I don't buy brand names any more and shop on sale days. I'm managing because I buy in quantity and use food helpers to extend the food."

In the other side of the counter, a Dallas, Tex., supermarket manager said wholesale prices of just about everything were rising. "Consequently," he said, "the whole grocery business is scarmbling to keep up with the price changes."

The AP checked the prices of 15 food and nonfood items in 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and has rechecked at the beginning of each succeeding month.

The AP found that the market basket total was higher this March than last March in every city checked, rising an average of 16 percent. Seventy-six per cent of the total number of items on the check list were up over the 12-month period.

The latest round of increase was led by a jump in sugar prices - a boost that will be reflected later in everything from bakery products to soft drinks to processed meats.

During February, sugar went up in every one of the 13 cities, rising an average 14 per cent. Over the year, sugar went up an average of 36 per cent and in some cities, the same five-pound sack of granulated sugar that cost about 70 cents last March was selling for $1 or more this year.

Eggs - which soared to record levels last year, then seesawed for a while - declined in every city, but the decreases did not offset the higher sugar prices.

The AP market basket total went up during February in nine of 13 cities checked, rising an average of 3 per cent. It was down in four cities - decreasing a little less than 2 per cent.

In addition, 33.8 per cent of the total number of items checked went up in price during the one-month period. Nineteen per cent went down in price, 39.5 per cent were unchanged and 7.7 per cent were unavailable on one of the check lists.

At home, beef prices continued to rise in many areas, although special sales brought the price down in some cities. The price of chopped chuck, however, was higher this March than last in 11 cities; all-beef franks were more expensive in 10 cities.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has predicted that food prices over-all may rise as much as 16 per cent this year. Last year, the government said, food prices generally rose about 2 per cent.

The cities in the AP survey are: Alurquergue, Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

The items covered in the survey are : chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice, coffee, paper towels, eggs, butter, detergent, fabric softener, peanut butter, tomato sauce, chocolate chip cookies, milk, all-beef franks and granulated sugar.

Hearst giveaway successful

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Sacks brimming with foodstuffs from beef stew to bananas flowed out of distribution centers in the second installment of a massive giveaway demanded by Patricia Hearst's terrorist kidnapers.

Hundreds of people gathered in the rain before dawn outside ten People in Need centers in the San Francisco Bay area providing free food under a $2 million plan set up by Miss Hearst's father, newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst.

The distribution was orderly, and the crowds were small and even jovial at times as the lines moved quickly in most locations. It was a marked contrast to last Friday, when distribution was disrupted by violence and confusion.

San Francisco and Oakland police said there were no reports of any trouble at centers in the two cities.

"I'm not happy the girl was kidnaped, but the fact there was free food and we're hungry is the reason we got it. It's not like we kidnaped her," said Joe Jergel, 23, as he left the Grove Street center in an abandoned store here.

Members of the Hearst family still waited at their Hillsborough mansion to learn whether Patty Hearst was alive and whether her abductors would release her in exchange for an additional $4 million donated to the food program by the Hearst Corp.

Catherine Hearst, the kidnap victim's mother, said through a spokesman in Hillsborough she hoped the food distribution would continue to go well.

"That sounds good. I sure hope it will go like that for the rest of the day," she said.

Calley gets new day in court

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Lawyers for Lt. William L. Calley Jr. yesterday requested clarification from the Army as to just how much freedom Calley has since he still is a military prisoner.

Calley, 30, convicted nearly three years ago in the My Lai massacre, was freed on personal recognizance in lieu of $1,000 bond Wednesday by U.S. District Court Judge J. Robert Elliott.

It was Calley's new day in court, a civilian court this time instead of military, and it gave him new hope for his future.

But with the freedom are still restraints, some imposed by the Army and some self-imposed.

"As an ajudicated military prisoner, he is still subject to Army regulations," said an Army spokesman who declined to be named.

"The Army still has some responsibility to him and he still has some responsibility to the Army. The crunch is — what are they?" the spokesman added.

"We have requested clarification from the Pentagon as to Calley's status," said Kenneth M. Henson, the local civilian attorney who pleaded for his bail.

Calley's only outing was on the night of his release when he and his girlfriend, Anne Moore, left his Ft. Benning apartment to have dinner with the Henson family.

"He was glad to get away from his apartment and see the outside world," said Henson. "That a man could be penned up all that time and not feel personal animosity is amazing. This man has reached beyond himself to achieve something."

A new civilian job and marriage may be in his immediate plans, but he refuses to discuss either.

Asked about marriage plans, Miss. Moore said, "I'm not telling."

Calley's chief military counsel, J. Houston Gordon, said Calley had made a job choice from thousands of offers and will announce it "in due course."

Without a ruling from the Army on his status, some question remains whether Calley can accept a civilian job.

Calley and his lawyers have agreed he will abide by the restraining order that he not discuss his case with anyone but counsel. He has refused to meet with the news media.

"His sentence is under review by Army Secretary Howard Callaway," said Henson. "Our judgment is that we do not want to do anything until Callaway rules."

Calley apparently is free to come and go as he pleases, even to leave town, according to Henson.

Mitchell-Stans jury set

NEW YORK (AP) — A jury of eight men and four women were chosen and immediately sequestered yesterday at the federal conspiracy trial of former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and onetime Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans.

The two former Cabinet members are charged with trying to impede a federal securities investigation of fugitive financier Robert Vesco in return for a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

Selection of the jury was completed at 1:30 p.m. on the seventh day of the trial.

An hour later, six other jurors, five men and one woman, were chosen as alternates, and Judge P. Galiardi put the entire 18-member panel in the custody of three U.S. marshals.

The jurors were to be accompanied to their homes by the marshals to pick up their personal belongings. They will be quartered for the night in a Manhattan hotel.

The swearing and sequestering of the jury was expected to signal release of a batch of Watergate indictments, announcement of which has been held up to avoid possible influence on the panel trying Mitchell and Stans.

The two former cabinet members are charged with trying to derail a federal securities investigation of Vesco, in return for the latters secret $200,000 contribution to resident Nixon's re-election campaign.

Rebels controlling Argentine city

CORDOBA, Argentina (AP) — Rebel police holding the Cordoba governor hostage controlled the streets of this paralyzed city yesterday with no sign of action by federal forces flown in to calm the uprising.

President Juan D. Peron met with Interior Minister Benito Llambi at the presidential palace in Buenos Aires, 450 miles southeast of Cordoba, in an effort to defuse the crisis.

But Peron gave his 250 federal police envoys no immediate orders to move in against the 800 provincial policemen who revolted Wednesday night and took over Cordoba, Argentina's second-largest city.

The provincial police rebelled after Gov. Ricardo Obregon Cano fired provincial Police Chief Antonio Navarro in a local eruption of the nationwide dispute between the left and right wings of the Peronist movement.

Cano accused Navarro and the rebel police of sedition. They retorted that Cano was a Bolshevik, underlining their contempt for his leftist leanings.

A group of right-wing Peronist workers joined the rebels' cause, invading a local radio station and broadcating support of Navarro against "Marxist infiltrators including the governor."

The rebel police held Cano, his vice governor and about 80 of their aides in a heavily guarded radio communications headquarters. They told Cordoba's 900,000 residents not to go to work. But there was no accurate estimate of how widely the strike call was heeded.

One person was reported wounded as the rebels fired automatic weapons into the air to clear the streets Wednesday night while they invaded the provincial government and police headquarters. Two deaths were reported in a prison riot.

The federal police were sent to Cordoba in air force planes after the rebels seized Cano.

Scattered gunfire was heard throughout the night. Unidentified groups bombed a newspaper office and the home of a Cordoba criminal court judge. Rightist groups were reported making searches of leftists' homes.

Will veto energy bill

Nixon asserts rationing not needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said yesterday the United States is not going to have gasoline rationing and announced he will veto the emergency energy bill passed by Congress.

"That bill will result in longer gas lines and also would inevitably lead to compulsory rationing in this country, and that we are not going to have, and we should not have, Nixon said.

It was the most unequivocal statement yet by the President that there won't be any rationing. At a news conference Monday night, he had said chances were much better than 50-50 there would be no rationing, and he had said earlier he wanted to avoid rationing if possibe.

Asked later at a news briefing if the President meant to say so flatly that there would be no rationing, White House Deputy Press secretary Gerald L. Warren said: "I will not qualify his satement."

Nixon's announcement that he will veto the energy bill was no surprise because the White House had been saying in recent days the bill would be rejected if not changed.

The aspect of the bill most objected to by the White House would roll crude oil prices back to $5.25 a barrel but would permit increases back to $7.09, which is still lower than some current prices.

Nixon said he would veto the bill "not because I am against lower prices, because I am for lower prices; not because I am against more gas and oil available to the American people, but because I am for more gas and oil available to the American people at prices they can afford to pay."

The administration believes a price rollback would make gasoline and oil scarcer.

The President said Congress should act on proposals the administration has had on Capitol Hill "now for months, in some cases for years, which would increase the supply of energy in this country."

"By increasing the supply the price will go down, the gas lines will certainly disappear and we can move forward as a country with the energy that we need," Nixon said.

Nixon's comments on the energy bill came during a half hour speech at the opening of a Young Republican Leadership Conference in Washington.

Later, at a White House news briefing, Warren said the energy bill had not been received at the White House and thus he could not say precisely when a veto message would be sent back to Congress.

Nixon also urged the Young Republicans to "get in there and fight" for the Republican cause despite Watergate.

"Don't assume the time to run for an office is only when it's a sure thing," he told the cheering audience.

The energy crisis

Natural gas prices up 60% last year

WASHINGTON (AP) - The wellhead cost of natural gas sold without federal price regulation has risen nearly 60 per cent during the past year, unpublished government statistics show.

Such increases inevitably mean higher prices for consumers but the alternative, one government agency says, would be a cutback in service to gas customers.

Normally, the price of natural gas sold to interstate pipelines is closely regulated by the Federal Power Commission. However, under FPC regulations, short-term sales or deliveries designed to meet emergency situations can be made without prior price approval.

According to figures compiled for in-house use by commission economists, wellhead prices paid for emergency sales in February, 1963, averaged 35.4 cents per thousand cubic feet, roughly enough gas to meet an average family's cooking needs for a month. In the first two months of 1974, the figures show, the prices were averaging 55.2 cents per thousand cubic feet and in several cases, the prices ranged as high as 72 cents.

"You really can't tell what causes something like that to happen," said Frank A. Jeneski, a power commission economist who compiles the sales figures. "We know that on the intrastate market, where there is no price regulation, the prices have been going up because of a shortage of supplies. I would presume that the unregulated interstate prices rose in order to stay competitive."

Since about 70 per cent of the gas purchases made in the United States are made by interstate pipelines, a shortage of supplies to those pipelines would have potentially disastrous effects for consumers, a fact recognized by the FPC in 1970.

In that year the commission initiated a policy under which emergency gas sales could be made without prior price approval for periods of up to 60 days.

The commission last Sept. 14 extended the allowable duration of emergency sales to 180 days.

Suits by consumer groups kept the order tied up in court battles until December when the Supreme Court upheld the commission.

In an explanation of its order, the commission said a staff study had estimated that firm gas customers would suffer a supply curtailment of .5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas this winter, the equivalent of about 85 million barrels of oil.

Some gas industry critics have charged that producers were deliberately withholding supplies from the market until prices rose.

Gasoline supplies rose last month

BOSTON (AP) - Gasoline supplies were fair in most of New England Thursday, the American Automobile Association reported.

The AAA said a special survey showed fair supplies in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire and low in Rhode Island.

The gasoline situation was a marked improvement over that at the end of the months of December and January, the AAA said.

Areas reporting low supplies were Lawrence, Cape Cod, Fall River, Worcester and Springfield, Mass.; Providence, R.I.; Bennington and Rutland, Vt.; and Portsmouth, N.H.

The AAA said about half the stations in its survey were pumping for a few hours in the morning and a few in the evening. The most common purchase limits were $2 and $3.

Throughout Massachusetts, and especially in the Boston area, the survey showed marked reductions in lines at gasoline pumps as compared to a week ago.

NERBC report warns of oil spill costs

BOSTON (AP) - The New England River Basin Commission says "damage costs from severe near shore spillage could offset any regional income benefits gained from locating a refinery complex in New England with or without a large oil discovery on George's Bank."

The joint state-federal agency in its 1973 annual repot released this week says "near shore spills associated with tanker movement or refinery development could increase as much as 100 per cent.

The report was based on a $105,000 study conducted in 1972 and 1973 by Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The commission says the study was undertaken after the U.S. Interior Department announced tentative plans to lease oil and mineral rights along the New England coast, especially along a section known as George's Bank.

"Even a very large find of oil on George's Bank would not supply all the needs of the region," the report said. "Because the price of a product is determined by the most expensive alternate course for meeting the demand-in this case foreign oil-George's Bank oil would not be significantly cheaper than the refined product however short the supply that the region now consumes is."

Unless the New England states receive a substantial share of the least payments and royalties "the gross economic benefits to the region from George's Bank development may be marginal."

Coal miners boycott in protest of short gasoline supplies

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Some 17,000 southern West Virginia coal miners continued a work boycott yesterday in protest of short gasoline supplies as their union leaders sought state government aid.

Most mines in southeastern Virginia were opened Thursday as emergency gasoline supplies flowed into the area, but absenteeism remained high, mine owners said.

The movement in West Virginia that has cost steel mills and utilities more than 175,000 tons of coal daily began Monday in McDowell County with miners simply staying away from work because, they contended, they couldn't get enough gasoline to drive to work.

Thursday, however, the West Virginia Coal Association said the shutdown movement was being spread into Logan and Boone counties south of here by pickets protesting fuel allocation policies. A few pickets were also reported at some mines in McDowell County.

The association also said that while miners claimed they couldn't get to work, there was no unusual absenteeism among office and supervisory staff members.

United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller sent UMW Safety Director Steve Liming into the state to meet with miners in the stricken area.

Yesterday, Liming and other union officials met behind closed doors with Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. in efforts to gain additional gasoline allocations for the area and to seek changes in sales policies.

"We've still got gas problems," said Fred Wilson, secretary treasurer of UMW District 28 at Norton, Va. "A lot of mines still have a number of men absent. But it's looking a whole lot better."

He said it appeared that about 30 per cent of the miners in southeastern Virginia remained off the job. Absenteeism had run as high as 5 per cent earlier in the week.

Most Boone County gasoline stations remained closed following a vote by some station owners to strike in protest of low fuel allocations.

N.Y. state Power Authority plans nuclear power plant for MTA by 1982

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state Power Authority said today that it plans to build a nuclear power plant in Green County by 1982.

The plant, one of two the authority wants to construct to provide generating facilities for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, will be located either at Athens of Cementon along the Hudson River.

The announcement is certain to intensify a controversy over the Power Authority's plans for Greene County.

Local residents have been protesting the siting studies for more than year, and the opposition is expected to grow now that the authority has confirmed that the plant will be nuclear.

The authority said the second plant will be fossil fueled and will be located at one of three sites: Athens, near Poughkeepsie, or on Hart Island off New York City.

The Hart Island site was added to the potential locations recently, after local governments in the Hudson Valley area protested that the authority whould consider a site closer to New York City for the MTA plant.

The authority said it if selects the Hart Island site, a fossil-fuel plant there could burn refuse as well as oil or coal.

The nuclear plant, to be completed by 1982, will have a capacity of 1,200 megawatts and is to be completed by 1980.

The authority said final decision on the sites for both plants will be made soon.

The Power Authority was directed by the legislature in 1972 to construct one or more power plants to meet the power needs of the MTA, which currently buys electrictiy from private utilities to run its subways and commuter rail lines.

Since then the authority has conducted environmental studies of a wide number of sites up the Hudson Valley, concentrating in Greene and Dutchess countries.

The nuclear plant, if approved by the Atomic Energy Commission and other licensing bodies, would be the largest in the state.

The Power Authority expects to put its 821-megawatt nuclear plant on Lake Ontario into operation later this year.

U.S. automakers to improve big car fuel economy

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers say they are going all out to produce big cars with improved fuel economy and hope to market fuel-saving devices within the next few months.

But most major fuel-economy improvements are still on the drawing boards and many of the current devices will add to the price of the autos.

In the short term, the auto companies plan to offer rear axles that help save gas, smaller engines, radial tires and fuel guages to let owners know when they're wasting gasoline.

"We had a four-hour meeting with Henry Ford II and others a few days ago where we went over how and what we are going to get better economy," said Ford president Lee A. Iacocca. "We discussed radial tires, a lot of goodies and what the possibilities are for breakthroughs."

Chrysler and General Motors have made similar commitments and plans for coaxing more miles per gallon out of big cars, but as Iacocca points out: "Many of these are long-term projects. Improvements come hard and in the short term all we can look for is a couple of miles per gallon."

Ford says the fuel economy gauges, which let drivers know when they are wasting gas, are scheduled to go into production next week as an accessory for all the firm's full and intermediate size cars.

American Motors says it will begin offering economy gauges this spring and GM plans to offer the gauge as an option on its Oldsmobiles in March, Pontiacs in April and Chevrolets by June.

Chrysler says its gauge, called a "Fuel Pacer System," will be available on its compacts by March and its larger models by April.

The devices will vary in price from $12 to $14 for Chrysler's version to $20 or $25 for General Motors'.

R.I. official opposes dumping proposal

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) — Rhode Island's state director of natural resources is opposing a Connecticut chemical firm's proposal to dump residue off the Block Island coast.

Director Dennis J. Murphy Jr. criticized the federal Environmental Protection Agency Wednesday for not scheduling a public hearing in Rhode Island on Pfizer Chemical Co. of Groton's proposal. Murphy said a hearing has been scheduled for March 20 in Groton Municipal Auditorium.

"Apparently, the federal government wants to make this the ocean-dumping state," Murphy said, referring to a previous Navy proposal to dump polluted dredged materials from the Thames River in Rhode Island waters. The state slogan is "the ocean state."

Murphy said he will ask the EPA to insist that Pfizer keep its residue on land, where it now is being dumped and where it can be monitored.

The Pfizer proposal calls for the dumping of some 1,200 cubic yards of residue about seven miles southeast of Block Island each week.

Gas regulations amended in R.I.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Atty. Gen. Richard J. Israel has amended his emergency regulations on gas sales to bring them into conformance with the governor's new alternate-day sales program which goes into effect Friday.

Under Noel's voluntary plan, service station dealers are urged to sell gas to motorists only if they have less than a half-tank. Under the attorney general's regulations, dealers must sell at least five gallons or $2.50 worth of gas to all customers who wait for service and drive up to the pumps while they're in operation.

Israel's amendment states, "No such dealer is required to make a sale of gasoline to be delivered to a vehicle whose fuel tank is more than half-full."

State tax rebate viewed as no help to consumers

BOSTON (AP) — The states tax rebate for energy-saving expenditures was unanimously opposed by the Taxation Committee, according to Rep. John R. Buckley, D-Abington, chairman. He said it would benefit primarily persons "well able" to make investments.

"This would do nothing to alleviate the shortage of energy," Buckley said. "It would do absolutely nothing to help the consumer."

Rep. John S. Ames III of Easton, assistant Republican leader, said this could be an incentive for improvements that would conserve fuel. He said the oil shortage is likely to continue for five to 10 years. He said he knows from experience in the home building business that many residences are constructed in Massachusetts with inadequate insulation.

Editors answerable to both staff and community

Collegian cartoonist Donald E. McGilvray has labelled as "ridiculous" a public criticism by Chancellor Randolph Bromery of a cartoon printed in last Friday's Collegian.

McGilvray, 20, of Brighton, said he thought that Bromery overreacted "without a doubt" to what the creator of 'UMies' and 'Strange But True' considered to be a "harmless" cartoon.

"I think it's unfortunate that the Chancellor doesn't have a sense of humor," said McGilvray.

"I'm really surprised that of all the things Bromery should have to worry about, he should waste time getting upset about one of my cartoons," he added.

McGilvray, who has taken shots at numerous aspects of campus life, most notably the dining commons and English professors, said he didn't see anything wrong with the cartoon, which said that Bromery "is in charge of UMass" and included a caricature of the Chancellor saying "Dat's me, folks."

"I'm not a racist and I don't think the cartoon was racist," said McGilvray in response to the Chancellor's criticism. "I don't really give a shit what the Chancellor thinks about me or my cartoons anyway."

When asked what he intended by the cartoon, McGilvray replied, "it defeats the purpose of the cartoon to try and explain it. Maybe some people won't find it funny, but it'a certainly nothing to get upset about.

"I'm really disappointed in the editors of the Collegian for kissing the Administration's ass and agreeing with the Chancellor that I'm a racist when they know I'm not," he continued. "I think this reflects the change in the general student attitude on the UMass campus from several years ago when students realized they had rights and were not afraid of using them."

Bromery's response to the cartoon came after he was contacted by approximately a dozen members of the Third World community who urged him to publicly decry it.

"I can't remember the last time we heard a public statement from Bromery," said McGilvray. "I'm glad he finally got around to making one."

Will this incident alter McGilvray's controversial style?

Bromery: "Racist"

"No," replied the cartoonist flatly. "This will just increase the number of Chancellor Bromery cartoons. And," he added with a smile, "I'd like to thank the Chancellor for all the help he has given my career."

And so Don McGilvray was quaintly amused, his ego masturbated by the thought of having been singled out by the man who "is in charge of UMass." But as far as he was concerned, the issue at hand was relatively cliche — freedom of the press. He had a right to draw whatever he pleased and to see it appear in the Collegian.

But other people saw bigger, more complex issues. For those that thought McGilvray's cartoon was indeed racist, the question arose as to whether he had the right to wave it under twenty thousand noses.

Or what if he was sexist? Or anti-Semitic? And, above all, who was to determine if he was racist, sexist, or anti-semitic? The Collegian editors? Possibly, but who will sit and judge the collective editors' bigotry, or lack of it?

To some, who disregarded racial boundaries, the cartoon was in poor taste simply because it was an affrontery to the office of the Chancellor, and therefore lacked the proper respect which should be accorded that office by a UMass student. But even if the cartoon was deemed disrespectful, should it not be published? And if not, who should be the one to toss it in the can and tell McGilvray to clean up his act?

Suppose for the moment we conclude that McGilvray does indeed have the right to have all of his cartoons printed in the Collegian, uncensored and unretouched (yes, there have been occasions when a 'UMies' was banned or a character's dialogue was altered, much to the artist's chagrin).Now we must ask why this same privilege is not extended to the average joker on campus. Can it truly be a free press if access to its pages is reserved to a few dozen elite?

Granted, the Collegian is a special case. It is in the precarious position of being a community publication and, theoretically, should be accessible to any segment of that community which has something to communicate. In the past, the Collegian editors have found themselves cornered when confronted by a groups demand that their articles be printed, for there is no formal policy to which the newspaper can adhere. Rather, the content of each day's Collegian is governed more or less by a sort of vague notion of what news and commentary is of educational or social vlaue to the campus community, a notion which varies from editor to editor.

Yet, it is important that the editors, and only the editors, are the gateway to the Collegian's pages. They do have the right and responsibility to edit all news and editorial copy which is to appear in the newspaper, and also the power to determine WHAT appears in the paper and what does not.

McGilvray: "Ridiculous"

As a former Collegian editor, I know that Collegian editors tend to be fairly lenient when it comes to editing and selecting copy, almost to the point of assuming an "anything goes" attitude. Perhaps they are just beginning to realize that the power of being selective can be put to good use in producing a quality publication.

Unfortunately, much of the Collegian staff is still adverse to having their work altered in any manner, for reasons which don't go far beyond egotism. Almost all writers, including authors of letters to the editor, are afraid their thoughts and ideas will be tampered with, when in fact their ears should be laid to rest with the knowledge that as standard Collegian procedure, no editing for content is done withouth the author's consent.

To Don McGilvray, each of his cartoons is a work of art, one that cannot be toyed with by an editor without his consent, and that, I think, is a fair policy. It should be up to the editors to decide what appears in the Collegian.

However, in the case of editorial opinions or cartoons, onlyy the authors and the cartoonists, not the editors, are accountable for the opinions presented and the manner in which they are presented.

The editors' chore is to see that a variety of opinions are presented and that they are presented in a responsible manner. And whether or not McGilvray's cartoon was "responsible" is clearly the only issue at hand. Since it was printed we must assume that is was a responsible attack on the Chancellor and, therefore, the editors must back their decision to print it or apologize for it. Instead, they did both, which demonstrates a seeming lack of boldness and-or direction.

Whether McGilvray's cartoon was racist will never be resolved (what if he had the Chancellor saying "that's me, folks" instead of "dat's me, folks"?). What needs to be resolved, and quickly, is this: what grounds shall the editors use for determing what news stories, editorials, and cartoons shall appear in the Collegian.? For this, the editors are answerable not only to their staff, but tot he community as well.

Letters To The Editor

Nine months; no diploma

Gentlemen:

I sincerely hope that this letter will receive immediate attention, since it deals with a matter of great importance to me. I graduated UMass in May, 1973; or should I say - I THINK I have! I have not, after nine months, received my diploma, and I am extremely concerned about the reason for the delay in sending it. I did receive a letter with the U.M. seal on it stating that I had graduated. I received this, however, only because I requested it, since I needed it for my teaching certification and for my employer. I have been patient concerning this matter, but I cannot see how it could take this long for my diploma to be processed and to reach me. I believe I was classified as a deferred May graduate, since one of my Professors from the last semester failed to get my grade in on time. I surely hope that someone will take this matter into hand and give me the consideration that I feel is due to me.

I also would like to inquire about the '73 Yearbook. I don't know if they were mailed to seniors ('73) or not, but I did not receive one. If they are in print, and if I should receive one, free of charge, I would like to know why I have not. If there is a charge, why wasn't I ever offered the chance to pay for one? I know thatsome undergraduates already have them, and I would like to find out why the graduates don't!

I sincerely feel that my undergraduate education at UMass was a worthwhile investment and it is to me, a genuine treasure. I am extremely disappointed that such negligence to myself as a post-graduate has occurred, and I think I am due at least an explanation.

Sincerely,
Lela K. Jones

Towing and repression: a comment

To The Editor:

Since I was one of those who became vocal about getting Groucho Marx to come to UMASS, I thought it would be consistent for me to speak out on two issues that have recently come to my attention. One is a local issue and the other international but needless to say both are more important than Groucho coming to UM.

The local issue concerns towing on our campus. I would like my name to be added to that (hopefully increasing) list of students who are for student control towing. Although my car has never been towed on this campus, I know the aggravation of it because of the experience I had elsewhere.

The second issue was recently brought to world attention by a man named Solzhenitsyn. It was truly painful for me to listen to the news of his arrest. (Perhaps it hurt because my grandfather was arrested and deported to Siberia by the Russians towards the end of World War II. His arrest was for no apparent reason.) Solzhenitsyn's writings and his subsequent arrest testify to the existence of repression in Russia. Last year, another writer named Siniavsky was put in a Russian prison only to find that for the most part the inmates had been imprisoned for religious beliefs. I got this information from a news letter put out by an organization called Jesus to the Communist World Inc, Box 11, Glendale, Calif. 91209. Write to them to find out about some of the persecution going on in Russia. Perhaps someone from the Jewish Community could write in to the Collegian and inform us of Jewish persecution in Russia. Above all we must write to the Kremlin and protest persecution and repression.(I think the correct address is PREMIER KOSYGIN, THE KREMLIN, MOSCOW, USSR). World Opinion freed Solzhenitsyn — World Opinion can free possibly millions more. WRITE!!

Course hassle

To The Editor:

Due to the problems, hassles, and inconveniences to Whitmore, professors, and students concerning course scheduling and the dropping and adding of courses after the first day of classes, we have proposed Course Availibility Bank (CAB). Pre-registration, course change, and final registration would proceed as usual. Proposed CAB would then be the next step. What CAB, in simple terms, hopefully will become is a central information center where students can go and find out about the most current changes occuring in course enrollment such as: (1) course capacity, (2) course and section availability, (3) how to add or drop a course with a simplified course reservation form, without the problems of going to the registrar to get the proper form, or going to different professors hassling to get into class, going back to the registrar to return the forms and just plain causing big headaches and wasting time. This proposal is obviously going to take time and some consideration but we are confident CAB could effectively alleviate so many problems that develop after the 1ST day of classes begin. We know so many others at this University are also concerned and would like to see a new system work.

We need an arena

I've been here for four years. I've seen a lot happen to UMass in that time. But one thing really disappoints me. This campus needs an indoor facility for winter sports. True, we have the cage, but it's not enough.

I've been priviledged to see some really good basketball these past four years. Names like Betancourt, Mathias, Skinner, Peters, Austin, Murphy and, of course, Erving have graced this arena these past few years. Three of those four teams have been or will be NIT teams. Yet they are forced to play their home games in the antiquated Cage and their advancement into big time is being eatly hampered by this. No big time team will come here.

Like Fenway Park, Hicks is a great place to watch a game. You're right on top of the action and the cheering for the home crowd is tremendous. From Jack's Corner (4th Floor Patterson), to Thatcher House to even the Third World, there isn't anywhere that more spirit can be found in supporting the home team. It's one of the things that can inspire a team.

Yet the Cage is way outdated. And now, it won't even draw against some teams. The BU and UVM games are examples of this. While people will come to watch two good teams play each other, they don't want to watch poor teams. They can't be blamed. We need to have some good teams come in here. If only there were more Niagara's.

The UMass-Providence game was a sellout last January. True, we could schedule tough competition in the Springfield Civic Center but students shouldn't have to make a thirty mile trip to see their school's basketball team play. What we need is an arena.

Such an arena can and should be built in the close proximity of campus. It's only function need not be for the basketball program. Concerts, speeches, wrestling meets, roller derby and other events could use such a facility.

With such an arena, UMass could play big time teams and forget about the likes of UVM and BU. Of course, getting out of the YanCon is a must. Who needs it?

I'm sure that if we could get teams like North Carolina, Notre Dame, B.C., St. John's and the like to come up to such an arena, they would be sellouts. (Might also a Moe Howard be a sellout?)

The reason we don't have one is because of "anti-jock" student leaders like Lee Sandwen ('72), Larry Ladd ('73) and Nick Apostola ('74). They have blocked any attempts to get such an arena. I am in favor of a student referendum to see whether or not we should build one. This is the was I see it happening: First, the Athletic Council should get together a committee to make a study involving costs, the type of structure and so on. Then, when a final cost is arrived at, check who is to finance it. If it come from private areas, so be it. But I don't think so. The state, we all realize, won't pay for it. Will the students? THIS IS WHAT SHOULD BE PUT ON A CAMPUS WIDE STUDENT REFERENDUM! Up to now, there has been no way of objectively measuring this. There should be.

We do need this facility. Perhaps, a combination basketball and hockey facility could be built. So come on, Athletic Council, make a study. And then, let's have a student referendum. Let us see if it's feasible to do it. Let's cut out all the bullshit. Let's find out for sure, once and for all.

Nixon backs streaking

My friend Harry Buffbottom, a White House maintainance man was outside the Eastroom cleaning up pidgeon droppings when he overheard the following conversation between Alexander Haig and President Nixon last Tuesday:

"Now Al, I am the President and I want to make it perfectly clear that I am worried about the college students this year.

"Why is that Mr. President?"

"Well you know that I have kept the political scene sufficiently confused for the last three years with help from Mitchell, Stans and all the rest of my loyal aids, but now it looks as if I'm in trouble for real. If we don't keep the campus quiet I will have reneged on another campaign promise. My popularity can't go any lower. I have got to hang on to the job I was elected to do.

"I have a good idea sir, let's organize a sports program for the students. That will keep them busy."

"That's a good idea alright Haig, remind me to take credit for it."

"Yessir."

"What did you have in mind Haig."

"Oh you know, football, baseball, basketball, hockey, just the regulars."

"Where do you suppose we could get all the money to pay for equipment and build stadiums and hockey rinks? You know I cut the budget down on everything except defense this year, and we're still overdrawn a bundle."

"Mmmm, you're right Mr. President, "how about boxing, that doesn't cost too much, and if handled right it can cut down on the number of dissidents."

"That would never work, this generation is full of peace freaks, they don't want to hurt anybody they say."

"Mmmmm, you're right again sir."

"Haig we need a sport that doesn't require any uniforms, no equipment, and no particular place to engage it." Haig, I've got it. Streaking!!! Streaking is the answer to our problems. We must start immediately to get the students of this country to take off their clothes and run around. They'll all get so hung up with streaking that they'll ignore politics for another few months.

But Mr. President, young people aren't very sympathetic wto White House ideas."

"We can take care of that Haig. We'll offer scholarships for streaking, we'll set up streaking leagues. We can get Hugh Hefner and Helen Gurley Brown to be recruiters!"

"Imagine it Haig, the whole nation will be streaking around and I will be able to stay in office!"

"Mr. President, you are a genius! I have a good idea too, we can create a bureaucracy to control it, we can call it the Office of Streaking Management, it sounds very official."

"No, no, Haig you have to give these youth oriented programs a catchy name, we'll call it the American Streakers Society, ASS."

"Right-on Mr. President, you have done it again."

Will this man get an A.S.S. Scholarship and streak his way into grad school?

The Collegian regrets that on yesterday's editorial pages the writing of Matt Tackeff was inadvertently placed under the headline and kicker for Reid Fishman and vice versa. The error was apparently made by the Collegian's printer, The Ware River News.

Complaining

By KAREN CMAR

Benjamin Franklin once said, "there are only two certainties in life, death and taxes." It appears lately that there are actually three certainties, death, taxes and complaining. It is inevitable; no matter what is done or created or said that there will always be someone complaining about it.

Don't get me wrong, there are many important purposes for complaining. If it weren't for complaining how would we ever fill the editorial pages. If it weren't for complaining what would we do with our spare time. And besides that, I hear that once something actually was improved by complaining.

One of the great artists of totally useless complaining is our beloved cartoonist, Don McGilvary who found the pastime of making us laugh too simple, and took up the occupation of complaining about people he doesn't know and things he knows nothing about. First there was coach "McFierce" who is actually not like that at all. Then there were English teachers reading Playboy (that's really a laugh). Finally there was his Chancellor Bromery. This was certainly his finest act of complaining because not only did he complain about nothing but he because all kinds of people to complain about his complaining about nothing.

Another gem of complaining was the editorial by Bob Schier on Disney World which appeared in last Friday's paper. The amazing thing about Disney World is that it has so little to complaint about. It is a beautiful, spotlessly clean place that experiments with many solutions to important problems including city planning, mass transportation and pollution. It does present the tourist with an imaginary world where everything is perfedt and none of the outside world's problems exist. But a place where one can escape the reality of modern life for a day or a weekend is hardly something to complain about.

Yes, it certainly is hard to find something that hasn't been complained about. Joyce Kosofsky has complained about sports and Bill Ballou complains about politics. Bob Estelle complains about Communism and Matt Takeff complains about astrology. What is most amazing though, is that with all of these complaints (politics, sports, communism and astrology and countless other complainable things) still exist on campus. This raises the inevitable question, "Does complaining do any good?" to which the answer must be, "No, not usually, but it sure helps pass the time.

Nixon deserves fair trial

To The Editor:

Joe Formica's attempt to restore the personhood of Richard Nixon (February 21, 1974) is, I feel, a commendable act of Christian generosity. "He laughs, cries, loves, hates...desire(s) to be successful in what he wants to do." Few person's would have denied Nixon's humanness. Rather, an overwhelming body of supporting evidence, I suspect, could be submitted strictly on the grounds of Nixon's characteristically human fallibility. It was because of this humanness, this "sin(fullness)" that the authors of our governing system provided for a "separation of powers". Remember the term "checks and balances"? Right now, Richard Nixon is an innocent man, legally. It is up to the Senate Judiciary Committee to collect evidence that proves otherwise. That's due process.

I have to disagree with Mr. Formica, though, that to "con, cheat, and antagonize" are acceptable, much less legitimizing, methods for achievement. Even the Presidency as an end does not justify them. In fact, they tarnish that office in ways far more destructive than its devaluation as the "big prize" in American politics. If these practices are, as Mr. Formica contends a part of "our everyday lives," certainly such a climate is propagated by the widespread acceptance of corruption within the government's highest offices. Furthermore, it is hard for me to see Richard Nixon as a sympathetic figure, i.e., "....suffer(ing) tremendously when he reads the paper or watches the news." his "suffering" betrays him then, since if he really is innocent, morally, he has nothing to fear, not even another year of Watergate, and he is at peace with himself.

In his novel, Advice and Consent (Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1959), Allen Drury (ironically, one of Spiro Agnew's favorite writers), through a fictitious U.S. Senator in a somewhat similar situation, offers some appropriate insight:

> Judge not that ye not be judged, the injunction said; let him who is without sin cast the first stone. But the practical needs of society had made the admonition impossible to affirm. First the responsibility and then, if there were integrity enough and courage to face the consequences whatever they might be, there came the hard necessity to step forward and say, I will cast it, for someone must. And, if the troops were with you, you succeeded in rendering judgement fairly or unfairly according to your lights, humbled as you might be, if you were lucky, by your own human failings: and if the troops were not with you, the stones were hurled back upon you, and the judgement was reversed.

"Richard Nixon was elected by the people of the United States to lead them", the reality of Mr. Formica's statement, particularly for us in Massachusetts, has reached a level of clarity considerably less than perfection. It is the legitimacy of that election which, among other things is being questioned, since it relects on the quality of the leadership which Nixon can provide. If he is really the people's choice, as the 1972 Presidential election indicated then they trust his judgement, and will follow him.

Mr. Formica said that he "wouldn't hang (Richard Nixon)". I wouldn't either. I think that we owe him a fair trial.

Eroticized bureaucracy

To The Editor:

Memo on Otto and Herbie.

Study them carefully Dr. French. These stoned out creatures who cut class, turn in copied papers from stolen books and then return to their lairs in the dark. Study their contempt for the irrelevance of their traditions. They "ball" in the halls of this eroticized bureaucracy and wander in the cement wasteland downed out beyond any compensatory pride in revolt against a more mindless university culture which seeks the historical camouflage of tradition within bright high buildings

The university of the faculty is the mirror image of McGilvray's UMIES. Utterly engrossed in the details of committee work, these specialists breed and rebreed an academic methodology designed to pluck hairs from the face of terror - a methodology lost in a sea of mimeographed material. The grand imperial vision from the top of that unexplored library lacks the historical memory and the tragic awareness that a society which seeks to live like an empire, will die like one. The Huns could laugh at themselves Doctor, and that is why they won.

Lovejoy: a lovely paradox

To The Editor:

Last week, some guy totally destroyed over 50,000 dollars worth of weather tower just to make a statement. He'll probably do a stint in some stinking jail and come out in time to see his dreaded reactor already built, whipping-up enough power to keep the population of Hartford from having to give up their automatic garage-door openers or brush their teeth manually.

So why did he do it? Why bother going through the incredible amount of hassles just to make a statement? Surely he could've sent a letter to the Collegian and rallied the masses to his support.

The truth of the matter, and it is a painful one which burns through the core of my breast, is that his action didn't even stir up a whisper. By Tuesday, the issue is dead.

"Hear about that guy yesterday who did in that tower?" I must have asked a hundred people.

"Yeah, heavy shit huh? So who's goin' for coffee?"

"I'll go."

And I went, and I had a beer and played some pinball. And I went home and thought.

"Civil disobedience", he says. Neither Ghandi, Thoreau, King or Tolstoy would have backed him up on that one. After all, he was violent. He destroyed the private property of those people and hurt them more than they would have him. So he's not justified, he's some kind of "nut" who should be thrown in the clink to protect decent folk the likes of you and me from potential harm. That's the law and that's what'll happen.

But who's he harming? Northeast Utilities? John Dandau and the crew from "What in the World"? The way Lovejoy sees it, the "investor owned" N.U. is not acting in accordance with community interests by duping the populace through well placed advertising and monetary persuasion into thinking that a nuclear reactor in their backyard is the same as a local branch of Tel. and Tel.: it means jobs for the locals and a generally boosted economy. Reactors are safe they say,...and say,....and say again until one begins to wonder why it is in the first place that a utilities outfit which monopolizes an entire valley should need to spend money derived from a higher electric bill to convince the people that the company has their best interest at heart.

There should be at least a little bit of doubt in our minds and if this guy's been doing his homework, (which he has), comes to the conclusion that we're being duped and can't afford the big time lawyers to fight N.U., then it's at least a logical extension of the thought to make a little noise somehow. And if destroying the property is such a dastardly deed, then aren't we drawn to the classic analogy of the man aiming a knife at our angelic little sister's throat and us holding the gun that could stop him? We shoot and deem that a loved one's life is more justified in continuing than that of a potential murderer? Or do we stand and watch, knowing that we are in the right by not harming a fellow human being?

A lovely paradox indeed, and some of us might enjoy getting into it a little deeper over cheese and wine, but Lovejoy was brought to a point where the paradox was nice, but the choice was imperative. He decided, he acted responsibly, no one was hurt, and he's got my respect. The least we can do is let the rumble of his thunder bounce a few times between the green hills of the area and consider for ourselves what this reactor really means to and for us before someone buys the hills themselves and ships them off to a New York museum.

'Impeachable offense'

A second view

"The Framers left the matter somewhat vague because, fearing illimitable power, they wished to curb the presidency...."

By MILTON CANTOR
UMass Prof. of History

What is an impeachible offense under the Constitution? Last Friday the counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, John Doar, said a non-criminal act could under certain conditions fit the "high crimes and misdemeanors" the Constitution defines as impeachable. The next day the Justice Dept. said just the opposite. Monday night President Nixon told a national TV audience the Constitution is "very specific" on the point and defined an impeachible act as an essentially criminal one. Vice-President Gerald Ford has said impeachment can be voted by the house for just about anything they don't like about the way a President conducts himself and Att. Gen. William Saxbe tacitly agreed on Wednesday.

What do scholars think? Today the Collegian runs the second in a continuing series detailing just that. Milton Cantor, University professor of Constitutional History, has advised the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and with Amherst College's Henry Steele Commanger is an acknowledged expert on the Constitution and impeachment. Here is what he has to say:

Like the work of the more visible Watergate committee, that of the House Judiciary Committee, serves as a sort of folk moot. It has already compelled many of our countrymen, in Henry James's words, to have "eaten of the tree of knowledge. It has helped them to rediscover the living Constitution, which is one of the great ironies of our history, since this rediscovery evolves out of such illegal practices as mass arrests of demonstrators, attempts to impose prior restraints upon publications, claims of an unlimited right to bug and wiretap, unauthorized war in Cambodia, the chilling White House program of "domestic intelligence," efforts to tamper with a federal judge in the Ellsberg case; since it comes at a time when the "national security" blanket has been thrown over everything from interior decoration to common crimes, when the nation's faith has been corrupted and its legal tribunes founder in a virtual morass of moral obtuseness and procedural as well as institutional atrophy.

Ironically, the, Watergate and developments attendant upon it have opened up a national debate on such critical issues as presidential power, presidential war-making, checks and balances, impeachment, etc. Regarding the last, it has prompted a discussion of definitional matters, most pointedly on what is an impeachable offense.

What is really meant by that express provision of the Constitution that provides for the impeachment of "the President, the Vice President and all civil officers"? Gerald Ford once replied, "the only honest answer is whatever a majority of the House of Representatives considers it to be in a given moment of history."

But must we, then, hedge in the definition along the lines offered some days ago by President Nixon, and conclude that "high crimes and misdemeanors" is simply an inflated version of ordinary "crimes and misdemeanors"? I think not. The Framers left the matter somewhat vague because, fearing illimitable power, they wished to curb the presidency. The Framers, moreover, understood that "high crimes and misdemeanors" were primarily state crimes — that is, political crimes, as distinguishable from crimes against the person, such as felonious assault or murder. The latter crimes, according to English criminal law — which was the Framers' model — were punishable by courts, but "high crimes and misdemeanors" were punishable by Parliament and did not require an indictable crime. Neglect of duty, subversion of Parliamentary power, corruption that fell short of ordinary crimes were, as Raoul Berger has observed, impeachable offenses.

The Framers knew their common and criminal law of England; they feared centralization of power by the President, having just emerged from this very sort of executive tyranny under George III; and they, moreover, relied upon Blackstone as their theoretical guide and accepted his definition of high misdemeanor as "the maladministration of such officers, as are in the public trust and employment". "Maladministration" should indeed be italicized. It is the key word. Writing in that hot Philadelphia summer of 1787, George Mason, an influential delegate from Virginia, included "maladministration in the definition of impeachable offenses. He explained why: "treason as defined in the Constitution will not reach many great and dangerous offenses...Attempts to subvert the Constitution," which is not an indictable and ordinary crime, "may not be Treason as above defined."

But Mason's friend, James Madison, called it too "vague a term," and they then substituted "high crimes and misdemeanors. Two years later, however, Representative Madison told the House that "maladministration" was included in this revised phrase. This architect of the Constitution, if it had but one, was also of the opinion that the President's power to remove officials would "make him, in a peculiar manner, responsible for the conduct and subject him to impeachment himself, if he suffers them to perpetrate with impunity high crimes or misdemeanors against the United States, or neglects to superintend their conduct, so as to check their excesses." Surely, by Richard Nixon's own words (of March 22, 1973) he is guilty of neglect, for he stated: It is clear that unethical as well as illegal activities took place in the course of the election campaign....to the extent that I failed to prevent them, I should have been more vigilant."

Surely, too, Madison's further contention that displacement "from office a man whose merits require that he should be continued in it," is an act of maladministration and consequently impeachable has an obvious relevance to the firing of Archibald Cox.

Turning to a couple of later precedents, which is all that space allows, Andrew Jackson — who was a strong executive if ever there was one — nonetheless admitted that the President must be "accountable at the bar of public opinion for every act of his Administration." And when the House voted in 1868 to impeach Andrew Johnson, it construed an impeachable offense as "one in its nature or consequences subversive of some fundamental or essential principle of government or highly prejudicial to the public interest, and this may consist of the Constitution, of law, of an official oath, or of duty, by an act committed or omitted or, without violating a positive law, by the abuse of discretionary powers from improper motives or for an improper purpose." This broad construction still stands as precedent, even though the Senate refused by one vote short of the necessary two thirds to convict President Johnson.

George Mason said, "no point is of more importance then that right of impeachment be continued." It was, and is, essential in the system of error-correcting devices the Framers built into the Constitution. It was the counterweight to a fixed four-year term, to remind the President that he was not an elected king. He remains accountable. And impeachment is still essential procedure. Indeed, Richard Nixon has himself repeatedly claimed, through his counsel, that it is the only remedy for the abuse of presidential power.

Surely the executive branch has acted in ways which — using the impeachment criterion employed by Hatton Sumners, House manager in a 1936 impeachment — "cause people to doubt the integrity of the respondent...." Surely doubts have been raised about the present incumbent. There was the secret and unauthorized bombing of Cambodia in 1969-1970, violating the war-making powers, usurping congressional power, subverting the Constitution. Or witness the President's flouting of explicit congressional law prohibiting the expenditure of funds in Laos and Cambodia — by using 100 million dollars to support the forces of other nations in these countries at this time.

There is the presidential approval, in principle, of electronic surveillance, mail covers, and burglaries for the purpose of gathering domestic intelligence. There is presidential flouting of the Mansfield Amendment. Above all, shall that man be above it, who can commit the most extensive injustice?" We do know the Framers' response and the weapon that they used.

Next week, Congressman Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield)

Political advertising policy change may increase rates

BOSTON (AP) — A change in state law which goes into effect March 12 may create some problems for Massachusetts newspapers and eventually could lead to higher rates for political advertising.

The change is to an existing statute which requires that political ads be signed by a registered voter. The signer's name appears at the bottom of the add.

As of March 12, the signer will have to file a witnessed statement with the newspaper acknowledging that he has agreed to have his name used. The newspaper, under the amended law, will be required to keep the statement on file for a year.

The bill requiring the statements was filed last year by state Rep. Thomas G. Simons, R-Montague, who said there have been frequent instances of unauthorized use of names in political advertising.

The record keeping will be a "pain in the neck" said William Plante, executive editor of a chain of newspapers in Essex County and vice president in charge of constitutional affairs of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association.

But although the new law apparently isn't particularly objectionable to newspaper publishers, it could lead to higher political advertising rates if the perennial effort at the State House to regulate these rates ever is successful, Plante said.

Massachusetts newspapers, as elsewhere, used to charge higher rates for political advertising than for other types of advertising.

In the interest of helping to keep election costs down, Plante said, all daily newspapers in the state have voluntarily eliminated the practice during the past few years.

Despite this, bills have been filed each year, including three this year, to outlaw the practice.

In an advisory opinion to the Massachusetts Senate last year, the state Supreme Court said any legislation affecting advertising rates should take special handling which some ads may require into account.

"Theoretically then, according to the State Supreme Court, we now have a situation where we would be justitied in establishing a differential for political advertising," Plante said in reference to the new law.

A.F. doctor says he was called liar by captain

CHICOPEE (AP)-A Westover Air Force Base medical official told a court martial here Wednesday that he was called a liar and "a disgrace to the uniform" by a 28-year-old Air Force captain.

Lt. Col. Neal J. Logan, the medical officer testified in the second day of the court martial of Capt. Charles M. Kolinor, a physician charged with disrespect to a superior officer.

Logan, chief of hospital services at Westover's medical facility, said Kolinor's accusation occurred during a discussion of whether Logan should participate in the medical officer of the day rotation.

"He (Kolinor) turned to leave to go out the doorway, stopped, turned around and that's when he said 'You're a liar. You always lie,' or something to that effect," Logan testified.

"He went on to say that I was a disgrace to the uniform and that he had no respect for me," Logan added.

Defense attorney Stephen Hyman of New York City contended the verbal confrontation occured on a doctor-to-doctor level and not as a captain-to-colonel. Hyman called two witnesses who testified that rank is rarely considered in dealings among military physicians.

Kolinor, who graduated first in the class of 1966 at the Air Force Academy, has charged the court martial is the result of attempts by superiors to get him.

He has applied for conscientious objector status.

Tighter controls needed for plant

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP). Three top state officials have agreed that the state should tighten its control over the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Plant at Vernon.

Health Commissioner Anthony Robbins, Atty. Gen. Kimberly Cheney and Public Service Board Chairman William Gilbert decided at a meeting Wednesday that tougher controls over the nuclear plant were needed.

Cheney said the need for tighter control has been emphasized by a series of malfunctions and shutdowns at the plant during the last two weeks.

Drugs missing in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — An East Boston drugstore has been shut down after agents of the Federal Drug Enforcement Administration and state investigators found large amounts of drugs missing and unaccounted for.

Mahoney Pharmacy, Inc., had its license temporarily suspended wednesday by the Massachusetts Pharmacy Board, pending an investigatation of possible violation of state and federal drug abuse laws.

Some 185,000 pills, including some in the highest abuse potential category, disappeared during the past nine months, according to federal agent Lewis Fisher.

Drugstore owner Richard V. Moscaritolo of Melrose told the pharmacy board he had no idea what happened to the missing pills.

UFW boycott gets support

SPRINGFIELD (AP) - A third area grocery chain has agreed to participate in a United Farm Workers boycott on non-UFW lettuce and grapes.

The Food Mart chain, which runs 20 supermarkets in western Massachusetts and Connecticut, agreed this week to support the boycott, according to Kenneth Allen of the UFW office here.

Stop and Shop and Finast have supported the boycott.

Philosophy is a growing major

By BOB DEA
MDC Staff

There are no more than 75 undergrad majors in philosophy at this institution, an astonishing few when one considers the vast multitudes of undergrads around.

Members of the department seem to feel that, although a fairly young department (it has only been coherently existent for approx. 5 years, with most of the faculty being equally recent), it has been one of the strongest and most organized depts. at UMass.

The faculty are a distinguished and reputable cast of characters: virtually all hail from places such as Columbia, Stanford, Yale, Princeton, etc, and have been known to publish writings of widespread reknown. The department offers a strong graduate program, which gets deluged by applications from the "best places" annually.

Graduates of the program have even been able to get jobs at other schools, a remarkable feat for any graduate these days. Still, undergraduate interest is quite low.

This has become a matter of concern to the department. Prof. Vere Chappell, head of the department, expressed his dissatisfaction when I interviewed him last week. "I don't feel philosophy is a big enough part of the life of undergrads" he said. "We would like to see more significant contact with students. We are offering many varied courses and programs now, but still aren't reaching as many students as desirable." He went on to say that there was already a lot of "activity" among the grad students, but felt there was "too much distance between the profs and the undergrads." Professors tend to spend a great deal of timeworking with grad students, and more time and effort should be devoted to the undergrads as well.

The phil. dept. carries on an exchange of profs and resources with the Five Colleges and UMass Boston (the only dept. to do so!), widening the variety of courses offered. Interdisciplinary courses are being offered, and three new interdisciplinary major programs involving phil. have been designed and are awaiting university approval: Classics, Linguistics, and Mathematics. Also there is now a teacher preparation program worked out with the school of Ed., training for certification as a high school philosophy teacher (there is now a big push in many public high schools to introduce phil. into the curriculum). Other departmental activities include a guest lecture series, informal parties and dinners with faculty of the dept., etc.

A memorandum from the American Philosophical Association warns that positions for graduates with Ph.D's in phil. are few and growing scarcer. This kind of thing scares undergrads away from philosphy; they question the usefulness and practicality of such a major. Prof. Chappell's reply to this was: "The study of philosophy, like most social sciences, is general preparation and definitely not vocational, like Engineering or Accounting. Learning philolophy means learning intellectual discipline: it teaches one to be rigorous, logical, critical, and effective in thought. In any intellectual field it is necessary to develop your rational powers, learn to be critical, and learn firm control over your ability to reason. When you study philosophy, you learn about the structure of thinking, the process of rational thought. Philosophy teaches these skills, expands your capabilities, and broadens your horizons. It's an excellent preparation for anyone planning on going to law, grad. or professional school."

Students of the third floor of James House relax in thier corridor, one wall of which is solid Schlitz cans. It has taken most of this semester to duplicate the efforts of last semester. Those cans were stolen over intersession.

Early boosts med school expansion

A state representative charged the Sargent administration with attempting to "stifle" growth of the UMass medical school in Worcester.

Rep. Joseph D. Early, (D-Worcester,) at a meeting of the House Ways and Means Committee Wednesday said Sargent's proposed budget allows admission of only 16 students next September, though the school plans call for 64 students next fall and an increase of 100 more students by 1975.

Early charged that pressure to cut back on the med school's growth has come from private med schools at Harvard, Boston University and Tufts.

State Education Secretary Joseph M. Cronin argued that the med school already is costing too much.

Cronin said he objected to "The rate of increase and expensiveness" of the school, saying at one point the state was spending $50,000 per student at the institution.

Answering Rep. Early's charge that private med schools were responsible for the UMass med school's budget woes, Cronin said, "The private sector has not indicated that they want to stop the growth of the Massachusetts medical school."

Original plans for the school called for classes of 100 students each September, beginning in 1975, with a total enrollment reaching 400 students.

Don't speak of the wall with irreverence

By JIM LAVRAKAS
MDC Staff

These days inspiration comes from strange sources. For the majority of a third floor corridor of James House in Southwest though, it's not the blood in their veins which is the life of their inspiration and comradery--it's the beer.

And the BeerWall.

"It's an historical shrine which represents many memorable events", says Brian Kelly, a corridor-mate. "Almost everyone on the corridor shares in the economic and physical burdens of the Wall." It seems that most everyone really puts their gut into it, too.

Starting last semester as a typical exercise in geometrical construction (commonly known as a "pyramid") the corridor walls were slowly covered. The building process was refined to a machine-like precision, and one rand of beer--Schlitz. At semester break over 3500 cans illuminated the corridor and plans were in the offing to use the tabs of the cans to buy a seeing eye dog for a blind person.

The spirit of the Wall also ushered into existence the first of two Passout Festivals whose two single purposes were to foster comradship and gather together more construction materials for the wall.

Imagine how this brotherhood felt on arriving back at school to find that their monument to the visceral joys of life had been swiped. "We were bummed out", said John Iannacci, another worker on the wall.

"But", said Brian Kelley, "At 3: in the morning, like a devine light" came the solution to their despondency and desperation. They decided to take donations for the Wall from the campus at large and reward the largest contributor with a case of the corridor's fovorite frosty stuff.

"We will stop the donations as soon as we reach 3500", said Kelly. "They're really symbolic cans. but we know we drank 'em."

Iannacci asserted that he has no guilt feelings about taking contributions. "You have to earn the Wall, not just ask for cans." At each Passout Festival each participant is asked to drink a case. That's earning it.

"We should have the Wall back to its original proportions - considering the progress so far - in two to three weeks", Iannacci and Kelly agreed. Almost 2000 cans to date.

It seemed for a while that another crisis loomed up for the Wall. "John Cunniff, structural engineer, is leaving this semester,,' Kelly said.

"There was a moment of panic", Iannacci said, "then two capable apprentices were obtained."

It should be mentioned, at least, that these illustrious guzzlers do not just guzzle away their hours at UMass. Kelly claims that the average cum. on the corridor is 3.1.

There's something else involved here. The general atmosphere on the corridor is not one of lethargy and stupor. They're like a hive of bees up there! And they're still looking for more assistance with their cause. So, this weekend, after you tuck away that case of your own, call them at 6-7565 or 6-7573. You never know.

Goldwater: Republicans threatened by budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater said today that the Watergate-weakened Republican party is being further threatened by President Nixon's 1974 budget.

"I believe it is a political mistake with the gravest kind of overtones for the welfare of my country," Goldwater, R-Ariz., said in remarks prepared for a Young Republican leadership conference here.

"If you think our party is in trouble at this point, I suggest that you take a shot at predicting what kind of shape it will be in if the inflationary dynamite of a $304-billion budget is laid at our doorstep," Goldwater said.

The budget for the year beginning July 1 represents White House abandonment of "its axwielding austerity plans for reducing the size and cost of the federal establishment," he said.

He referred to a Wall Street Journal editorial indicating that Nixon is seeking an accommodation with the Congress he earlier had castigated for extravagance.

"If the President's advisers believe that any progress can be made toward appeasing Mr. Nixon's would-be impeachers by compromising economic policy, they are badly mistaken," Goldwater said.

Richardson defines impeachment grounds

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson says he thinks a president can be impeached for acts resulting from gross abuse of authority or neglect of responsibility.

A crime need not have been committed, Richardson said.

The former cabinet officer thus differed with President Nixon, who said Monday a president could only be impeached for committing a criminal offense.

Richardson said the major legal question facing the House Judiciary Committee is whether Nixon had general responsibility for Watergate and the alleged cover-up even though the President might not have been directly involved.

The Judiciary Committee is deciding whether to recommend that the full House adopt an impeachment resolution.

Richardson quit as attorney general last October rather than follow Nixon's order that he fire special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, who was subsequently dismissed by a lower Justice Department official.

Asked to give his definition of grounds for impeachment, Richardson said:

"I think that an impeachable offense is an action or a failure to act which involves the gross abuse of authority or neglect of responsibility. It may or may not include an offense that is indictable under the U.S. penal code."

Americans converting paper to gold

NEW YORK (AP) — With most of her life savings in her pocketbook, a 42-year-old waitress joined the growing number of Americans who are lining up at coin dealers to convert the dollar into gold as a hedge against inflation.

"I wish I had done this three weeks ago," the woman said, confessing she was hardly a numismatist. "But I'm learning."

With inflation continuing and gold prices soaring, the city's biggest coin dealers report that Americans are buying gold frantically, wildly and voluminously. By law, Americans can own gold only as collectors.

"We can't even handle the volume any more," said Luis Vigdor, coin manager at Manfra, Tordella & Brookes Inc. at Rockefeller Center. "I've never seen a situation like this."

Benjamin Stack, a partner at Stacks Coin Co., the nation's oldest and biggest, termed the situation "madness."

"Every now and then you get a traditional collector," he said, adding that new consumers of gold coins were mainly professional persons, "who are aware of what is taking place."

Wednesday, U.S. $20 pieces were going for $360. Two days earlier, the price was $330. And just two weeks earlier, it was $260.

Vigdor said customers are waiting one to two hours at the rate of a couple of hundred a day just to buy gold.

"It's not only here," he said. "I speak to dealers all over, and it's nationwide.

"Who wants paper" he asked. "What the hell are you doing to do with it."

At 100, she's handing out $100 checks

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Agnes Graham celebrated her 100th birthday Wednesday by writing out $100 checks to each of 16 of her favorite charities.

Only her lawyer knows how much money Miss Graham, a retired school teacher, has given away. A financial adviser said she invested her earnings as a school teacher wisely at a time when income taxes didn't take as big a bite as they do now.

She was born 100 years ago at Lee, Mass.

At her birthday party at Cascade Manor, a retirement home, a large bulletin board was covered with thank you notes from past beneficiaries of her gifts.

A rescue boat is named "Miss Agnes" after her at the Boy Scout camp at Florence. A college in Greece annually holds a "Miss Agnes day."

On the day before her birthday, the chancellor of the University of Kansas, her alma mater, called to wish her well and to thank her for her financial help to his institution.

She is deaf and has trouble seeing but, greeting guests at her party, she said, "I feel like a thousand."

'Truthful' artist sprays a Picasso

NEW YORK (AP) — A man who said he was an artist wanting to "tell the truth" sprayed red paint across the famed "Guernica" painting by Pablo Picasso at the Museum of Modern Art in midtown Manhattan Thursday.

A self-styled artist, the alleged vandal was apprehended by a guard and taken into police custody within moments.

In letters more than a foot high, he sprayed, "KILL LIES ALL." But the museum began removing the paint immediately and said the masterpiece cubist work about the Spanish civil war was undamaged.

The alleged vandal identified himself as Tony Shafrazi, 30, authorities said.

Asked why he did it, Shafrazi said, "I'm an artist, and I want to tell the truth."

He declined to say anything more about himself.

Museum visitors who witnessed the desecration of the painting, which is massive and surrounded by Picasso's studies preparing for its execution, said an unidentified man tried to stop the vandal but was shaken off.

"I'm an artist," the vandal was quoted as saying to the man who interceded. "Leave me alone."

At that point, a guard grappled with the vandal, who shouted, "Call the curator."

The painting memoralizes an undefended Basque town that was destroyed in an air raid in April 1937.

Morning Call Coffee Stand

Where the great met the not-so-great

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) — William Faulkner and Sherwood Anderson used to sit on their adjoining French Quarter balconies back in the '20s, dropping BBs on unsuspecting passers-by in the alley below.

As the story is told, a direct hit on a woman carrying laundry was worth one point, a priest brought two and a tourist, three. The loser bought coffee and doughnuts for both at the nearly Morning Call Coffee Stand.

There the faces of the two famous writers mingled with the weathered visages of fishermen and farmers and the bright cheeks of society's debutantes.

For 103 years the great sat among the not-so-great at Morning Call, burning their tongues on hot chicory coffee and splattering powdered sugar all over themselves. It was the usual way to end a night on the town or a day selling produce in the open air French Market.

First opened for the farmers who peddled their vegetables at the market, it later attracted tourists from all over the world with its main fare — cafe au lait, a rich brew of coffee and boiled milk; and beignets, square doughnuts liberally sprinkled with sugar.

This week Al Jurisich will pack up the marble counters, mirrors and coffee urns and carry to the suburbs the business begun by his grandfather in 1871.

"So many faces in here are familiar to me," he said on one of the last days. "I've seen all kinds of people in here, Gary Cooper, Edward G. Robinson....Phil Harris was here last night raising hell with my brother for leaving."

A French Market rennovation project took away the parking places that attracted local residents, who make up the bulk of its business. And Jurisich said he was socked with a $70,000 assessment as his share of the project, intended to increase tourist appeal.

"It's a hard thing to pack up and pull out. My people have been here all my life. I ran around this market when I was a kid. But conditions have changed. I can't pay my waiters with tradition."

Chess club

By JIM LANE

This weekend the UMass Campus Center Chess Club will sponsor a variety of chess tournaments, designed to give every interested player competition at his-her own level. On Sautrday the club will hold the 4th UMass Novice Chess Championship, open only to those who have never played in a nationally rated tournament.The entry fee is $1, and the winner will receive a year's membership in the U.S. Chess Federation.

On Sunday, more experienced players will compete in the Second Amherst Sunday Open, with at least $50 in cash prizes plus seven trophies. All players must be U.S. Chess Federation members ($10, under 20 $5), and USCF will issue national ratings, based on performance, for all who play. This tournament will be split into two sections, one open to all, one open only to those in USCF Classes D and E or unrated players. The entry fee is $3 for those competing just for trophies, $7 for those competing for cash as well, with $2 off for anyone joining USCF for the first time.

Both tournaments will be four rounds with no knockouts — winners play winners and losers play losers. Registration will close at 9:45 A.M. each morning in Campus Center Room 809. Players who have chess boards and sets should bring them.

Philosopher

Existentialist philosopher Hazel Barnes will present a paper entitled, "Sartre and Being-With-Others", at 3:30 this afternoon in room 162 of the Campus Center. The reception will be held at 9:00 p.m. in the lounge of Dickinson House in the Orchard Hill Complex. Refreshments will be served.

Recycling

Much of UMass paper waste is doing just that — going to waste. Instead of being recycled, much is simply thrown away. This is not due to lack of convenience, since there are many deposits for recyclable paper on campus, so the problem must be that many are unaware of what types are and are not recyclable.

If so, the following list may be helpful: items are acceptable for recycling are computer cards, newspapers, paper bags, cardboard cartons, magazines, cards, letters, and envelopes, notebooks, (minus the spiral), soiled paper towels, napkins, and tissues. Those unacceptable for recycling: carbon paper, milk cartons, cellophane (envelopes with cellophane windows), photographs, aluminum foil, styrofoam, any plastics, any waxed paper products, stencils, mimeos or dittos.

Mens' center

Racial segregation continues in schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department said Wednesday Kansas City, Kan., public schools have intentionally continued racial segregation despite the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling 20 years ago.

The charge was made in pleadings filed in U. S. District Court in Kansas Cit to amend and supplement a faculty desegregation suit filed by the Justice Department May 18.

Since the Supreme Court decision in 1954, racial segregation in Kansas City has been perpetuated through the location of new schools, establishment of school attendance zones, school feeder patterns, faculty assignments and student transportation, the government said.

"The result of these practices is that 60 per cent of the black students of Kansas City, Ka., attend segregated schools," the government said.

The school system has approximately 33,000 students, 11,690 of them black.

Postal rates up tomorrow

WASHINGTON (AP) — It will cost 2 cents more to mail a letter or postcard after midnight Friday.

And before long people will be paying more for mailings from their book or record club, merchandise from mail-order houses and, in some cases, magazines and newspapers.

The new cost for first-class mail will be 10 cents, for airmail 13 cents and for postcards 8 cents.

The cost of mailing a one-pound bundle of books or records will go up to 30 cents over five years, an increase of 14 cents. As an example of magazine costs, the Postal Service estimated that mailing the Reader's Digest will go from the current 4 cents a copy to 8 cents a copy in three years.

The new stamps are available now. The Jefferson Memorial replaces former President Dwight Eisenhower on the nation's basic stamp.

Publishers can choose to absorb the increased costs or raise advertising rates instead of subscription rates, but a spokesman for the Magazine Publishers Association said publishers are expected to pass along the increases to subscribers where possible.

The publishers association and other bulk mailers still are trying to convince the Postal Rate Commission to trim the increases. But Postal Service officials see no chance the commission, which must grant final approval to rate changes, will act before Saturday.

The Cost of Living Council earlier had delayed the increases for two months, saving mail users $236 million. The Postal Service will ask Congress to make up the money.

Amherst candidate bulletin

School committee Board of selectmen re-elections

Maria Roberts has announced her candidacy for one of the two three-year terms on the Amherst School committee. These terms will be filled at the time of the Amherst Town Election on April 9th, after the field of candidates has been narrowed at the Amherst Town Caucus on March 5th. Voters thus have two opportunities to express their views on the candidates.

Mrs. Roberts, an Amherst resident for 12 years, and an active participant in community affairs, will place emphasis during her campaign on evaluation of school programs and on community participation in School Committee decision making.

Among her major goals:

—Maximum expression of opinion, from parents of children in the Amherst school system: "I want the Committee to make intelligent decisions based on the members' knowledge of townspeople's many viewpoints as well as the opinions of the members of the staff of the schools."

The candidate has also stressed her interest in promoting a School Committee of independent spirit, and one that would help people understand more fully the programs under discussion and those in operation within the schools.

Mrs. Roberts has been a volunteer aide at the Mark's Meadow School library for three years, and a member of the Mark's Meadow parent council. Presently she is a member of the Task Force on the future of Mark's Meadow School. For more than a year she has attended most of the meetings of the Amherst and Regional School Committees and visited in all of the local schools. Mrs. Roberts is a graduate of Radcliffe College and holds a masters degree from Johns Hopkins University. She and her husband, Larry, and their four elementary school age children reside at 19 Nelson Circle.

Nancy B. Eddy announced today that she has filed papers for re-election to the Amherst Board of Selectmen. Mrs. Eddy, who resides at 127 Mill Lane, was first elected to the Board in 1971 and is now a candidate for her second term.

She stated, "My major efforts during the past three years have been in the area of environmental concerns, citizen participation in government, and in re-organizing the Board of Selectmen so that we could become an active force providing leadership to the Town. While I am sometimes discouraged by the length of time change takes, I do feel I, along with other members of the Board, can point to solid areas of achievement."

"The last three years have seen the initiation and final report of the Select Committee on Goals, the initiation of long-range capital budgeting, a thorough investigation of the plans for the secondary sewage treatment plant in the hope of utilizing innovative methods, the beginning of recycling efforts by the Town, the passage on a local and then on a state level of farmland assessment, the establishment of a bicycle paths committee, a land acquisition review committee, and a historical commission. We have formed numerous special committees to investigate problems and issues. We have seen the beginning of the Boltwood Walk plan, of protection of aquifer recharge areas, of water conservation efforts, of increased communication among town boards and committees. We have opened up our communications packet in the belief that an informed public is the keystone to the democratic process."

"Much remains to be done — in control of town growth, in provision of public transportation, in establishment of more equitable forms of taxation. I would like to continue to work on these problems and others and look forward to serving the people of Amherst if they wish me to do so.

Michael P. Sullivan, Jr. of Amherst has announced his candidacy for selectman in the March preliminary election.

Sullivan is presently chairman of the Board of Selectmen, an ex-officio UMass trustee and resides at 76 Stony Hill Rd. on the town.

He is employed as an assistant to the comptroller at the University. The thirty-seven year old graduate of Amherst High School, Northampton Commercial College and the University of Massachusetts claims expertise in educational administration, business management and government finance.

He has been a selectmen since 1971, registrar of voters from 1964 to 1969 and a Town Meeting Member from 1959 to date.

"Traffic and transportation remains a key issue in today's campaign as it has for the past few years," Sullivan says in a statement announcing his candidacy. "The present energy shortage propels this issue to the top of the priority list in this year's campaign."

"I have worked to open the lines of communication between those in the town and those at the university making decisions that affect our community.

I believe we are entering a new era when the town can look to the University not in fear of more growth, but in terms of its beneficial effect on the community.

Sullivan also pledges a committment to the problems of the aged, and pledges to maintain a "stable" tax structure.

He concludes that because of a "long interest in government" and active participation he has the "necessary knowledge and background to continue to effectively serve as a selectmen."

Student addresses

private company would never get access to them."

Registrar Jones said "we guard very carefully, the confidentiallity of the lists, even with campus organizations."

To get further information from Grey Advertising, the Collegian was given the name of a Harvey Robinson to contact. When his office was called on Tuesday, Robinson's secretary, after determining the nature of the call, informed the Collegian that "Mr. Robinson has just left for the airport", and that she "didn't know when he would be returning".

When contacted again on Thursday, the secretary reported that Robinson was "in an all day meeting, and will be going out of town again the next day." The secretary suggested that the Collegian "direct our questions to Mr. Robinson through written correspondence".

When asked what the policy was concerning the availability of mailing lists, Dean Fields explained that "There is a general University policy of not letting lists out to any outside organization."

Exceptions to this policy have occurred in the past. State agencies or voter registration drives have sometimes been allowed the use of the mailing list. Whether or not an organization will be treated as an exception is at the discretion of the Registrar or the Dean of Students. "But there are damn few exceptions" Dean Fields pointed out.

He went on to explain how even the groups that get lists, get them in the form of mailing labels. Thus they never get a permanent list.

In spite of the comments made by Ms. Mendoza of Chapman, most indications point to the list being used by commerical companies being compiled by use of the telephone directory.

The attorney for the students, Richard Howland, points out how "this is perfectly legal. If the University were selling the lists, we could stop them; but everyone can have access to the lists for a quarter."

There is no way to get off the commercial mailing list, unless the company lets you. The Amherst Post Office reported "you can only legally stop them if they are sending obscene or bulgar material". Some groups, however, will allow you to get your name off the list if you request it in writing.

In any case, student names and addresses are providing big money for a lot of firms, and it is very doubtful that they will stop using them.

Bi-lingual education in Mass

By LUIS MEDINA
MDC Staff

According to Dr. Silvia Viera, "The recognition of the language and the culture of any individual, is a recognition of his or her own personality."

In an interview held in Spanish with Dr. Viera, different facts came to light in relation to the Bilingual-Bicultural Education in Massachusetts and benefits that minorities as well as the majorities could obtain from it.

One of those benefits is the recognition of the individual personality through being aware of his-her language and culture. "Everybody conceptualizes and socializes using the native language", Dr. Viera said. she added that any individual whose language is not recognized and doesn't know the "accepted one", is pulled out of society.

According to the physiologist, a person who feels happy functions better, physically and mentally. Some of the pressures of belonging to a different culture, could be released through education and recognition of the values of that culture.

"The needs of a multi-cultural society, (as the United States is), could not be served through the uses of a monocultural education." Dr. Viera said.

She has been involved in bilingual education programs in the United States, Puerto Rico and American Virgin Islands and in Quebec, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Trinidad, Jamaica and Bolivia.

Dr. Viera is director of the Bilingual Bicultural Education Program of the School of Education. The program that began last semester to prepare bilingual teachers for the elementary schools, is developing fast. Nest semester bilingual teachers will prepare for the high school level.

Three graduate students, Edward Sotolongo, Ms. Elba Rivera and Linda McCrosan, are part of the regular program's staff. The Program was created by a state law which says non-English speaking children must be taught in their native language.

The eventual "transculturation" of the students, could release many of the tension that the country has concerning cultural differences, differences which may generate other problems.

Concerning the Puerto Ricans, one of the largest non-English speaking groups in the State, Dr. Viera said, "The Puerto Ricans always had believed in the benefits of education".

According to a spokesman for the Puerto Ricans, 32 percent of the total budget of the Island is being use for public education. The total amount in dollars, however, is not known.

According to Dr. Silvia Viera, bilingual Education must be bilateral in order to be effective. "Majorities and minorities must be educated in respect to culture and the history of the other group". She added that understanding of both cultures must be met through the education and the respect (esteem) of each groups cultural values.

"From Courtside"

By RUSS SMITH

High atop the bleachers in Boyden's Main Gym, I can see everything-a perfect aerial view of all the basketball courts, and the games being played on them: I catch the fouls on court one, the tip-ins off the glass backboards on court two, and the fast breaks on number three court, all at the same time. Keeping track of the score while watching the trio of games is impossible.

On court three, the Field House Stars play the J.F.K. Colonels. On number one, it's the Baker Broncos vs. the Bullets from Moore House. At center stage, it's the Kennedy Panthers (who ended up third on campus in basketball last year) against the Magicians from McNamara.

Not knowing which game would be the best to keep track of, I decided not to watch any of them. And it's a good thing I did decide that 'cause I would've missed what was happening on court four.

The game: The Desperados vs. the Highboys. The score was close when I got there, the 'boys were down by four, 22-18. The play was really getting rough under the basket, but the ref didn't seem to notice.

Then it came — pressure of this important game. You see, both teams were in first place in the Continental League, with identical 3-0 records. And with only one game left after this one-which meant the winner of this contest would at least clinch a tie for first.

Anyway, back to the game: The Desperados were looking to increase their lead. They shot..and missed. Two players went up for the rebound. Both of them got it. Now, everything would've been alright if they were on the same team. But it didn't happen to be that way. So there they were — fighting over the ball(no whistle yet) — until they dropped the ball and starting pushing each other. This cleared both benches and the players paired up.

With the exception of the Highboy coach being threatened by the timekeeper to keep cool or leave, a couple of questionable calls the refs made (by the same coach), a technical foul (don't see many of those in intramurals), and the eviction of another player for arguing with the ref, the rest was a normal game. Oh, oh, the final was the Highboys over the Desperados, 38-34.

As for the rest of the intramural basketball teams, in all forty-four leagues, here are the first place teams: MenGrayson Aces, Baker Broncos, Chadbourne Maroons, Crabtree Tree, Thatcher Tokes, Lewis Lovers, Gorman Oaks, Hamlin Skunks, the Gorman Leafs, Thatcher Redwoods, JFK Grasshoppers, McNamara Strikers, Moore Bullets, Patterson Weeds, Washington Wizards Lamda Chi Alpha, Phi Mu Delta, Theta Epsilon Phi, Stale Nectar, Gorman Booters, Civil Engineering, Dishrags, Kicks, Dodos, Bulldogs, On Beam, Sheiks, TEP "B" Slo Gin Fiz, Rolling Rocks, Shaks, Chenzos, Duke and the Drivers, Plague, Panama Reds, Ossibissa, J.B.'s,Issues, Mixed Bag, Pacemakers, Berkshirites, Project Rap Crusaders, Crickets, Hills Heads,Munchkins, Nixon Bombers, Hot Shots (last year's campus champs), Blues, Buckeyes, Players, and the Salukas. Out of those, only 38 will make the playoffs. Women-Collidge Lakers, McNamara Manglers, Bakers Bombers, Dwight Ducks, Mary Lyon Dupas, Chi Otees, Melville Fillies, Second Floor SAM, Babe Z; and the Van Meter Vamps.

UMass wins rec tourney

UMass teams in five events combined to win the American College Unions International recreation tournament for New England. The tournament, held last week at Central Connecticut State College in New Britain, included billiards, bowling, bridge, chess, and table tennis competitions. Strong performances in bowling and table tennis gave UMass enough points to win the "sweepstakes" trophy for the best overall school.

In men's table tennis singles, UMass campus tournament winners Mike Telch and K. K. Low finished second and third, respectively. In women's singles, Sherrie Kowarsky finished first in New England for the second year in a row, thus qualifying for a return trip to the Nationals, which will be at the University of Wisconsin this year.

The greatest success was scored by the bowling team. In other events, UMass was represented by Chip Baye (billiards), Frank Burke and Milton Watt (chess), and the bridge pairs of Bob Natelson-Peter Novick and Subhas Das-Chunhyee Leeung.

Ten pinners excel

The Umass Intercollegiate Bowling team has finally come of age. Last Friday the men's and women's teams competed in the Association of College Unions International Intercollegiate Tournament, and combined to capture five out of eight possible first place finishes. Also Karen James and Brian Elsden qualified for competition in the national championships to be held in early April.

In the team event it was a clean sweep of first place for both teams. The women's score of 2520 outdistanced the rest of the field by over two hundred pins for an easy victory. The women's team consisted of: Cyndy Adams, Joan Felde, Nancy Heglin, Barbara Holt and Karen James.

The men's team finally put it all together for a solid 2724, good for first place. The team was led by strong performances by Elsden (599), Wayne Lowalski (last year's regional champion and sixth place finisher in the nationals) (560), and Bill Fisher (553). Matt Dichard and Dave Dimmick rounded out of the winning team.

Next came the doubles event. Here it was the women who led the way to victory. Nancy Heglin and Karen James combined for a 1038 to capture the title. The men could manage only a fourth (Kowalski and Elsden, 1097) and a fifth (Dichard and Dimmick, 1074).

In the singles event both teams were shut out.

In the All-events, the most important segment of the ACU-I tournament it was again all UMass. The winner of this event is designated as regional champion and becomes the region's representative in the national tournament.

In the women's division Karen James captured first place with a fine score of 1625 for the nine games, averaging over 180. Nancy Heglin finished third. Karen will compete in Houston on April 6-8 for the national title.

In the men's division Brian Elsden fired a 1750 for the crown, an average of just under 195. Bill Fisher finished in fourth place. Brian will compete for the national title in Indianapolis on April 6-8. If either Karen of Brian should win in April as both are quite capable of doing, it would mean not only a national championship but also an invitation to the world championship and a shot at the world title.

Lyle holdout "not serious"

BEVERLY, Mass. (AP) — Sparky Lyle, the New York Yankees' southpaw relief ace, said Thursday his holdout doesn't appear to be "a serious problem," but he will not go to training camp until he signs his 1974 contract.

Lyle, who lives in nearby Danvers, participated on a sports talk show conducted by Radio Station WMLO of Beverly.

He said the Yankees originally asked him to take a $5,000 salary cut, then offered him the same pay as in 1973.

"They told me there was not going to be any more money and I told them I wouldn't be there for training," Lyle said.

Lyle, traded by the Boston Red Sox in March, 1972, had a fabulous first year with the Yankees, compiling a 9-5 record, 35 saves and a 1.92 earned run average in 59 games.

He got off to a good start in 1973, but later had trouble and finished with a 5-9 record, 27 saves and a 2.51 ERA in 51 games.

"If I had ended the season the way I started, I probably wouldn't be having any trouble now at all," he said.

NCAA names 9

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Second-ranked Marquette and seven other teams were named today to at-large berths in the National Collegiate Athletic Association's basketball championship tournament.

The other at-large selections were Pittsburgh, Providence, South Carolina and Creighton, all ranked among the nation's Top Twenty teams, plus Syracuse, Dayton and Oral Roberts.

Notre Dame upset UCLA 71-70 on Jan. 19 in South Bend, ending the Bruins' 88-game winning streak and jumping temporarily to No. 1 in the national rankings. A week later, UCLA avenged its first defeat in three years with a 94-75 victory over the Irish in Los Angeles, the only blemish on the Irish record so far this season.Notre Dame has won 23 games.

The Irish have appeared in 10 previous NCAA championship tournaments — the latest in 1971 when they were eliminated in the second round. Notre Dame's best tournament performances came in 1953, 1954, and 1958 when they reached the regional finals.

Marquette, 22-3, will be making its ninth appearance and fourth in a row. Its 1955 and 1969 teams reached the regional finals. Four years ago it declined an invitation.

Creighton, ranked 16th with a 21-5 record, will be making its first NCAA tourney trip in 10 years. In three previous appearances it never got past the second round.

Oral Roberts, 20-4, which launched a varsity basketball program eight years ago, is in its third year of major college competition and will be making its first NCAA tournament appearance.

Notre Dame and Marquette will play first-round games in the Mideast regional at Indiana State; Creighton and Oral Roberts in the Midwest regional, hosted by Oral Roberts.

Manhattan sale avenged; Sitting Bull sells US back

HARTFORD (AP) — A 61-year-old woman who claims her grandmother bought the United States from Chief Sitting Bull for $99 million filed her claim too late and in the wrong court, a federal judge ruled Wednesday.

U.S. District Court Judge Jon O. Newman dismissed the suit by Louise Staedtler Hopp of South Norwalk, noting that she could not produce any cancelled checks allegedly used in the purchase.

Mrs. Hopp filed a 10-page handwritten complaint after Bridgeport bankers refused her claims to land and mortgages in Connecticut.

She said a copy of the bill of sale was kept under military guard in a glass case and that another copy is held by a Chief Eagle in California.

She said her grandmother, Francesca Staedtler, purchased the country from the Indians in 1864 with the approval of President Abraham Lincoln and Congress.

Rising spud prices in Maine not small potatoes to farmers

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PRESQUE ISLE, Maine (AP) - After a decade of rough economic sledding, northern Maine potato growers are enjoying top dollar for their spuds and rising prices for their land.

The increased cost of potatoes at the supermarket checkout counter has brought a sweet taste of prosperity to the farmers who cultivate the fields of Aroostook County, where 15 per cent of the nation's white potatoes are grown.

Potato prices have soared to unprecedented heights, and a sharp jump in future prices on the commodity market signals even higher supermarket prices in the months ahead.

Recent future prices for May delivery on the New York Mercantile Exchange have skyrocketed to more than $17 per hundred weight, and stunned observers seem to think there's no end in sight.

"The betting up here is on when the May board will hit $20," says Lowell Weeks, executive vice president of the Maine Potato Council.

Although awe-struck at the speculative frenzy, farmers generally applaud each upward jump of the futures price as an indicator of a higher price on the cash market.

"It's ridiculous ... but it's great," one farmer said.

Besides higher spud prices, the current countywide boom has also caused a run on agricultural land, with prices climbing to record levels.

Mass offices filled by legislature

By BOB MACKAY, JR.
MDC Staff

Interestingly enough, three of the four present incumbents for the lower Mass. constitutional offices-Attorney General, Sec. of State, Treasurer, and Auditor-were originally elected by the Legislature and not by the Mass electorate.

Robert H. Quinn (candidate for Governor) was Speaker of the House in 1969 when he became Attorney General. Quinn was elected by the Legislature to fill the void left by Elliot Richardson when the latter went to Washington.

John F. Davoren was Speaker of the House in 1967 when he was elected Sec. of State by the Legislature. The General Court's action was necessitated when Kevin White, Sec. of State at the time, became Mayor of Boston.

Robert Q. Crane was Asst. Majority Floor Leader in the House in 1964 when he became State Treasurer. The Legislature elected him to the post when Treasurer John Driscoll went to the Turnpike Authority.

Thaddeus Buczko became State Auditor in 1964. Buczko was appointed as a candidate by the Democratic State Committee when Thomas Buckley, the Dem. incumbent, died on the night of the primary. Buczko stood for election and won.

Quinn, Davoren, Crane, and Buczko have all since been consistently re-elected to their positions. Presently, when there is a vacancy in one of these constitutional offices, the General Court elects a successor. And, if the Legislature has prorogued, the Governor appoints a successor. Legislature has prorogued, the Governor appoints a successor. Once in the office, the incumbent is seemingly guaranteed the position for life.

Consequently, Sen. John M. Quinlan (R-Norwood) has filed a proposed constitutional amendment that would require a special election to fill vacancies in these constitutional offices. Quinlan commented, "If these offices are important enough to warrant elections in the first place, then the filling of vacancies should not be left to the General Court...there is little logic in calling a special election to fill a vacancy in the 280 member Legislature (240 Reps, 40 Senators) while not bothering to do so to elect a new constitutional officer."

Dear Aggie...

Chuck the whole thing

By LAFILLE SANSMARBRES
MDC Staff

Dear Aggie,

Your column really upset me, not for what you said, for you said nothing, but simply because I AM NOT 'DEAR AGGIE!' Why did you do that to me? What have I ever done to you? Using my name to take the blame for what you do is about as low as you can get. Would you please use your own name next time?

Roberta Siegel

Dear R.S.,

I'm sorry my column upset you and thanks for the compliment, but you can blame the Collegian Staff for the mistake, not me. They mixed up your name with the author of an article entitled, "The Impace of the Energy Crisis on a Grease Monkey and its Effect on his Philosophical Existence or How I Spent My Summer Vacation." Sorry about that.

Dear Aggie,

Every time I have a Chem discussion I put my books down on a desk, go to get a drink of water, and come back only to find my homework gone. At first I thought I kept leaving it in another book, but checked and it wasn't there. So one day I left the room as usual and made like I was going to get a drink, but stayed outside to keep an eye on my desk instead. Lo and behold, I saw a kid in my class sneak up to my desk and take my homework — someone I knew, too! What should I do?

Feeling Cheated

Dear Cheated,

You certainly do have a problem there. What some kids won't do just to get a grade. But I have come up with a few options you can act on. Depending on your personality, you could be sadistic, malicious, masochistic, or just plain stupid. If you're the sadistic type, write up pages full of wrong answers and keep putting them in your book. If you want to be malicious, catch the person red-handed, take him up to the professor and get him kicked out of class. Or you could play the masochist by confronting him with the truth and then offer to help him with the problems. Of if you choose not to do any of the above, be a dumbbell and don't do anything. Keep letting him do it! Take your pick and let me know what happens.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

When the moon is in a fixed sign, dentures are apt to remain in place. Tooth extractions are liklely to be more difficult when the moon is in one of the fixed signs, Taurus, Leo, Aquarius or Scorpio.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relatives, neighbors are apt to be pugnacious. Don't attempt too many changes. Go slow, especially where travel is concerned. Be sure of messages, calls, reservations. Some people tend to be malicious and they misquote you. Know it and protect yourself in clinches.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Questions concerning costs, earnings, budget are featured. All answers are available, but not immediately. Patience now is a virtue. Aggressive individual could be covering up an expensive error. Do some personal investigating. Hold your ground.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take special care around machinery, electricity. Certified check could be coming your way. What you had given up may actually be revived. Past-due bills could be honored. Don't rush, push, chide or incite anger in those who could be your allies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Select those who can keep a secret. Some around you are only too willing to upset applecart. Know it and be discreet. Tempers flare around you. Check tendency to compound unpleasant situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lovers' quarrel should not be taken too seriously. Impulse tends now to dominate logic. Study Cancer message for valid hint. Bring forth sense of humor. If you expect perfection from one close to you, there will be disappointment. Strive for greater degree of maturity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be thorough. You may uncover details which make present tasks much easier. One in authority may appear harsh. However, this is only of temporary duration. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio persons could figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Analyze. Find reasons. Reject superficial explanations. Gemini, Virgo persons could be involved. Hold off on journeys, if practical. Some long-range planning is in need of revision. Memories could be deceptive. Best to check on conditions as they currently exist — before making commitments.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Costs may bee too high — know it and do something about it. Protect your own interests. Those who supposedly are assigned to certain tasks seem not to be aware of duties. Put foot down. No more needless spending at your expense.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): See plainly, not with embellishments. Means be practical about about evaluating situations, persons. Mate, partner wants action. You should be diplomatic...unless you want a knockdown, drag-out kind of battle. Legal counsel may be required to complete transaction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Highlight practicality — review time, motion, basic costs and responsibilities. Expect added pressure. But also realize you are not without allies. Older individual will lend benefit of experience, as well as moral support.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Relationship could be going through "stormy" period. Key now is to maintain balance. Avoid making statements which ultimately result in embarrassment, regrets. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Promises tend to be broken — know it and don't expect something for nothing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are able to finish assignment which has been restrictive. You will have chance to exercise greater independence. There will be more room for style, creativity, special touches. Property may be worth more than is apparent on surface.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, independent and will undergo revealing emotional experiences this year, with October a most significant month. Persons born under Leo and Aquarius are drawn to you. Original ideas are a strong point with you. Key now is to prepare, to plant seeds for future...because you are on brink of making a coup.

Benson smiles at success

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

Steve Benson never smiles when he wrestles. He is one of the meanest and most physically bruising wrestlers in the East (Though Coach Homer Barr swears he has become milder with age).

Off the mat, though, Benson is famous for his smile and good nature. He has a laugh that one can pick up from any point in any gym. A phys-ed major now, he had it all planned out to be an oceanographer and might well have been had the job market not fallen out in that field.

Steven Benson (or Pook Benson as his Kappa Sigma fraternity brothers call him) has athletics as a focal point in his life. He has been wrestling ever since sixth grade when his mother got him interested in it. The Valley Stream, Long Island native also played football and ran track through high school. A football injury that separated his shoulder leaves that prominent scar that is very evident each time he reaches for a knee-pull takedown.

"I [illegible] never anything super in high school. I guess I was kind of a late maturer in wrestling. My senior year I was second in the county but that was it. I ran track because there was nothing else to do after school. The coach told me I had the guts to run the two-mile and everyone believed him because that's what they saw every time I finished - my guts all over the track."

Steve transferred from New York Maritime Academy where he was in oceanography. "The program they had was really good and the attrition rate was wicked. In most schools they say look at the guy sitting next to you on either side and you won't see him here in four years. Well, at Maritime they said 'look at the three guys sitting next to you and they won't be here.' Things started to go bad when the shipping industry fell off and then decided that it was a good field."

STEVE BENSON
Senior, 158

The sea is still an influence in Benson's life as he enjoys sailing (he is a decent carpenter and built his own sail boat), water skiing, and is a certified scuba diver. When the surf's up on the Island one might find him out chasing waves, too.

Another thin that Steve is really big on is Motocross Bike Racing. He races as an amateur down on the Island and placed third on the Long Island's Sports Committee poll-and he only made half the races. Every race he entered he won. Unfortunately, a recent theft of his Bultaco bike has left him off the track.

Steve has matured in a lot of ways since coming to UMass, especially his attitude toward developing himself to his best potential." I believe that you just can't go to school for wrestling. I have learned so much in exercise science that will help me in wrestling and coaching. It has to be that way."

He has demonstrated enough leadership to earn him the Kappa Sigma National Scholarship and Leadership Award which he prizes as much as his wrestling trophies.

Steve Benson has been successful at the most competitive one-on-one sport there is. Any secrets he has he just writes off to the fact that "I've always tried my hardest to learn and practice self-discipline. Plus I believe in competition all the way down the line.

It upsets some people that I am so competitive in everything but that is the only thing that makes you better."

After graduation Steve is looking at an assistantship as wrestling Coach at UConn and is very excited about the possibilities of helping their program.

Dedication keeps Reynolds on top

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

My involvement with wrestling goes back some seven years. I've seen a lot of great wrestlers and had the chance to step on (and get thrown off) the mats with one national champ.

But every time I think of dedication in wrestling I think of the lightweights and every time I think of lightweights I think of Larry Reynolds.

It's kind of strange (that UMass boasts it's two top wrestling seniors as transfers but that is the case. Larry, who has held down the 126 pound class for two years (until dropping to 118 this year) is a transfer from Bloomsburg State College of Pennsylvania.

A native of Portville, New York, Larry has been wrestling for ten years now and hopes to continue to participate in it plus coach it. He was a four time section cahmpion and was the New York State Junior Olympic Champ. He transferred to UMass because the wrestling program at Bloomsburg was in trouble and he wanted a better education.

(Staff Photo-Bob Stevens)

LARRY REYNOLDS
Senior, 126

Reynolds has worked very hard as a physical education major and is justly proud of his 3.26 cum. "Academically UMass is great. I learned a lot in physiology of exercise that has helped me in my wrestling. I got to meet some really top people here, too."

Then Larry came because the wrestling coaching was very good. "Coach Barr is one of the best coaches I've ever had and he has helped me a lot since I've been here."

Larry Reynolds is a study in motivation. He wants to win the championship badly and saw that dropping to 118 from 126 was his best chance. Now that doesn't sound like much of a drop, but consider that his off season weight hovers around 140 and that 16 per cent loss in body weight becomes substantial.

"I've been working out three times a day running, lifting weights, and wrestling for the last two weeks. I managed to do it bout would never have made it if my girlfriend Nora hadn't given me so much support."

Larry expects to win the New Englands and feels assured of placing at the NCAA. For all the hard work and concentration he has a dry wit that makes one smile just to talk to him.

Off the mat he is one of the biggest sports boosters among UMass' athletic corps. He has managed to see every sport that UMass fields a team in at least once, and that includes some of the women's sports teams too. He is big on watching any athletic event but has a special love for baseball, which he played in high school. He has organized a team the last year or so that plays in the Intramural Independent League, named, what else, the Grapplers.

The future for Reynolds is hopefully grad school and a teaching-coaching position. He wouldn't mind a junior college position as head coach either if one became available. Whatever he pursues, if he matches the task with the dedication he has given wrestling Larry Reynolds will always make things go.

Ritz, Foley make Mass rock Plymouth

By LINDA MACKLER

It was the women's answer to the Maine massacre, as the UMass women's basketball team crushed Plymouth State College last night 53-18 in WOPE Gym.

Before a small, quiet crowd, the team executed perhaps their best offensive game of the season. They had no turnovers in the fourth quarter and only three in the entire second half.

Guard Marilyn Ritz controlled the press and forced Plymouth into many hasty shots. She was also the first player down the court on the fast breaks blocking the lay-ups.

Forward Ann Foley's performance was excellent. Both high scorer and high rebounder, with eleven and seven respectively, Ann hustled under the boards and on the floor.

"I'm glad we had a good game before we play Southern Connecticut," she said. "This will psycholigically prepare us."

Coach Farr too, was expecting a good game against Plymouth. She played everyone on the team and tried new combinations.

"Our defense was our strength," she said, "in the first quarter, our passes were bad and we were missing the open man. By the last quarter, though, our offense began to click."

As UMass steadily built it's lead, the crowd began to fall asleep. The loudest response came at the half-time buzzer when Chris Molonea swished the ball in from mid-court.

The junior varsity played a strange game-chalking up a score of 37-16. The score going into the third quarter was 30-5.

"We combined the best half and the worst half of our season into this one game." said a bemused coach Ellen Greaves.

The first half was complete with good offense and defense. They were well-balanced in outside and inside shots. They were together on the fast breaks. They had only three turnovers the entire first two periods, after averaging twenty a game.

The team that returned to the floor at the start of the second half was totally different and ineffective. This may have been due to their confident and relaxed attitude.

Both teams will be sufficiently tested this Saturday afternoon at Southern Connecticut College. They face the defending Regional Tournamentchampions beginning

Bruins cut off Wings, 8-1

BOSTON (AP) - Ross Brooks tied the National Hockey League record for the most consecutive victories by a goalie and Phil Esposito reached another milestone with his 450th and 451st career goals Thursday night, leading the Boston Bruins to a 8-1 romp overDetroit.

Brooks, 36 and still considered a rookie under NHL rules, had 28 saves as he registered his 14th consecutive victory in goal, equalling the record set by one-time Boston great and Hall of Fame goalie Tiny Thompson in the 1929-30 season.

The Bruins have not been beaten with Brooks starting in goal since last Oct. 23, when they dropped a 3-2 decision in St. Louis. Gilles Gilbert is Boston's regular goalie, getting occasional rests.

Esposito, bidding for another scoring championship, became the ninth NHL player in history to reach the 450 goal mark when he connected for his 52nd of the season to give Boston a 5-0 lead in the third period.

The big center also had two assists, giving him 112 points in 59 games. Terry O'Reilly scored two goald and Johnny Bucyk, Ken Hodge, Al Sims and Gregg Sheppard one each in the Boston attack.2701-1210

When was the last time Maine scored 70 points, let alone lose by 70?

How come it was only 70 points?...

...probably because only Mike Stokes was taking percentage shots.

The entire game dispells the old adage that bbsketball is the last two minutes of the game.

Congradulations to Jack Leaman and his entire team for being invited to their fourth National Invitation Tournament in the last five years...they must be doing something right.

If NIT selection committee chairman Peter Carlesimo doesn't look like he stepped right out of the cast of the Godfather then...it don't rain in Indianapolis in the summertime.

John Olsen is the captain of my All-State team.

All-State, youknow, the good hands people.

Actually Olsen's a good guy and has a lot of guts.

Beating B.C. was the bbst thing that's happened to Holy Cross since Bob Cousy.

Now that B.C. has been awarded the 1974 "fold of the year" award if one more Boston sportswriter jumps on the B.C. bandwagon, I'm going to punish him with season tickets to UMaine basketball.

For you statistic-minded fools:

Al Skinner is the Nation's sixth leading shooter, hitting at a 63.6 clip.

The Minutemen lead the Nation in rebound margin (how much you outrebound your opponents by) with a margin of 13.5.

UMass has outscored their opponents by an average of 16 points, which, by last years final standards would place them fourth in the country.

second in that event at Nationals. But what she has seen happen in women's sports in the past few years is what pleases her most.

"I'm really happy with the changes for the better which have occurred, so far, in women's sports and I hope they will continue." As far as changes for the team's benefit, she's hopeful that either women's collegiate competition will increase or "that we'll be able to compete against distant schools of more equal skill level. This will better prepare us for the Easterns and Nationals."

This concern for the team is what Coach Evans highlighted when asked to describe Margie. "Marge is representative of a fine All-Around gymnast who has not only given fine performances, but in mental attitude, is one of the best competitors I know. For two of the three years I've known her she has supplied excellent leadership as co-captain and guided the team through some troubled times."

Betsy's (Beast) freshman year was spent out of competition due to a serious ankle injury. So she adapted into the role of a coach, helping and spotting the team where necessary. Sophomore year she was back in competition as a bar specialist and in that year she earned top honors in both the Eafherns (6th place) and Nationals (10th place). Last year was an even bigger thrill as she bettered both those positions with a fourth in the Easterns and a tie for sixth in the Nationals.

But Betsy has found that for her, "the people and companionship was one of the most important aspects in those daily workouts. You become closer to them than anyone else, sharing together all those ups and downs that a team goes through." To Betsy the ultimate climax of her whole career "would be to win the Easterns for the first time."

Coach Evans says this about Betsy, "Betsy helped the team before I came and since my arrival, has continued in her leadership capacity, serving two of her four years as co-captain with Margie. She's the type of person who helps and encourages the gymnasts on all the events even though she herself isn't involved."

Both Margie and Betsy expressed the fact that it was en enjoyable experience to work with women who really wanted to achieve and succeed. They added also that, "It's been a real privilege to have the coaching we have had with Ms. Evans and Mike Kasavana."

And last, but certainly not least, is Captain Anne Vexler (Ms. Vex). Her awards also are many and include being a finalist in floor exercise in both the Easterns and Nationals of 1971 and 1972. Last year she bacame Eastern All-Around Champion, fourth Nationally and earned various other individual awards. Probably her most publicized honor was her position as the alternate U.S. gymnast to the World University Games in Moscow this past summer.

Gymnastics has always been a large part of Anne's life. As she puts it, "I'm trying not to think that it's almost over. I can't imagine what it's going to be like not getting ready for competition. I wish I had four more years!" In agreement with her teammates she says that, "being on this team has been the most fantastic experience, it really has. We've become so close, having worked to build the team to what it is. It will be strange not sharing the problems, victories and...each other."

Coach Evans says of Anne, "She's an outstanding All-Around gymnast who has brought attention to the school by being the alternate to the games. Her floor routines have electrified the audiences with her showmanship and direct communication to the people."

A man who has been coaching, spotting, and kidding (to him goes the credit for the original nicknames!) with these women since their freshman year, is assistant coach Mike Kasavana.

Having worked with the women the total four years, it seems only logical to ask him for his impressions.

"These women have exemplified the type of athlete the University can be proud of, we're really going to miss them. 'The Beast' has provided strong leadership both in and out of the gym. 'Legs' started out shy and inexperienced but has become a very competent performer. 'Vex' has provided the flair and style that has become somewhat characteristic of the UMass program. 'Co' has been totally dedicated to building the program and unselfish in her contributions. All in all, these four women promoted, struggled and for the most part, conquered the previously chauvinistic perspective of UMass athletics. I only hope that we can continue all that they have helped to begin."

What do all the words and praise mean? It's probably best summed up by the coach herself.

"These four gymnasts are about as different as people can be in their style and approach to a sport. But all of them have the ingredient of dedication to hard work, needed to become the best they can be. And I think they've been successful at this weight last year. Wrestled almost the entire year at 167 but dropped because he feels he can minimize any height advantage. Should not really be contested at this class even if BU's Paul Donovan moves down from 167.

167 Steve Jabaut — Freshman Moved up from 150 in order to help the team. No way is he fitted for this class, but has the guts and desire to suprise. Top seed qill be URI's Jim Urqhart, defending Champ.

177 Bob Spaulding — Freshman. Has not wrestled to his potential yet this season but seems to be coming on. BU's Mark Jones will most likely be the top seed.

190 Robin Osborne — Freshman. Has had a fine season at both 190 and 177 but moved up because he thinks that he can do better at this class. If rumors are true then Rhody's Stu Horowitz has come back at this class, but top seed should still go to Dartmough's Chuck Estin.

Heavywieght — Dennis Fenton. Freshman. Has held this spot ably all year and looks like the only man who can stop URI's Ray MIro. Should be a sure second seed.

Assistant Coach Mike Welch will have eight wrestlers entered in the JV New Englands and they are Steve Rugerri at 118, Greg Tallon at 134, Alan Elmont and Dave Schutt at 142, Tom Smith at 167, Paul Masi at 177, Greg Scanlon at 190, and Steve Swartz at heavyweight. Chances for the little MInutemen to win it are good.

Gymnmen prep for Easterns at Cornell

By WALT POWERS

After facing five of the top six Eastern League teams in the past four weeks, the UMass Gymnastics team has finally had a chance to relax, and this, said coach Tom Dunn, "is a scary situation."

Dunn was referring to Tomorrow's meet against Cornell in Ithaca, New York. Cornell, 1-8 and ranked next to last in Eastern League competition, has averaged - about 15 points a meet less than the Minutemen, but because of a reduced UMass squad and vast recent improvement, figure to make a run at the Minutemen.

Most of Cornell's problems stem from a mid-December walkout when several of their better performers quit the team because of academic pressure. Their scoring at that time dipped into the 130's but since then most of the deserters have returned. In recent outings against Pitt and Southern Connecticut, Cornell scoring was in the respectable low 150's.

In a move calculated to prepare them for the Eastern Championships, UMass will operate at less than full strength. Co-Captain Rich Seikunas won't make the trip. All-around Gene Whelan is scheduled to compete in only two events. The Minutemen will also be underpsyched for this meet, wherein lies the danger.

"We've been up' for every meet in the past four weeks" said Dunn, "and I want the team to relax so they can build up again for the Eastern Championships. I just hope we're not too relaxed."

The Eastern Championships will take place March seventh, eighth, and ninth in this same Cornell gymnasium, so it will give the Minutemen a valuable chance to prepare and acclimate themselves.

UMass is about one point stronger than the defending Ivy League champions (That's right. Cornell, the only member of both leagues, is eighth in the Easterns and first in the Ivy's) in each event, so there probably won't be a turning point. Cornell could come close on the still rings, but figure to get blown out of the arena on the pommel horse. How far UMass is ahead after the vaulting will determine whether Gene Whelan throws compulsory or optional routines on the final two events.

If everything goes as planned, the Minutemen should leave Ithaca with their second consecutive 6-3 record in a conference regarded by many as the strongest in the nation.

MINUTEMEN ACCEPT NIT BID

Minutemen make it four out of five

By STEVE DECOSTA

For the fourth time in five years, the University of Massachusetts Minutemen have been invited to compete in the National Invitational Tournament in New York City.

The announcement came yesterday in a telephone call to assistant athletic director Bob O'Connell shortly before noon.

The Minutemen were one of four teams to receive initial bids, the other three being St. John's, Manhattan, and Hawaii.

The tournament will be held from March 16 to March 24 and will consist of a field of 16 teams. The other 12 competitors will be chosen at a later date, after conference championships have been decided and other independents have finished their regular season schedules.

UMass carries a record of 20 wins and four losses, while St. John's is 19-5, Manhattan 16-8, and Hawaii is 17-7.

The NIT bid was received after the Minutemen were snubbed by the NCAA, who chose eastern independents Providence, Pittsburgh, and Syracuse to fill their at-large berths.

UMass coach Jack Leaman said "I'm disappointed for the team's sake, but I can see how they (the NCAA) picked the three teams they did. They are fine basketball teams."

"I think some of our senior players are a little bit disappointed," he continued. "They've been to the NIT and they would have liked to try the NCAA."

But Leaman was pleased that his received the invitation to the Madison Square Garden tourney. "Overall, for our fans, our student body, our basketball family, and our recruiting program, I think, myself, that the NIT is possibley the best tournament we could go to," he confided.

On his team's chances in the tournament, Leaman said, "The thing that excites me is that our team is starting to play ball well at this time and the tournaments are short, short series and the team that is playing well at the time can possibly win it. That gives me a little bit of hope for what's gonna happen down there."

Just because the Minutemen were chosen early does not necessarily meaa they will be seeded high in the tournament. Leaman explains: "I think what they do is they get all the 16 teams together and then they put it togetherand make the best tournament they can possibly make out of it. The last time we were picked early was the time we played North Carolina (the eventual tournament winner) at 11 o'clock in the morning."

But being picked early does have its benefits. "The thing that it does do is get rid of the tension of waiting and give our kids a quiet confidence," Leaman said.

The Minutemen have one regular season game left on their schedule, at New Hampshire on Wednesday, March 6. The game was originally scheduled to be played during intersession but was postponed as the Durham campus was shut down in January as a result of the energy situation.

"I think that will be a good game for us to go up there with nothing at stake and have an opportunity to play a lot of people," said Leaman. "Then we'll probably take two or three days off and then we'll come back and just work and get ready for the tournament.

Au revoir senior gymwomen

"Co, Vex, Legs, Beast"

By CANDY GROSS

'Ms. Vex', 'Co', 'Beast', and 'Legs Weak', names likely to do down in UMass sports history. Who are they? The core of the team which finally brought a National Championship to the University of Massachusetts.

Anne Vexler, Margie Combs, Betsy East and Heidi Armstrong are the four senior gymnasts who, at the end of this season, will close out their collegiate careers. Tomorrow's 2:00 home meet against Southern Connecticut will be the last chance to watch these women perform in a dual competition.

Looking back on their four years competing for the team, the women unanimously agreed that one of the major highlights for them as a team was winning last year's Nationals in Iowa. As true competition, their various honors and victories are obvious rewards to them. But as individuals, they each have found their own personal fulfillment in the sport.

Heidi (Legs) is really looking forward to competing in California at this year's Nationals, but says that for her, "The real highlight of gymnastics is hitting the routines." In the '73 Nationals she did just that, becoming famous as 'the snowflake that got the ball rolling' on the balance beam. This year Heidi has steadily improved on beam, coming through with one of the steadiest performances of that close Springfield meet.

As described by Coach Virginia Evans, "Heidi, out of the four, is the most improved gymnast. She is an excellent example of someone who believed in herself and produced for the team. In the Nationals she came through on the beam, right when we really needed it."

Then there's Margie (Co), who has accumulated an impressive record in her four years here. 1972 brought one of her more notable honors when she became the Eastern All-Around Champion and placed seventh in the Nationals. Last year, among numerous awards, she captured first place on the uneven bars at the Easterns and

Peaking UMass skaters battle with Boston State

By BILL BALLOU

Tomorrow may be the last one for the UMass hockey team as they start their playoff fight at Boston State.

The post-season tournament is a single elimination set-up, so a loss means "bye-bye" for another nine months.

The Minutemen are seeded fifth in the eight team qualifying group, and thus play fourth seeded Boston State at their home rink, which is the Boston Arena.

Three wins and they've got themselves a Division Two championship, a feat they accomplished just two seasons back for the only time in UMass hockey history.

Jack Canniff is pretty high on his team's chances, thanks to two impressive performances in the last ten days against tough Division One opponents.

"Right now,", says Canniff, "we're playing the best we have all season. We're definitely peaking, and we've finally put it together."

There's plenty of evidence to support that statement. Last Wednesday UMass lost to (then number two nationally) New Hampshire by just one goal (and an empty-net score) and two nights ago tied Northeastern in overtime, a team which in its previous game had taken national power Denver into overtime out in Colorado.

"There isn't a college team in the country we have to be afraid of the way we're going right now," he continues, "and if we keep playing this way we can beat anyone."

They've already beaten Boston State once, a key 6-5 victory in Orr Rink at the beginning of February. But they've lost to State too. That one was a 5-3 decision in the Arena over intersession, with Jim Lynch providing all the UMass goals.

State is led offensively by Paul Fisher, Duncan Campbell, and John Caccamo. Defense isn't their strong suit, but goaltending is. They've got one of the best in the Division in Doug Brooks, who's played two strong games against the Minutemen.

Physically UMass looks to be in top shape. Mike Ellis, out with a shoulder separation for a month, should be back, but the long layoff will undoubtedly hurt. His return, and the improved play of his replacement, Bill Mintiens, bodes well for the Minuteman defense.

Canniff has been especially pleased with the work of Mintiens. "Even with Ellis back," he says, "I'm keeping Mintiens in the rotation. He's been playing very well and I think he complements Timmy Howes almost perfectly."

This means that if Ellis plays, it will be in tandem with Brian Mulcahy.

The UMies, while decided longshots, aren't in bad position to go all the way. They've peaked at the perfect time, they're healthy, and they've got strong goaltending, a must in play-off hockey.

"I think we've got a real good shot at it," says Canniff, "and if we're ever gonna be ready it's now."

We'll find out tomorrow night.

Grapplers ready for New Englands

By JOHN BOCK

"This is the time of the season I like best because all of the work begins to show." With this statement wrestling coach Homer Barr looked aheda to this weekends New England University Wrestling Association (NEUWA) Tournament at Dartmouth College. The Tournament begins on Friday morning and finals are slated for eight o'clock Saturday night. The Minutemen are defending champs and will wrestle with URI, BU, Maine, UNH, UConn, Boston College, Holy Cross, Dartmouth and Brown for the title.

Regardless of the dismal dual meet record that UMass finished with (9-7) the whole point of the season, the whole point of every wrestler's season, is the tournament that decides who is the best and in this case, who will represent the NEUWA at the NCAA Championships March 14-16 at Iowa State.

"This is what you have worked for. You guys have spent a lot of energy in this room and when you get up to Dartmouth you have to get in a corner and talk to yourself and remind yourself of all the work you've done." This admonishment came at the last practice the team held before leaving for Dartmouth and the whole philosophy of wrestling is embodied in it.

The Minutemen are not the favorites to win the New Englands. The University of Rhode Island Rams have ridden roughshod over every New England team they have wrestled. They walked away with the Yankee Conference title and showed great balance in putting nine out of ten into the finals.

These facts alone have been enough to make URI the pre-tourney favorite, but UMass has not taken this sitting down. After Yan Con the Minutemen matmen decided they would all go to a lower weight. With some of the toughest dual match wrestling yet to come they started dropping and now with the rearranged team Coach Barr is super-serious when he says that "We are looking Rhode Island right in the face from 118 to 158. After that we are still in it but maybe not in the finals."

The team that will defend UMass' New England Crown and a brief look at each wrestler follows:

118 Larry Reynolds-Senior and NEUWA Runner-up at 126. Larry dropped because he believed he had a better chance at 118 and thinks that it will help the team. His competition at this class will be Rich Adham of URI (Runner-up to UMass' Dave Amato last year) and Jeff Lambert of Boston University.

126 Dick Muri — Junior and former 134 pounder. He has had a really hard time dropping to 126 but if he can recover some strength could be the man to upset URI's top seeded-defending Champ, Scott Pucino. Other competition could be from Blair LUdeman of UConn.

134 Russell Chateauneuf — Junior and New England Champ in 1972. Dropped from 142 because he feels more confident at this class. A very smooth wrestler on the mat. Top seed at this class should be Severei Poplizio of Boston University.

142 Doug LeMire — Sophmore who has come up from 134 because he lost so much strength at that weight. Strength and conditioning should be his best weapons. New England Runner-up Joe Savino of URI will be the top seed if he doesn't move down to 134 or Tom Kryzak doesn't move down from 150.

150 Cliff Blom-Sophmore and NEUWA Runner-up and 1974 Yankee Conference Champ at 158. MOved down and eliminated Steve Jabaut at weight. If Kryzak of BU (defending Champ at 142) moves down then it will be between Blom and Dave Hovey of URI.

158 Steve Benson — Senior and team Captain NEUWA Runner-up

PEREGRINATING WITH PROCTOR AND BERGMAN

by Dave Miller
Andrew MacKenzie

Philip Proctor writes down a lot of things in a little notebook he has. He also takes a lot of pictures with a vest-pocket Kodiak (Polarnoid?) camera, like the one of Peter Bergman posing by our own cigarette papers machine on the Concourse. Mssr. Bergman doesn't do quite as much of this, but he too is always looking out. They have to; when you're "an alien in your own country," collecting images and omens to try to keep ahead, you can't let things like cigarette papers machines and signs like "Mike's Speed Shop" pass you by. Proctor and Bergman, those congenial defectors from the Firesign Theater, were in Amherst and vicinity on the 21st for a concert appearance in the Auditorium, and they continued to feed their heads. And the heads of those people fortunate enough to uncover some of the Mysterious Vanishing Publicity, and come to the concert.

We interviewed P&B at HoJo's from noon till 1:00 or so, the results of which appear below. Much of the rest of the afternoon was spent in surprising people at WMUA, where phone calls from various UMies were answered, and at WAMH at Amherst College, which featured Bergman exhorting the students to "Put down that Chaucer! Get out in the hall and Dance!!" to "Honky Tonk Woman".

Proctor and Bergman's stage act consisted of a kind of expanded stand-up comedy — two men in front of a couple of mikes, diving into these Big Suitcases (of 1969) to bring out simple costume pieces or props. Their material was taken mainly from their album TV Or Not TV, but scaled down to the medium of a two-man presentation, and including Ralph Spoilsport and other familiar faces. Needless to say, they were enjoyed by everyone — but let us turn (on our sanitary pedestals) to the interview — which is already in progress:

(The interview began minus Proctor, who was still sampling HoJo's 28 flavors of beds.)

In an exclusive interview,

Proctor & Bergman ask "What? Normal?"

Below The Salt: The first question is, and it seems a strange question to be asking anyone, but how much time do you and the rest of the Firesign spend reading? Because all of your albums seem to cover so many references, from Robert Frost to the Tibetan Book of the Dead ...

Berg.: Really? Where do we mention Robert Frost?

B.T.S.: Well, I might have gotten the reference wrong, but something about the "bees living inside your head" seems to be from a poem by either Frost or ...

Berg.: Well, that demonstrates your own high degree of literality, if literality is a word. We do read a lot, we read a lot, certainly, when we were at college and before, and individually we keep up with a lot of newspapers and magazines, and I recently have found that I have become very, very interested in finance. I'm president of an audio-visual corporation, in which I'm partner now with Honeywell. It's called Showcron American Corporation, and we make flatbed editing machines. Sixteen millimeter editing and ... I've gotten into inventing, by the way. I am becoming an industrial designer, and I've been reading a lot about finance. I was a professor of Economics at Yale before I started with the Firesign Theater. Yes ... an assistant ... what do they call that?

B.T.S.: T.A.?

Berg.: I was a T.A., yes. Professor is a heavy word, I was. a T.A. Yeah, a tough academician. And uh, yes we do read a lot ... "Bees in your head": I've got an interesting little sidelight on that, which is ... that came to us, I don't remember how, but I found out later that Philo Farnsworth, who invented the cathode ray tube, invented the television set, when he was in high school. I don't know if you know that story ... a fantastic man, Philo Farnsworth ...

B.T.S.: For a Science Fair or something like that?

Berg.: Yes, exactly. For his physics class.

B.T.S.: Transmitted a picture of Felix the Cat ...

Berg.: In his head, in his head, right. Well Philo Farn — I'm talking about "bees in your head" — Philo Farnsworth, who invented the cathode ray tube, got a vision of a bunch of bees in his head, and this we found out later. He said, "I had this picture of a swarm of electrons", he said, "like a bunch of bees", and from that he created the cathode ray tube. So "living like bees in your head" was just something funny David Ossman said, or something like that. We were sitting around one of those endless meetings on Bozos, 'cause Bozos was written around a round table over a long period of sitdown, grinding out word-by-word, by thought, rejecting tremendous numbers of ideas ... There's a film that was made of us while we were doing that, a cinema verité film, and at that point we were into a concept of an amusement park in this huge man, like Hobbes' Leviathan, right? You see, the ride was through his legs, his groin and up his arm, you know, like Fantastic Journey, and half of him was above the water and half was below and we went through these complicated peregrinations of exactly what to say and what to do. So Bozos, as you'll see, is an incredibly 'studied' album. There isn't a word on that album that isn't ...

B.T.S.: There didn't seem to be too much in the way of improvisation in there.

Berg.: No. There's a little bit in some of the acting; we acted the improvisation with 'Chester Catherver' (into drunk voice) and that whole thing. When you start to do a drunk, little things have to come out, you know. (Returns to normal voice.) But generally it's very heavily scripted and very carefully done.

B.T.S.: I noticed the same thing about the similarity in style between that and How Time Flys in terms of a narrative kind of quality ...

Berg.: And they're both amusement parks, aren't they? The interesting thing about How Time Flys is that it demonstrates again what can happen when you give the individual inside a group like the Firesign Theater his head, his leeway to create his product, and you'll find out you begin to understand more about the mind of David Ossman, and you begin to understand it in terms of the group of the Firesign Theater.

B.T.S.: That's the one thing I noticed about ... take TV or Not TV and How Time Flys ... the style is so different, but you can't mistake that it's coming from the same source. Also, more generally, from Bozos on out you seem to be tending more towards sticking to the plot, rather than all the endless digressions that you used to get into on, say, Dwarf.

Berg.: Dwarf is a constant digression, and I think we're going to turn out another of those. I think that what Dwarf represents is something that came partially off the tour. Firesign toured only once before, and it's going to tour again, a whole heavy month tour, from April 18th to about May 18th ... And Dwarf is a combination of tour material, from our '70 tour, and stuff that we wrote coming back. We then created Porgey and Mutthead. We're going to do another album at some point, Proctor and I were talking — a Firesign album that deals with the contemporaneous 1974 culture. Dwarf is like '69 and '70. A few things have changed considerably, and we will, I think, get into what we call a 'multiple-digression' album, or creating an album that will have both a mundane plane and an astral plane at the same time — any word can switch you off into another area — I know people like that; it gets you very high. Rat, on the other hand, is a first. The thing that's unique about Rat that I've been trying to explain is that it is, as far as I know, the only piece of pure recorded theater. Take Electrician: Electrician sometimes goes to the media; it goes inside the radio in the guy's car, even though it doesn't do that too often. It's almost pure recorded theater; a new medium, something that as far as I know has never been done before the Firesign. Writing drama for records. Audial theater.

B.T.S.: Nick Danger.

Berg.: Nick Danger's a radio show, though. It's specifically a radio show and it constantly makes fun and constantly does "How did I make my voice do that", "Don't lose your place", but Rat never breaks that; Rat never talks about the people in Rat being actors, about being the Foresign Theater; they're not on record, they don't make any record jokes, nothing in the groove. It's all, you know ... you might just as well be there.

B.T.S.: Yes, you seem to be relying a lot more on straight verbal humor, just puns and word play and things like that.

Berg.: Yes, absolutely.

B.T.S.: When you're making — this specifically has to do with you as Proctor and Bergman — when you're making decisions about what recorded material to do on stage, or vice versa, how are decisions made, that is, how do you convert from one medium to another?

Berg.: Good question. When we started TV or Not TV we wanted to write a stage show first and then make a record. The company said make a record first and, then you can tour it. So we did. We wrote that record with stage show in mind, with the ability to convert it. And sure enough, the act that you'll see tonight has a lot of TV or Not TV material in it. It's got Fred & Clark, it's got Boscoe Hearn, it's to 'Mz. Information', Ken Hitt, it's got Bobby Roberts, it's got 'Cirque Internationale', it's got 'The Roaming Umpire'; it's very heavily TV or Not TV. We're going to create a second act out of our new material for What this Country Needs.

B.T.S.: A solo album? That is ...

Berg.: A Proctor-Bergman album. I'm working on a solo album. It's called Deal with Me. It's musical. It's got twelve songs, just like an early Beatles record.

B.T.S.: Solid music? No dialogue whatsoever?

Berg.: I don't want to say for sure there'll be no dialogue, but I think basically it'll be twelve singles. Like "Nasi Goring"; just twelve of those. It's really what I'm interested in — I've been working on it — it'll take a couple of years. How do we work from one medium to another? — Well, the Firesign in general, Proctor-Bergman, Firesign just as writers, seems to write theatrically — seem to write as much for the stage — that's why it's recorded theater. And there's nothing that we write that couldn't be staged, I've found. Like in our new play, Anytown, U.S.A., we do sections from the first four albums. We even start mixing them — like 'Mrs. Preskey' and 'Beat the Reaper' get mixed into one show, called 'Buy or Die'. And just when she's given the plague, and at the same time, being forced to choose. And then she goes through a sex-change. So you can see that when we bring it on stage it gets a little more bizarre. We're also adapting Electrician into a feature film, and we're thinking of making 'P' (Electricians protagonist) a computer-vacuum salesman. He's come to Enroute to sell computer vacuums, and he speaks four or five languages, he sings his company songs.

Firesign Together at Play

"I'm not Joe." "And he's not Ed."

In Anytown, U.S.A. we've mixed in things like ... It's all rides ... I'm flipping around between Electrician and the play, Anytown, U.S.A. ... but in Anytown, U.S.A. Mutthead gets lost in the 'Spoilsport's Freeway Ride', suddenly runs out of gas and goes to the hotel ... here's Phil.

— 00000 —

(Phil Proctor arrives, and the tape becomes garbled for a couple of minutes as introductions are made amongst a barrage of verbal insanity. Salvaged from the holocaust:)

Bergman: "The tape is running, by the way, so be careful what you say."

Proctor: "Oh, that rewinds me ... (Imitates a rewinding tape recorder)."

B.T.S.: "We came here to unwind, actually."

Proctor: "Here are two publicity kits — This is the Proctor & Burglar kit, and the Frankenstein Theater kit."

All of this was followed by an amazing range of noises as the four of us tried to find a suitable location for the microphone on the table. We finally hooked it over the pepper-shaker, which of course resulted in the mike being turned upside down and shaken several times throughout the meal.)

— 00000 —

B.T.S.: One thing that Dave Ossman said is that you combined ideas from the original Giant Rat play with a play called The Fuse of Doom, and I was wondering what elements were used because I'd never heard of that before.

Proc.: Well, the Electrician, for instance, made his first appearance, after Waiting for the Electrician or Someone like Him, in that particular cliff-hanger, The Fuse of Doom, which was performed as a serial ...

B.T.S.: You could only listen to it in the morning ...

Proc.: ... that snap, crackles and pops, you see, that's because of the Electrician himself. He was the arch-villain, and I believe that that was where we first discovered the 'Zeppelin tube', or the absence of it.

Berg.: The Fuse of Doom was also written into movie script form, into the great, unfinished Big Suitcase of 1969. There was chapter seven of that, and we're going to go back and do it someday, 'cause it's just the corniest, most Flash Gordon stultified, bad set, Griffith park ...

Proc.: The Big Suitcase of 1969, is the name of our first unfinished screen scenario — since then we've had no other unfinished screen scenarios, but we still consider that our first. We performed it at the Ash Grove in Los Angeles ...

Berg.: Which is now burned down ...

Proc.: ... which is now literally the 'Ash Grove', just sowing seeds there on the ashes, ... and it as very well received. And when we approached The Giant Rat of Sumatra, we went to the original script, which is called By the Light of the Silvery. And that particular script, by the way, ... well, let me backtrack just for a second. (Repeats sound of rewinding tape recorder) I got a phone call from Harlan Ellison ...

Berg.: Asking for the month's rent again. He's our landlord, aside from being a very fine science fiction writer and anthologist. We pay the rent with stories, just like Stones.

Proc.: He put together the Dangerous Visions anthologies, and he called me up and said, look, I really admire you guys and your work, and I'd like to publish one of your works in the science-fiction genre in the last Dangerous Visions. So I looked over our old stuff and talked to my partners, and we decided that the only one that had a Jules Verne-ian science fiction feeling to it that had not been published before, you know, like Dwarf or anything we'd published with Straight Arrow press, was the original stage version of The Giant Rat of Sumatra, in which Sherlock Holmes is responsible to discover why the moon disappears every month. And he finally discovers that it's an old Scottish pawnshop owner who has stolen the moon in order to prevent the Russians and the Americans and the other small nations from defiling it with ...

Berg.: Mucking about.

Proc.: Right. (Drops into Yorkshire accent, reciting) "Don't muck about, Don't muck about, Don't muck about with the moon." It's a Brendon Beehand (Sp.?) song that I heard many years ago. And it was on that inspiration that we wrote this piece. So, Harlan accepted the manuscript and it will be published in the last Dangerous Visions — and that brought to our minds this particular piece of work and we said, well, let's reinvestigate it for a record. We brought in the element of the Electrician because we wanted to bring a contemporary threat into it, and this was really before the energy crisis was in the consciousness of ...

B.T.S.: The Firesign has always been predicting things that way. Every album that comes out is about two years ahead of what's ...

Proc.: ...Right, and we got into these two things that we've been talking about for years amongst ourselves: One was oil, gas and oil, and the other was the enerrrr..........gy crisis. So we put those things together in a conspiracy, and those were the Rich people. And the Rich people came out of The Fuse of Doom.

Proc.: It took place on New Year's Eve ...

Berg.: Yes, in the mammoth wing of the mansion — "Oh, I've never seen the mammoth having such a good time." So, we tell the story of the Rich people and the Rich people ... In act, side one of Rat comes from By the Light of the Silvery.

Proc.: Although the only lines which still remain from the original have to do with "Why, without your clothes, Miss Dudley, you're naked".

Berg.: That whole scene about 'your wrap, your this, your that' is from the original, but that's all. The second side, 'Chicago', is taken from The Fuse of Doom.

Proc.: It's gotten more risqué. We got into "your muff" (into falsetto)". Oh, that's my muff!"

Berg.: How do you like the performances on Rat? What does it say to you about the Firesign? Do you see a change, a maturation ...

B.T.S.: One thing I noticed was voices; I was able to tell that you were playing Stones, (to Proctor) because it sounded a lot like Freddie Burns. And Jonas Acme, because it sounds a lot like Mr. Motion.

Also, I've found that if people have only heard Firesign once or twice, they've either heard Nick Danger or Dwarf. And they don't call it Dwarf, they say, 'I like Porgey and Mutthead'.

Proc.: So out we went on the road, and then when we came back; slowly but surely the Firesign realized we weren't a threat to them, but actually were the legmen who were setting up the important relationship with the outside world. And when we say 'the Firesign', we as the Firesign, as fifty per cent, began to realize also, and when we'd get back together we'd say "How are you?", and we discovered that we were fine ... And we did the record and had more fun and did it in a shorter time than ever ... And out of the stimulation and excitement of doing this, plus the continued success of Proctor & Bergman as an evolving theater and stand-up comedy team, or comedy concert team, is leading the Firesign into more theatrical presentation. Our primary intent as a group now seems to be to really do a knock-out tour with this Anytown, U.S.A. theater-piece. Really make it a special evening for ourselves and for the people who come to see us, and it's going to be that, too; because it's a compilation, a guided-tour through Firesign World. It starts with the 'Anytown, U.S.A.' scene with Porgy and Mutthead ...

Proc.: Yes, both the Firesign Theater and Proctor & Bergman. What's essentially happened with the Firesign Theater over the last year or so was that Peter and I felt restricted by certain limitations in traveling, and in entertaining with the rest of the group.

Berg.: It's nice to be here, I mean this expands our life tremendously — If we don't get a chance to travel, see signs, and meet people and find out where the audience is and what they're thinking, we've got no way of remaining ahead of the times.

Activism Returns; Excitement Renude

Nudes from up the street

Cutting a blue streak across New England's campuses is the nude fad of the truly eager beavers, that is strutting their stuff until everyone's had enough. Shining more brightly than the moon up above, it's plain to see that it's been many moons since so many moons have flown across out staid campuses. As fair Ms. Spring begins to unfold and bust out all over, the cocky young wards of the Commonwealth have been getting it off and letting things go, not caring a fig about the consequences. Jettisoning their dinky cares and their fears of em-bare-assment, more and more have been running to join this nude development, and without outside assistance. And yes, having a ball. Last Tuesday night this reporter saw this particular mania grip Van Meter, Greenough, Chadbourne and Baker, reducing their dormers to a bunch of ugly roomers as streak buffs kept them buzzing unbearably. Thank goodness we are still in February's icy grip, lest we be subjected to hundreds of pumping thighs and beaming buttocks. How awful! It all just goes to show that there is something nude under the sun, er moon, and that these students are bearing a new message. Assuredly, these people at UmAss are partaking in a newd expression of assumptive assimilation — the assid experience.

Will UMass's masses carry their classy asses to classes? Is this what the student body is coming to?

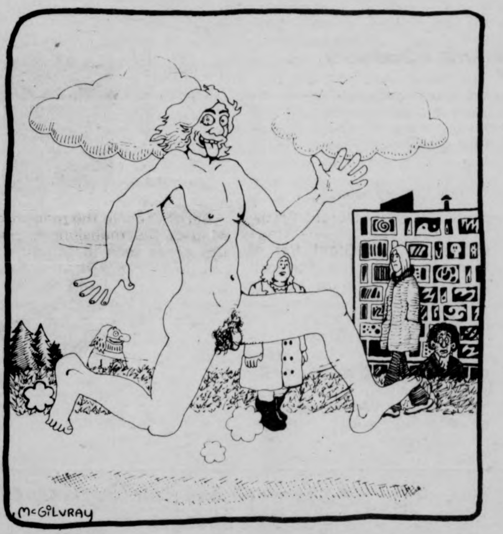
At least students won't sit mooning away. Moon over Umie, too?

The following is a behind the scenes chronicle and assessment of one of the first streak attacks, by one of our cracks, asstute nudesreportes who doesn't want to expose himself, and exhibits some caution by pennaming himself 'Joe Smith'. In this no-holes bared, er, barred exposee, Mr. Smith dares to bear all, in his asserbic tongue, from the initial disrobing to one unfortunate's clothes-call with the police. On a bum rap, natch.

Always ready with the hot poop, Below The Salt sent Joe Smith to uncover the story of these assassinators of common decency who refuse to be assimilated in UmAss's bummer living. Actually, it's surprising how long it took us. Joe gets to the bottom as he tried to find out what's behind it all.

Perhaps it all stems from President's Nixon famous assertion of a few years back, which certainly bears repetition now, namely that "the colleges are full of bums".

Is there any end in sight? Whose?



NOW, WHAT HAVE THEY DONE?

by Joe Smith

(Editor's Note: The following account is based upon an incident which happened in a certain unnamed Quad dorm last Friday night. The names have been changed in order to protect all involved parties.

"Jesus Christ!", said Joe Smith, "how what have they done?" He had known a good deal of history about college pranks, going back to the goldfish-swallowing days, but this streaking business was surely something else. He has read the newspapers talking about male and female nude runners cavorting about on other campuses, and had even even read the Collegian article by a UMaine student. The following day, the letters section of the paper had carried a letter saying that co-ed streaking was a big thing at UConn, but Joe didn't pay any attention to it. In fact, when he read a sign on his dorm's bathroom mirror announcing a streaker run at midnight, he laughed.

It was Friday noon, and Joe was done with classes for the day. As he returned to his room from Herter, he thought about the conversation that went on the previous night near his room. He had been dared to go streaking with the guys, but had declined. When asked about it by Phil, his next door neighbor, he said, "those guys won't do it." It was just as plain and simple as that.

As he returned to the dorm, he remembered that this was the big night of the band party. "Ah, when we have a band party, the place is too crowded," Joe said to himself, "and when we don't have a band at our parties, there aren't enough females." At least he'd go down for awhile; besides, he wanted to see if those guys would actually be the first UMies to go streaking.

It was nine o'clock when Joe forked over a buck to get into the party. At the counter, he ran into Bronson who mentioned the streaking that was scheduled to take place in a few hours. "We moved it to one because that's when the band stops playing. We got fifteen guys so far."

Joe laughed. "You guys won't do it."

Fifteen minutes passed. Then an announcement came over the intercom: "All streakers report to the main lounge!" Joe, for the first time, realized that they just might go through with this. He hurried to the main lounge. He had to see this.

Bronson was having trouble getting followers. "Lookit," he was telling everyone, "I'm going by myself if nobody else is coming." Shortly he was joined by Coon Dog, Smitty, Al, Arps, Bennie and Nyeet. A few more joined them and they started stripping. A photographer came in when they got down to their shorts. By this time, a large crowd had gathered near Joe. The guys in the crowd said little, the girls were mostly giggling. There were guys who did get their girlfriends out of the way without them seeing anything, but these were few and far between. Meanwhile, the photographer took a picture of the streakers in their undies and another of flashing moons. Then it happened.

Joe saw ten guys leap out of the lounge windows on the sidewalk, take off their shorts and start running around the Quad waving them high. Two of the women's dorms were rousted by the noise. You could hear cheering, yelling, and insults. One guy (Joe couldn't see who) grabbed his dick and waved it at a broad yelling, "take some of this, bitch!" The group took a ten minute run around the Quad, amidst all kinds of noise and then returned to the lounge. "Campus Center," someone yelled. Moments later, they all dashed out again, first going through the party, which was still going on.

Joe followed Coon Dog and saw the horrors. They all ran through the CC Councourse and went through again. Joe got to talking to some of the bouncers just getting out of work at the Bluewall. A small crowd cheered the streakers and they went back towards the crowd. Joe left shortly thereafter.

When he got to the top of the incline, Joe saw a bubble gum machine empty, and the cop nearby putting his cuffs on Al, who had been clotheslined by the fence near West Experiment Station. After watching the cop lead Al to the machine, Joe returned to the dorm. He found the guys yelling obscenities at the girls from a nearby convent (that's what it's known as). He also found the streakers clothed andworriedabout their friend, who was now under arrest.

Meanwhile, Al was having his troubles. He had a wicked red mark on his belly from the fence. The bubble gum machine took him to the infirmary to get it treated and the cop was screaming at him all the while. "C'mon, who were the rest of those guys?" Al says nothing.

It got worse when Al was treated for his bruises by the doctor. The fucking cop was grabbing his shoulders, yelling at him to rat on his companions. He didn't.

A trip to the UMass police station was next on the agenda. The desk sergeant greeted the cop, "Harry Handcuffs!"

"Jesus, this guy is a real mother," Al thought. The booking procedure was done quickly, and Harry and Al headed for Amherst and the jail.

When they got there, Bronson and crew was waiting with Al's clothes. Al put them on and was lead away. Bronson then talked to the desk sergeant and found out that Al would be taken to court in the morning. The group left, to return at ten the next morning.

It all ended around eleven the next morning. A no contest plea to a $25 fine concluded it all, but when Joe found out what happened, he got to thinking again.

"What will come of this? What happens when The weather gets warm?" Joe concluded that it would be interesting to see.

Oh, mama, can this really be the end? Or is this the end-all? Or just means to an end? Is this the living end? Or just another dead end? Or the end of man and woman as we know them? Or is it the beginning of the end? Endcidently, we do wonder how this can be. Now can it for a second. The can-can revival? Or are they merely out to titillate? We know there'll be no hard feelings on the streaker's part. But how long will it be before this all ends? As Bob Dylan says, "there is no end in sight." But there is.

"the most intelligent of all"

Intro by Gary Gomes

I. The Vietnam War Continued...

As you may have read on this page last week, Vietnam and Southeast Asia continue on their crimsoncoloured paths to obliteration — which becomes just another fancy way of saying that people (whether they be called "the enemy," or "casualties" — and there is nothing casual about this kind of bloodletting). Suffice it to say that this type of American-sponsored playing off of Third World nations has been occurring for quite a while. Just turns out the U.S. pulled an inexcusable error in allowing its precious youth elixir go and do the killing. In Mozambique is a prime example. Nixon will give $400 million to the fascist Portuguese government for the purpose of keeping Mozambique as a buffer zone between Black Africa and South Africa. Oil interests abound in this region.

"Enter freely...

So, at last the U.S. businessman has found a way to exploit the youth market (give them bread and circuses — dope and rock) or else convince them that the U.S. is really working in their interests. How can you live if you're napalming an entire country? I'll leave that question on your underdeveloped consciences, friends.

II. "Hit 'em where they live"

Most assuredly, I shall, read the upcoming article of interest on the demise of the Program Council, and weep for your bucks. Bucks that you'll be paying, without even knowing the How or Why of the dilemma. Wanna find out how the Campus Center Board of Governors work. Then read on:

Feature:

POLITICAL GAMES

by Noel Conley

Program Council is dead. It isn't official at the time of this writing, but should be by the time you read this. What is official as I am writing this, is that the Graduate Student officers of the Campus Center, Board of Governors are planning to dissolve the Program Council (which takes a 2-3 vote of the entire Board — but who's picky — send the memos out anyway), and without the courtesy to talk with more than a token handful of the Council's members.

But that's not all — there is a reorganization proposal that's been kicking around for a few weeks now. Out of the jungle of SATF's, CCSUBOG's, PC's and CC Taxes come two ideas. First, that the Student Activities and RSO Staff salaries will be paid for by the Senate, but administered by the Campus Center. At least now they will work together instead of independently.

Conflict of Interest

The second idea is that the Graduate Students won't pay one cent towards Student Activities next year. That means that the Staff Salaries, RSO Group subsidies, Program Council, and the Student Union Craft Shop will be paid for by the Undergraduate Senate. Last year, the Campus Center paid over $270,000 towards activities (now remember, Graduates and Undergraduates pay the C.C. TAX), this year (thanks to legislation proposed by the Graduate Student Members of the C.C. Board of Governors) the Graduates paid for their fair share of only $75,000, from the Campus Center, which leaves Undergraduates with paying the other roughly ¾ million dollars (15,000 times $48.77 each). Next year, if all goes according to plan, we undergraduates would bear the burden of $51.00 each, while the Graduate Students pay nothing. Where is the conflict of interest?

First, Graduate Students, although they don't pay even 1 cent towards the Senate, read this magazine, our paper, etc. Surprisingly, the organizers who engineered last year's transfer and this year's proposal are Graduate Students on the Board of Governors (they're the guys who run the Campus Center) who also happen to be on the Graduate Student Senate who also happen to be Officers on the B.O.G. The Chairman, who gets $175 per month for his work, also gets paid by the Graduate Senate as Treasurer. We undergraduates are paying most of his salary, and yet the unpaid portion of Student Activity Taxes that he engineered is costing us up to $12.75 per year. And he did that to us solely for the Graduate Students.

Free Ride for the Grad Students

Now then, after arranging a reorganization that will allow the Graduate Students to pay none of the $750,000 for activities, they want the Student Senate to give BACK the small sum of a few hundred thousand dollars so that these same people on the Board (the Graduate Students who will pay nothing) will have some control over how the money is spent (they want to control the Student Activity and RSO Staff salaries). I seem to remember a Revolutionary war fought somewhere in the 1700's over Taxation without Representation, and now the Graduates want Representation without paying the taxes.

your own will."

Power And . . .

Solutions to Problems.

Compiled by Tyla Michelove

One could go on forever making lists of actions the average person could take to slow down or stop our wastefulness. If we reuse many paper and plastic bags as we can, that would be a start. Look at what you throw away everyday and see what can be saved or not used at all.

Now that the individual is somewhat aware of what changes must be made within his-her home, it is also time to make changes within the professions. We must make our technology work for us, not against us. The group that I mentioned originally is doing just that. To explain in more detail exactly what they are doing, Leon Michelove, a materials scientist and member of the group sent Below the Salt Magazine the following.

Sponsored by the Boston Industrial Mission and the Association of Technical Professionals, a group of engineers and scientists is attacking the energy crisis by applying their expertise in a multitude of fields. Meeting in homes of members of the group every other Monday night, this group of 20-25 professional men and women are providing Governor Sargent with a volunteer technical overview of the many plans and proposals being brought to public attention for discussion or action. The original purpose was met several weeks ago with the presentation to the Governor's Energy Emergency Committee of a series of proposals for conserving oil and electricity."

"The group has continued to meet, for several reasons. First, but not primary, the suggestions made for reduction of state energy consumption by elimination of many wasteful practices were successfully adopted. Secondly, the group has established several liaison paths with major business concerns along Route 128 for further conservation implementation. Most important, however, is the concern of all of the members that once the short term problems appear to be under control, the politics and polemics will hide the really pressing needs for mid-term, long lasting activities that will eventually lead to practical, long term, lasting solutions to the Massachusetts energy problems."

"This group is not prepared to enter the struggle for funding for the development of new or more efficient energy sources. They feel best prepared to review presently available governmental approaches to conservation, planning and data acquisition and evaluation. The need to establish a single source for energy information is one of the critical problems of the next few months. The further need to properly evaluate data, projections and business growth planning as it relates to the needs of the citizens must be addressed."

"The BIM-ATP group has taken the position that it will provide Governor Sargent with its views, plans and evaluations. In addition, it will provide the Legislative leaders with these same ideas. Should there be no action in either sector, or if the action is pure bluster and bravado and detrimental to the real needs of the poor, aged, ill and under privileged, then the press will be brought into the picture."

"The group is composed of basically conservative, skilled technical people from many areas of expertise: Electrical Engineering, Electronics, Business Management, Materials Science, Physical Science, Domestic Engineering, Computer Technology, etc. The members range from executive assistant to the Vice President for a major research and development (R & D) house on Route 128 to unemployed engineers trying to maintain professional competence. Democrats, Republicans, Progress Labor and Independent political leanings are evidenced, but the group hopes to stay non-political. Acting as advisors and long range planners, the ultimate goal is to make Massachusetts a model for the nation in planning and effective action to reduce the impact of the present energy crisis and avoid its prolongation."

It doesn't seem to matter whether the oil shortage we face now is real or not. We will be faced with something much worse in the future if we do not change our way of life right now. No longer can we be the image of the American with a color T.V. in every room. We can not afford to litter the countryside with unnecessary billboards or empty beer cans.

It is no longer a question of having enough money to clean up what we have already done. It is a question, rather, of having enough resources to not only wipe up our mistakes, but have enough to survive in the future, not to live in comfort, simply enough to survive. We have the opportunity to answer these questions now, through our action or our inaction.

I am not a big firm trying to scare you into buying my product at an inflated price, neither are members of the BIM-ATP group. We are merely concerned members of the human race trying to make our surroundings a lot better. I hope that this is the kind of selfishness that replaces the 'get-it-while-you-can' mentality. I can not make you change, but I can get you to think about what you are doing. I know that it has been said before, but, America, the joy ride is over.

The Strawbs' Powerful Benevolence

by David Sokol

Hero and Heroine
Strawbs
(A&M SP 3607)
Total Playing Time: 39:26

DAVID COUSINS

Hero and Heroine, the Strawbs eighth album, emphatically furthers the rich heritage of this most eloquent group. Despite major personnel changes in the band's line up since last year's Bursting At The Seams, the group's sound is as impressive as ever. Richard Hudson and John Ford, both responsible for "Part of the Union", the Strawbs' catchy establishment-defying English hit, have left to pursue a more commercial career and have already scored with two British chartbusters. (Their latest, "Burn Baby Burn" has been banned by several American stations due to the controversial nature of the title. Not again). Keyboardist Blue Weaver has also left to pursue his own venues, and can be heard on Lou Reed's Berlin. But the Strawbs, who in the past have weathered the losses of Rick Wakeman and Sandy Denny, maintain their strength, primarily the result of founding genius Dave Cousins' inspired writing.

Cousins' music has evolved a long way from the fairly straight folk-rock sound which he was playing in 1968. An English Pickwick recording of the earliest Strawbs featuring the then-budding Sandy Denny has only recently become available, and is important not only for its historical significance, but also because it captures Cousins' voice in its early development. Today Dave Cousins sings with a powerfully haunting quality which compliments the fullness of his music.

Like Bursting At the Seams and the awesome Grave New World, Hero and Heroine is a blending of many musical forms, though like its predecessors, the classical mellotron-keyboard sound prevails, and the Strawbs are one of only a small handful of bands who can make this sound work. The title song coupled with "Midnight Sun" is only one of three masterworks on the album. The lyrics tell the story of a lone sailor who becomes enticed with and ultimately falls in love with his savior Heroine who then turns "slowly into a snow white dove and spreads her wings to fly." Though more complex than either "Lay Down" or "Benedictus", there is the same powerful benevolence that marked these earlier gems. "I wonder is there death after life." Cousins' voice is especially moving on "Out In the Cold", a song thematically reminiscent of Bergman's film "Wild Strawberries", and on the existential "Round and Round." "For we were just the products of the endless spinning wheel."

Dave Cousins' music is marked by his extra-sensitive perceptions of living and loving, and his music is a celebration of his life. His love songs are too strong to be cliched (unlike, say the Moodies) and vary in form from up tempo rockers to quiet, piano dominated, Haydn or Mozart-influenced pieces. Cousins' voice is diversified, with the capacity of sounding as mellow as Pete Seeger or as intense as Roger Chapman, and with the same conviction that marks the music of Procol Harum and, more recently, Genesis. The Strawbs are still waiting for the elusive recognition which they deserve, although their music is sometimes a bit too sophisticated to appeal to huge numbers.

A few discographical notes: A generally unheard musical gem is Cousins' solo album Two Weeks Last Summer (English A&M AMLS 68118), featuring the likes of Rick Wakeman, Jon Hiseman and Roger Glover. Also of interest are the fairly obscure first two American Strawbs albums (Just a Collection of Antiques and Curios and From the Witchwood), both recorded while Rick Wakeman was in the group. Antiques, recorded live in 1970, features "Temperament of Mind", a five minute Wakeman solo which is a forerunner to current Wakeman concert material.

Like most fine records, Hero and Heroine gets more impressive with each listening and should certainly make new admirers for this premier group. Bless the Strawbs.

ESSENCE TO ESSENCE-DONOVAN (Epic)

I hate having to stomp on an album like this. Somebody probably likes it. To those of you who might be Donovan fans, my most humble apologies.

One thing for sure, it is Donovan — the vibrator he swallowed years ago is still running, if sporadically. Maybe the batteries are running down, it's all for the better. The cover is a laff-riot. Four pictures of Donovan humbling, or rather, degrading himself; I am led to believe that Mr. Leitch has been hanging around with Sri Chinmoy and the gang. Unlike John McLaughlin and Carlos Santana, Donovan's approach to spirituality seems almost humorous. I don't doubt his sincerity or anything, but the bit with the white robes and bowing hasn't helped his music any.

Like most of the Donovan songs I can remember, the songs on this album are mildly pleasant and eminently forgettable. I say mildly pleasant because you soon discover that the lyrics are too cute for words, and worse, that they've been rearranged and amputated to fit the tunes, and can therefore be ignored. The music itself is brain candy, dissolved and digested with no conscious effort. As such it is relatively inoffensive. I suppose there are a few million people who would disagree with me, some of them violently, but I have a hard time viewing such music as anything but essentially boring. Music can certainly be quiet and unobstrusive, and if it's good it will make some impression, leave some mark. With Essence to Essence I forget the songs as soon as they're over. Seems a waste.

In Concert:
Bill Staines
CC Auditorium
Feb. 21

All the hard core Firesign freaks were sitting in the auditorium waiting to see Proctor and Bergman. They had been listening to jokes about Bill all day: "I wonder if he does stain?" And they expected to suffer through his folk-singing until the real show began. Surprize! They were truly entertained. Bill Staines did the songs from his second and third albums. He has an amazing talent to use his lips as a trumpet and employs this and other sound effects. The audience really got off on that. In between songs he'd share stories from his past and explain how some of the songs were written. If you've seen him before, then you've already heard most of the stories, but they lose nothing in the repetition. His only flaw was although he asked for audience participation, he didn't give us a chance to join in. The show could be summed up by the guy sitting behind me. "You know, this guy is alright!" Then we brought him back for a hilarious encore. Bill, you're beautiful!

YOU AND ME — CHICK CHURCHILL (Chrysalis)

This debut solo album by ex-Ten Years After keyboard man Churchill has its equal high and low spots, and falls somewhere inbetween. The lyrics and vocals are forgettable, and the string arrangements detract from the group's tightness. Chick's good old acoustic piano rocks well however, and he wisely concentrates on leading the band via his keyboard work. "Chiswick Flower," a trio cut, has Chick laying down a funky piano base and soaring over it on double tracked organ. The title cut, too, bounces along in a nice groove. B.

—John Cahill

After listening to this album, I can understand why Alvin Lee wrote most of Ten Years After's material. Lee's songs have some air of respectability when compared against these. It seems Mr. Churchill has spent too, too much time plonking away at the keyboards for TYA. One cut from this disc is aptly titled "You're Not Listening"; which is precisely what you should do if you ever come across this album.

SILVERBIRD — LEO SAYER
(Chrysalis BS 2738)
Time: 34:53

Imagine an impassioned, awakened Elton John with some new and interesting arrangements, and you'll begin to see Leo Sayer. But we demean him in comparing him and Elton, as Leo brings a lot more fullness, guts and feeling in his work than Elton ever gets across.

Silverbird is a loser's album. All the songs are about some poor, abused sap, stepped on once again. "The Show Must Go On" has been the number one single in England for the last six weeks, and if the label said 'Elton John' instead of 'Leo Sayer', it would be flying high here as well. The song's veddy English, and it seems we still have this thing about Foreign-Sounding Music. B +.

—Mike Kostek

FLORENCE WARNER-FLORENCE WARNER
(Epic KE 32654)

This is one of those albums that you could sum up in one word. Nice. Florence is just another female singer, nothing exceptional about her. Her voice is like Linda Ronstadt trying to do a Joni Mitchell imitation with a little Judy Collins and Carly Simon thrown in for good measure, only it doesn't quite measure up. She does songs that you've heard before; Rundgren's "It Wouldn't Have Made Any Difference", Loggins' "Til The Ends Meet", and Andy Williams' current hit by Nilsson "Remember". There are others, but why continue? There are even two mediocre poems on the back cover, written by Ms. Warner's brother Byron, who also wrote another, "Dixie", a little better than mediocre song on the first side. It is hard to be down on this album, because it's not really that bad. It's just not worth paying real money for it.

FEELING THE SPACE
YOKO ONO (Apple SW-3412)
Time: 44:48

Say, did you know that David Spinozza's hips are only 34"? 3 hairs on his chest? Not too virile, if you know what I mean, huh? On the other hand, this guy Robert Kreinar's measurements are 46-37-39. I guess that's more like it. Says so right here on the liner notes...

With "Feeling The Space", Yoko Ono continues the development of "conventional" songwriting, from a generally feminist perspective, which she began in Approximately Infinite Universe last spring. The last release was a double album: "Feeling The Space" is a single album, and therefore has a lot less room for the kind of excess ("What A Bastard the World Is", "Now or Never", etc.) which largely prevented the listening public from hearing some of Universe's gems (such as "Catman", "Looking Over From My Hotel Window", and "Peter the Dealer"). So it should not be surprising that, with a couple of exceptions, Yoko's songwriting is more disciplined here than previously. Her vocals are also improving, in the conventional sense, although I still enjoyed her more in "Cambridge 1969", on the Life With The Lions album.

The subject matter of "Feeling The Space" songs come from a wide-ranging feminist point of view. There are songs of defiance and revolt — "Angry Young Woman", "She Hits Back", "Woman Power"; songs about woman's denial of individuality and the struggle to regain an identity — "Growing Pain", "Coffin Car", "Woman of Salem", "Run, Run, Run", "If Only", "A Thousand Times Yes"; and a couple of songs which are my personal favorites, "Yellow Girl (Stand By For Life)" and "Men, Men, Men". "Yellow Girl" explores the problem of the poor little rich girl, or any woman placed on any pedestal — "She tells her man to stand by — She tells her friends to stand by — She tells her world to stand by — But nobody knows she's a standby for life." "Men, Men, Men" is a definitive answer to a male claim that he wouldn't mind being treated as a sex object, heh, heh, heh — "Men, men, snails and puppies — Your muscles are not for fighting in war — Your lips are not for voicing opinions — Your eyes are there for us to look into — I want you to take your rightful position". (But John has the last word.) Stylistically, the songs range from the rock 'n' roll drone of "Woman Power" to the lyricism of "Growing Pain" and the dance-hall ambiance of "Men, Men, Men".

Yoko's backing group is competent and versatile, with the outstanding members being David Spinozza and Ken Ascher on guitars and keyboards respectively. I personally prefer the Yoko Ono of Fly, but if you're the type that heads for the nearest restroom when "Why" gets played in the Hatch, "Feeling The Space" just might be a pleasant surprise.

LES VARIATIONS — MOROCCAN ROLL
(Buddah Records)

In many European and Asian countries, hashish is mixed with tobacco and rolled into a cigarette. This eliminates the need to carry around a pipe and also, since many of the inhabitants roll their own cigarettes anyway, it's a natural thing to do. This cigarette is known as a "moroccan roll".

Fact is, the hash doesn't have to strictly come from Morocco for it to be a "moroccan roll", it can come from India, Turkey, Lebanon, Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, or anywhere else. It can be any kind of hash.

The reason we don't have "moroccan rolls" in the U. S. is mainly due to the fact that North and South America have the primary marijuana countries: Columbia (40 percent), Jamaica (30 percent), Mexico (25 percent) and the U.S. (5 percent). Europe and Asia have the hashish countries, and Les Variations is French.

So everybody: More rock 'n' roll!

The Wizard Runt To The Ground?

Todd
Todd Rundgren
(Bearsville 2BR 6952)

If "Hello It's Me" hadn't become such an unexpected hit single, Todd would have been released months ago as a single record and everything would have been better for all concerned. As it stands, Todd is your usual excercise in 2-record, $9.98 indulgence; a post-Wizard Something-Anything where Todd's studio pyrotechnics get the best of him and inevitably render a good deal of the album negligible.

Perhaps it's because A Wizard/A True Star was such a perfect outlet for Todd. It was a single record and as such served as a harness for Todd's dangerous over-eclecticism. The pace was rapid — at least 10 songs per side, many under two minutes — and the overall effect was one of restrained resourcefulness. Without the self-imposing limits of a single disc, his strength becomes his weakness.

Which is to say if you eliminate the Emerson, Lake and Palmer take-offs ("The Spark of Life", "In and Out the Chakras We Go"), the humiliating attempt to take on Gilbert and Sullivan ("Lord Chancellor's Nightmare Song"), and the sheer listlessness of all of side two, only then could Todd be considered successful.

But let's not be totally negative. Todd's best songs have always been the least ambitious ones, his ballads, and sides one and three are where they're found. "A Dream Goes On Forever" will become the new Rundgren song to hit the airwaves, and it has the punch and spark to make it big. "I Think You Know", "Useless Begging" and "Izzat Love" are all happy music that is brilliantly arranged and produced.

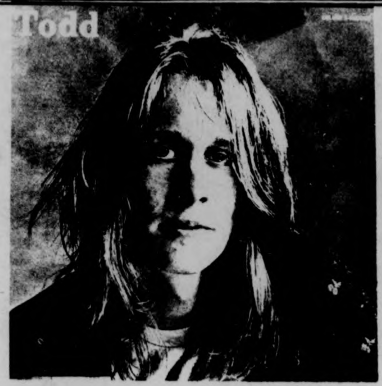
"Sons of 1984" features thousands of New York hippies on the right channel, and the equal amount of San Francisco freaks on the left. It was recorded live in Central Park, with the SF audience overdubbed later. Surprisingly enough, it is executed with more control and aplomb than one would expect under the conditions. It takes on an anthem-like quality similar to Wizard's "Just One Victory."

"No. 1 Lowest Common Denominator" is basically a slowed-down "Black Maria" (S-A), a song Todd has always felt comfortable with, if just to show us he's no rock and roll pussy.

Get a friend to buy Todd, borrow it, tape all the good songs and forget the rest. The next one will be a monster.

—Steve Feld

no, no, no, a little more humanity please



West 24th street is a five minute walk from classic Times Square, its sides lined with decaying coke signs and old, useless looking buildings. You glance down at the cracked pavement as you rummage through your pockets for the address, only to find out you were right, and somewhere amid this New York madness, built by Rundgren himself, is the Secret Sound Studio. It was here that I met Mark Klingman, Todd's partner in the studio as well as the second most important member of his present band, explained Todd, as well as the Klingman-Rundgren history (too detailed and unrelated to go into here) and Utopia, the new band.

"We've started to work on a group album. We're putting all of our music and ideas together, they're going to be like suites. Until that album comes out we'll be mostly known as Todd's back-up band, but after it comes out it will establish us as a group," explained Klingman.

Which only left me to think that Todd's new album would be more of a group effort than another one-man show as the majority of his past albums have been. There was a faint clue that he might be finally moving over to share the glory on Something/Anything? as he used one of Klingman's songs, "Dust In the Wind." But this notion was dispelled when the honors of singing it were taken by Todd, even though Klingman is more than competent on vocals. And after taking one look at the credits on the new album's poster, it was clear Todd had once again pushed Klingman as well as the other capable musicians into the background and had once again made it an almost solo album.

You might almost think Todd has taken up voice impersonations with his Bowie sound on "I Think You Know". Then, just when you're ready to melt it down and sell it back to Warner Bros., "A Dream Goes On Forever" floats off the turntable and all but leaves you sighing. Insanity returns with "Lord Chancellor's Nightmare Song" where Klingman's keyboards mesmerize. And it goes on like that, from depressing lows to all-time highs, and you might find yourself skipping two or three songs a side, occasionally wondering why the two albums weren't simply separated according to brilliancy of music and repetitous Rundgren sounds. It can't be listened to while you're playing with your feet or something equally perverse; it must be delved into, leaving you either wide-eyed and flabbergasted, playing frisbee with it or both. I am left both.

Brad thinks he's mad and I tend to agree with Seneca, "There is no great genius free from some tincture of madness".

SABBATH BLOODY SABBATH-BLACK SABBATH (Warners)

Black Sabbath's latest offering might just finish them off as the kings of heavy metal rock. Save for one song, "Spiral Architect", this album is a waste of time, effort and money. The only thing this album is good for is as a soundtrack for a Japanese horror film. Even at that, it would be an insult.

This disc suffers from a lack of direction, ideas or better yet — everything; Sabbath is content to borrow overused riffs from previous albums. God only knows how they ever convinced Rick Wakeman of Yes to play on this disc. Obviously, he was either drunk or doing it for the money, cos' this album won't be any feather in his cap. Most of the cuts are slower, none of that power stuff like last years single, "Supernaut". As far as the band members' performances go, they still play as dreary as ever.

I'm still waiting for the Sabs to record another gem like their third album, Master of Reality. Master is still Sabbath's best effort to date and shows what they should have produced on this album. Until then, we'll be subjected to dreck like Sabbath Bloody Sabbath. Maybe they could use Todd Rundgren?

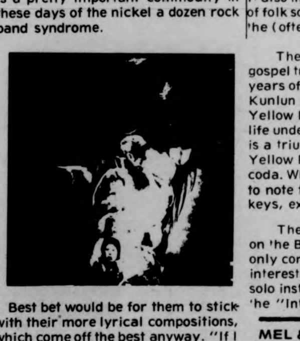
SKIN TIGHT — SKIN ALLEY (Stax STS 3022)

Here's an interesting case of an English rock band recording for America's soulful Stax label. Skin Alley have put together a varied, enjoyable second album, recorded in Oxfordshire and remixed under Don Nix's auspices down in Memphis. Sounding at different times like Roger Daltry, Leo Sayer, Herbie Mann, and the Raspberries (dare they all be invoked in the same breath), Skin Alley demonstrate their ability to do lots of things decently, but are a long distance from having their own sound, which is a pretty important commodity in these days of the nickel a dozen rock band syndrome.



Best bet would be for them to stick with their more lyrical compositions, which come off the best anyway. "If I Only Had the Time", "Broken Eggs", and "The Heap Turns Human" all have singles potential; the latter two are especially nice, sounding both English and American at the same time. The musicianship on the part of all four members is generally credible throughout, though fuller production would have strengthened the whole recording. The band keeps to the instrumental basics with guitar, bass, drums, and keyboards. Hats off to the keyboardist, Krzysztof Juszkiewicz for having the most unique name of the month. With proper exposure and better packaging, Skin Alley could get the chance they deserve

THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA,
EUGENE ORMANDY, CONDUCTOR
Total Playing Time: 45:30
RCA ARL1-0145

Apparently it is possible to write good music by committee.

Last September, the Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, undertook a concert tour of mainland China — the first such tour by an American orchestra. Among the pieces they played was the "Yellow River Concerto", written by anonymous members of the Central Philharmonic Society of the People's Republic of China. I approached this record with some caution, as most of the group-written pieces of classical music which I've encountered have proved to be either rather dull or pasted-up, with little structure or coherence. Fortunately, this piece not only avoids those dangers but also displays an interesting fusion of Eastern and Western forms, in addition to providing a glimpse into the role of music in one revolutionary society.

Basically, the "Yellow River Concerto" is a piece of program music, its four movements depicting the history of the Chinese people from slavery through liberation, and using the Yellow River as a metaphor for the Chinese nation. The first movement, "Prelude: The Song of the Yellow River Boatmen", sets the scene by depicting boatmen struggling in the river. It also introduces the first of the many folk songs used in the piece — and it might be well to note that, although the treatment of folk songs in the concerto sometimes needs to be simplistic, on the whole the melodies are treated with respect and without the (often unconcious) condecension too many composers bring to folk melodies.

The second movement, "Ode to the Yellow River", begins with a melody in the cellos which could almost be taken for a gospel tune. As the title indicates, the movement is a tribute to the endurance of the Chinese people throughout thousands of years of history, ending with a piano solo symbolic of the "awakened Chinese people, who tower in the East like the lofty Kunlun Mountains". A beautiful opening passage with hushed strings and Chinese flute opens the third movement, "The Yellow River in Wrath." Here the music (which is not developed as fully as it could have been) deals with the hardship of life under Japanese domination, and the final determination of the people not to submit. Finally, "Defend the Yellow River" is a triumphant exposition of the people's long liberation struggle. It includes a fugal treatment of the song "Defend the Yellow River" and culminates in an arrangement of "The East is Red", which combines with the "Internationale" in the coda. Whew. Opening with a large fanfare, the movement is about one-third the length of the entire concerto; it is interesting to note that the revolutionary struggle is not depicted in a Wagnerian, sturm-und-drang manner, but entirely in major keys, exuberant and joyous.

The soloists are Daniel Epstein, who handles the piece's brilliant piano part with much skill and style, Murray Panitz on the Bamboo Flute, and Hauman Lee on the Pipa, a short lute sounding at different times like a mandolin or a banjo. My only complaint about the latter two instruments is that we don't hear enough of them. The piece itself, as mentioned, is an interesting fusion of the West — in the use of the Western orchestra and concerto form — and the East — in the folk songs and solo instruments. Most of it could pass for a European concerto written sometime within the last century, but then there is the "Internationale"...

The recording also includes an arrangement of "San Pei", a worker's and peasant's march, plus "The Stars and Stripes Forever" and Respeghi's "The Pines Of Rome". The latter two don't interest too much.

MEL & TIM, MEL & TIM (Stax STS 5501)

An album filled with "What You See is What You Get" and "Back Stabbers" philosophy, Mel & Tim suffers from sounding too sterile, too easy to listen to. In the past, Mel and Tim have done the do beautifully with both their funky rockers and their cover versions, but here they suffer from a too evenly-textured performance. "Forever in a Day" is the only thing here that really matches their earlier stuff. M&T fans ought to stick with Good Guys Only Win in the Movies and Starting All Over Again, both most enjoyable albums. The former languishes in the bargain bins, a forgotten treat. C'mon Mel and Tim, git your backfield in motion and make the next one more than merely innocuous. You kin do it.

"Joy of Sex": Share It!

The Joy of Sex
Ed. by Alex Comfort
253 Pages — $4.95
Simon and Schuster

Reviewed by Patric Coffey

The Joy of Sex, is sub-titled "A Gourmet Guide to Love Making" and it is that and more. With humor, honesty and directness it covers all areas, sensual and sexual, from beds and breasts to venereal disease and voyeurs. This book is an unanxious account of the full repertoire of human heterosexuality. As such, it is long overdue.

There are many sex manuals on shelves in your bookstore, maybe one or two on the shelves in your own room; they are about the basics and their main use is to get rid of worries over the normality, possibility, and variety of sexual experience. This book excels because it deals not with sex, but with love making. And it deals with love making on the level of someone already making satisfying love and who wants to go on from there.

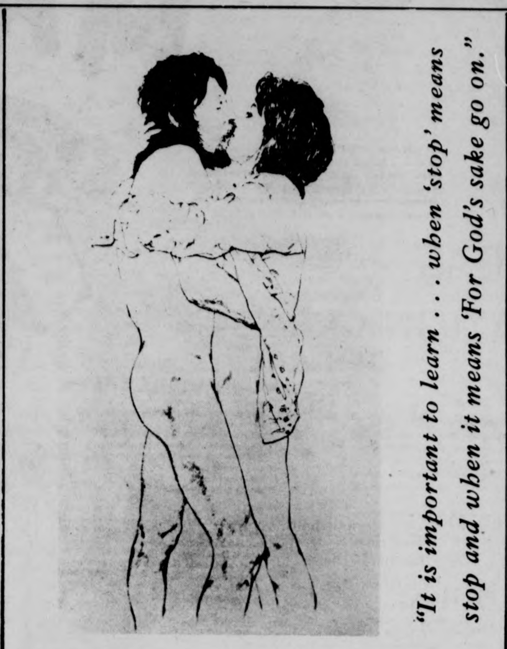
The starting point of all lovemaking is close bodily contact. Love has been defined as the harmony of two souls and the contact of two epidermes. This book points out that it is also, from our infancy, the starting point of human relationships and needs. There may be other places we can express all ourselves but there aren't many.

In writing descriptively about sex, it is hard not to be solemn, however, unsolemnly we play in bed — bed is the place to play all the games you ever wanted to play. The writing in The Joy of Sex is so unsolemn, so openly and joyously playful that it takes a great effort of will and a cold shower to keep from sharing the book with a friend and looking into the subject. But why keep from doing this?

It is designed to be read together or separately. All the ideas in the book are a turn-on for some people, virtually none for everyone. The 252 pages are divided into topics of turn-ons including: foreskins, frequency, tenderness, virginity, mouth music, quickies, bondage, bites, penis, playtime, foursomes and moresomes, slow masturbation, navels, come again, vulva, rear entry, and south slav style (which is a real kick).

As I turned the pages of The Joy of Sex with a friend I found myself saying "I'd like to try that." And that's what it is for, to be taken mutually from there. It offers a chance to find and match up with your own and your partner's needs and preferences. Finding someone else's needs and your own, and how to express them in bed, is not only interesting and educative, but rewarding and what sexual love is all aboout.

Then there's the illustrations — humorous, honest, and direct — they artfully reflect the tone of the Joy of Sex. Charles Raymond and Christopher Foss, the artists, won a Graphic Designers Award as one of the 50 best illustrated books for their work in The Joy of Sex. Many are full page and they are all placed at least one, large or small, every two or three pages. The striking true to life quality of the sketches is accomplished tastefully with a minimum of lines and shading.



"It is important to learn . . . when 'stop' means stop and when it means 'For God's sake go on.'"

Also included are 16 full page colorplates of ancient erotic art from India, China and Japan. The bawdy, explicit art of the ancients is presented in a center insert with no captions, no accompaniment. It is perhaps a silent way of pointing out that joy in sex has a long tradition, indeed has always been with us — it has just been suppressed. And we must learn to appreciate it where we discover it, whether it be in the center of a book or in the core of our lives.

Is all that 'normal'? That question is dealt with early; "Normal implies there is something sex ought to be. There is. It ought to be a wholly satisfying link between two people, from which both emerge unanxious, rewarded and ready for more." And on abnormality, "It's abnormal in Papua to bury dead relatives, and abnormal in California to eat them."

Pick up a copy of the Joy of Sex. You might find out things about yourself and your partner you didn't know, and all of them will be rewarding. If for some reason you can't read this book, it's okay. You might be lucky enough to meet someone nice who has.

The Preachers

The Preachers

God is Against Communism . . .
Hypnotism and The Beatles . .
Drugs, Sex, Liberals, McGilvray . . ?!

Reviewed by Jon Carr

Oral Roberts has reached a position that the other people James Morris profiles in The Preachers must envy. Unlike most of Morris' other subjects, Roberts doesn't have to faith heal, lead evangelical crusades, or rail against Communism. He is well-enough off to get away with hanging around celebrities and preaching theological pap.

The other subjects of Morris' book, though, are quite flamboyant. Most came from backgrounds of grinding rural poverty, sketchy education and conventional ministries early in their careers. But eventually they were "called" from their humdrum churches to the big-time world of tents, miracles, million-dollar budgets and radio ministries.

Take, for example, the "Right Reverend, Father-in-God, His Divine Eminence, Dr. Frederick J. Eikerenkoetter" — better known as Reverend Ike.

"You must get rid of that pie in the sky bye and bye when you die attitude," Reverend Ike tells his followers. "Let your attitude be: I WANT MY PIE NOW, WITH ICE CREAM ON TOP."

That philosophy has worked well enough for Reverend Ike — he owns three Rolls-Royces, two Mercedes, and homes in New York and Hollywood. His basic philosophy is centered around a "Blessing Plan"; that is, what you send to Reverend Ike, the Lord will return to you — presumably with a little ice cream on top.

In contrast, God has ordained Billy James Hargis for a somewhat different ministry — the Christian Crusade, which he admits equates "liberalism and socialism with Communism." "Dr." Hargis — a title all the preachers seem to have in common — opposes a wide variety of modern trends, from sex education ("Is the Little Red Schoolhouse the Proper Place to Teach Raw Sex?") and Satan worship ("It will become the state religion of the youthful militant Marxist."), to rock music.

Hargis' Tulsa publishing house once put out a book entitled "Communism, Hypnotism and the Beatles." As the author, a close associate of Hargis' named David Noebel, explained, the book revealed that the Beatles were "preparing our teenagers for riot and ultimate revolution against our Christian Republic. It's all a part of the Communists' master music plan. The drum is the key — little Ringo."

Morris covers a number of other preachers at considerable length: Carol McIntire, who organized the abortive series of "Victory in Vietnam" marches; A. A. Allen, a white faith healer who catered to a predominantly black following before his death of "acute alcoholism" in 1970; C. W. Burpo, the "general practitioner" of radio, who is equally adept at faith healing, moralizing, uncovering Communist conspiracies and/or proselytizing; and, of course, the President's preacher, Billy Graham, who , in 1968, thanked God because "in Thy sovereignty Thou has permitted Richard Nixon to lead us at this momentous hour of our history."

In their own way, all of these men represent a peculiar form of modern Horatio Alger. Oral Roberts is the best example. He has progressed from an obscure Oklahoma faith healer to president of an accredited university named after himself. Along the way he stopped "curing", deserted his fundamental Pentecostal faith for a more socially acceptable Methodism, and even altered his basic money-making operation, the Blessing Pact, for an even more profitable scheme, "Seed-Faith." Oral's accelerating attempt at sophistication can be seen in the evolution of his three autobiographies' titles: from Oral Roberts' Life Story As Told By Himself (1949) to My Story (1961) to The Call (1972). What it all comes down to is that once Oral made his wad, he apparently decided to go, well, if not exactly high society, then at least respectable. And what could be more American than that?

Morris, who is like so many of his subjects a native Oklahoman, has done a thorough research job in The Preachers. I only wish that he had some personal interviews with the preachers or their followers to go along with his prodigious amount of material on their books, magazines, radio shows and finances. In particular, I'd like to have found out why more people haven't realized that — at least when dealing with these preachers — Reverend Ike was right: "When you kneel down to pray, you're putting yourself in a good position to get kicked in the behind."

The Schlep of Things To Come

by Arthur Levine

Sleeper written and directed by Woody Allen

In his latest film, Sleeper, Allen plays the role of Miles Monroe, owner of a Greenwich Village health food store, clarinetist, and schlep. When the operation for his ulcer goes amiss, Miles is frozen, wrapped in aluminum foil, and then placed in a capsule to be saved for posterity. Following the Washington Irving scenario, Miles awakens in the year 2173, to find he has slept through an atomic war started by Albert Shankar, which has drastically changed the shape of the world as he once knew it. This highly mechanized society has all the terrors of 1984, but with the usual Allen absurdities thrown in, i.e., a highly inept police force, machines to aide in orgasmic pleasure, and cosmic orb-like things which induce mind altered states, better known in 1973 as dope.

His revivors intend to use Miles as a pawn in their plan to overthrow the authoritarian regime, headed by a facsimile of Big Brother. Thus he is forced into the underground movement and hunted as an enemy of the state. New forms of rehabilitation of criminals have been implemented; one being to alter his brain. The prospect of which causes terror for Miles, claiming it to be his second favorite organ.

Miles manages to scape his pursuers by posing as a robot in the household of Luna Schlosser, played by Diane Keaton. When she learns that he is an alien, Miles is forced to kidnap Luna and use her as a means of reaching his underground contact. The police finally apture Miles, but Luna, who has begun to fall for him escapes and plans to continue the underground activities.

Miles is brainwashed and assimiliated into the society as a useful citizen, until Luna comes to his rescue. Shocked at what has become of the once rebellious Miles, Luna attempts to reach him through a form of primal therapy, whereby he will experience the traumas of his life, i.e., Sunday dinner at his mother's. After Miles regains his senses, he and Luna make plans to capture the leader of the state. The final episode finds Miles posing as a surgeon in order to abduct the mighty leader, who has been reduced to a probiscus by an assassination attempt.

Keaton got laughs by presenting a character who showed an unwavering determinism to accomplish a task even in the face of constant harrassment by his environment, human or mechanical. Laurel and Hardy kept the audience laughing by virtue of their stupidity and inability to cope with the complexities of life. The Three Stooges have become cult heroes because of their various techniques of inflicting bodily harm upon one another. All these comedians share the same basic formula for evoking laughs, that being to exploit their basic ineptitude in social situations and their physical dexterity in combating their mechanized surroundings.

It is obvious that Allen borrows from other comedians and also rehashes some of his old material, but much more importantly Sleeper is further proof that Allen is a unique comic genius because of his ability to blend various comic techniques into his own zany brand of humor. Allen uses the futuristic setting as a vehicle to parody many present day situations. He takes the "gripping" concerns with corrupt politics, health foods, therapy, and sex and renders them absurd. It's a vicarious relationship between Allen and viewer. He asks you to step aside for a second and laugh at things which are usually spoken of only in solemn tones. For Allen nothing is sacred, not even his own work. In a spoof on film criticism he describes the film as, "taut, tense, powerful, and warm."

Many have said that Sleeper does not fair as well as his previous films, like Bananas, Take the Money and Run, and Play it Again, Sam. I would tend to disagree with this opinion by citing the new vistas Allen has begun to explore. With this film Allen has established his ability as a comic ballerina, par excellence. He has gotten away from his straight barrage of one-liners and begun to utilize his physical capacilities which help the continuity of the film.

A Blue Bottle With a Badge

The Seven-Ups: directed by Philip d'Antoni, starring Roy Scheider
by Stuart Sojcher

One has a story: a tough guy hero, a psychotic bad guy, a touch of violence, a spattering of obscenities and of course, a car chase. Most of this is evident in The Seven-Ups, one of the latest and better of the cop films.

The Seven-Ups are a unit of special cops working within "New York's Finest." their tactics are cold and efficient; they get results but do they operate within the law? They break into a mob leader's house at night, point a gun up his nose while threatening to slit his wife's throat, get their What one wonders about is how often this actually happens.

Roy Scheider, Gene Hackman's partner in The French Connection, is the leader of our heroes. One never sees his private side — he's always on the job trying to snag another crook. A childhood friend played well by Tony Bianco, an undertaker, supplies him with information about the mob's doings. Little does Scheider realize that his buddy is doing a pretty profitable business kidnapping top members of the mob and holding them for ransom. One of the Ups unit is killed by Bianco's men and it's only a matter of time before ... The car chase. Philip d'Antoni, information and quietly exit. director and producer of this film, is no stranger to the chase sequence, having also produced Bullitt and The French Connection, which had the best chases ever on celluloid. This one measures up quite well, if a bit too long, but as in Bullitt, the viewer 'feels' the car's gyrations over bumps and inclines. If you enjoy a good chase sequence, then the film is worth seeing if only for that reason.

The film, however, does have some other good points. The musical score is perfect as it combines suspense and melodrama, especially in the films opening moments. The acting is realistic; one of the Ups is a real cop. The scenes between Bianco and Scheider are all very good as they reminisce about their past, all the time wary about each other and their positions. And of course there is a final shoot-out.

All this is very entertaining, but it does raise some good questions. In most of the cop films, revenge is a legitimate reason for going beyond the law as in The Seven-Ups. Is this justifiable? Is it not time for Hollywood to curb the endless cop films? Is there no stop to violence on the screen? The situation becomes rather scary when one can witness killing after killing and feel nothing. (Violence is handled fairly well in this film.) I don't wish to spoil anyone's entertainment; I also like to be entertained, but one should be aware of what one is watching. What are the implications? How am I being manipulated?

Films hold a powerful influence over us. They serve as a form of entertainment, but many are raising some very important issues about ourselves and our society. So let us continue to be entertained, but try to be a little more aware of what the film is trying to do or say.

I don't have answers to the questions raised, but I feel that something is wrong when there is no stop to violence on the screen, or the endless stream of cop films. Is this what the public wants?

Narcs Shut Down "Drug" Play

A MIDSUMMER'S NIGHT DREAM
Hampshire College
Feb. 11-17

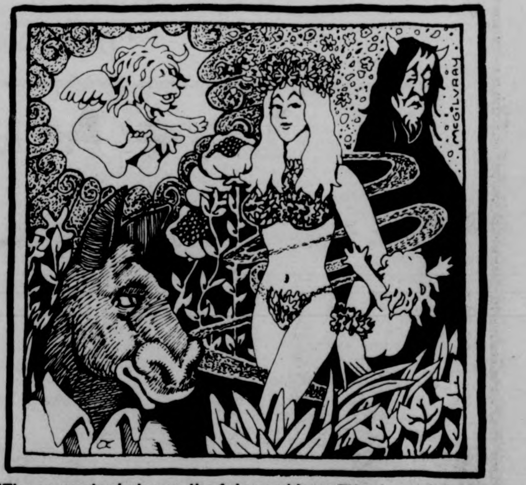
by Michael Grossman

Hampshire College's production of A Midsummer Night's Dream was a delightful night for those, myself included, who were just craving to see a live Shakespearian performance. For me, at least, it has been a long time. I arrived with two friends rather early and we found ourselves talking to one of the actors who was cleaning up from the night before. Ralph Anderson, who was celebrating his birthday incidentally, felt that the performance that night (Wednesday) was going to be the best due to the initial sell-out and the availability of enough energy for the lighting and the recorded music, a problem that popped up the first two nights. And, indeed, it was a fine performance. After the play, I remarked that the actors had more fun than we had.

Although the play abounded with dream and illusion, as any good performance of this play should, I felt the real strength of the performance lied in the veracious comedy the play itself possesses. Or, as a friend of mine stated, "I haven't laughed so hard in over five years." The sheer comic treatment given to the misguided relationships, courtesy of our fairy prankster Puck (Shari Belafonte), and the excellent performance turned in by Stephen Steisel as Nick Bottom, transcended the dream-like setting into something so ridiculously real that Shakespeare's greatness cannot be denied.

Nevertheless, our imaginations were tantalized during what I thought to be the most enjoyable moments of the entire play. The encounter between the fairy goddess Titania (Dede Burns) and the 'ass', Nick Bottom, ended in a marshmallow free-for-all with her jovial, audience-toying fairies Mustardseed (Ralph Anderson), Moth (Kevin Gilles), and Cobweb (Nick Kroes).

It did have its weaknesses though. The end dragged out, particularly the peasant's play Pyramus and Thysby. The most notable weakness, though, was the character of Puck. Ms. Belafonte handled the physical aspect of jumping about, maneuvering between the actors and pretending to be invisible rather well, but her acting fell a bit short. It seemed to me that she could not deliver the significance Puck is given in this play toward the mortals. For example, when he looks on the mixed-up lovers, (Act III, Sc. II) he states "what fools these mortals be!" this very key line, where we clearly see Shakespeare's intent on having a character Puck, was delivered so complacently that it had no affect whatsoever. Fine performances were given by others, particularly Jeff Steele (Lysander) and Chris Bancel (Oberon-Theseus) along with Colette Cutter (Hermia) and Kathy Kartiganer (Helena).



"The encounter between the fairy goddess, Titania, and the ass, Nick Bottom ended in a marshmellow free-for-all."

Combined with all of this, the elaborate costumes, the Elizabethan dancing and music made this more than just a Shakespearian play. It was, in all respects, an Elizabethan show.

Weekend Do's

by Arthur Levine

The Adventures of Robin Hood (1938) +++
One of Warner Brothers most satisfying adventure films. Starring Error Flynn as Robin, Claude Rains as Prince John, and Basil Rathbone as Guy of Gisbourne. Directed by Michael Curtiz. Friday 7:30 and 9:30 at Merrill Center, Amherst College.

American Graffiti +++
This film is more than just another nostalgic look into the fifties. It grapples with the very real difficulties of growing up and finding a niche for oneself in the adult world. The film recounts the exploits of four friends on the night before they are to go their separate ways; some to college, others to continue to haunt the local street corners. There's a lot of fun and good music, but also some interesting studies of American youth. Playing at the Academy of Music, Northampton and the Mountain Farms Mall.

Beyond the Valley of the Dolls +
A doltish and sappy sequel to the famous Valley of the Dolls: rated X; shown at 6:30, 9:00, and 11:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium on Tues., March 5.

Black Orpheus (1958) ++
"The myth of Orpheus and Eurydice was given a Negro setting in this visually splendid but dramatically unsatisfactory piece written and directed by Marcel Camus. With Marpessa Dawn and Bruno Mello." At the Globe, Northampton, 8:30.

Duck Soup ++++
An uproarious political satire with Groucho as Prime Minister Firefly of Freedonia. Chico and Harpo play peanut vendors who become secret agents. Their job — to spy on Groucho for his scheming enemy, Tarentino, the Prime Minister of Sylvania. A highlight of the movie is the incomparable mirror scene. Two Road Runner cartoons will also be shown. Saturday, March 2, Thompson 104 at 7, 9 and 11.

The Exorcist +++
A hair-raising horror show, based on the work by William Blatty. It deals with the possession of a young girl by demonic spirits and subsequent exorcism. Recommended for those who like to dabble in the occult and-or are strong of stomach. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Jonathan Livingston Seagull +
"Screen droppings from the novel add up to laughable absurdity, with gulls who talk like adult idiots and music that defies the ear, fine-feathered or human. Seemingly endless and strictly for the gullible." Campus Cinemas.

A King in New York (1937) +++
Charlie Chaplin stars directs and composes the music for this film. "Fleeing a revolution in his own country, King Shahdov (Chaplin) takes refuge in the USA. He is suspected of being a Communist and brought before the Un-American Activities Committee, but the film ends with his return to Europe. This was produced after Chaplins' departure from the US and is largely autobiographical. Sponsored by the Amherst Film Coop Monday at 6, 8, 10 at Thompson 104.

Last Tango in Paris (1973) ++++
A must for every serious filmgoer. Bertolucci has perfectly recreated the nightmare world of a very lonely man, played by Marlon Brando, who has just about given up on life, until a young woman, Maria Schneider, enters his life. In one last desperate attempt to find something to live for, he enters into an unusual love affair in which their pasts remain unknown and the present is all that matters. The ending confirms his and Bertolucci's negative suspicions about the possibilities of uncomplicated love in the modern world. Amherst Cinema.

Magnum Force ++
The sequel to Dirty Harry, with Clint Eastwood reciting his lines like he just sat on his 44 Magnum. A lot of action but little suspense. Mountain Farms Mall.

The three Marx Brothers: Groucho, Harpo, Chico & Zeppo.

Little Big Man (1972) +++
The epic tale of Jack Crabb (Dustin Hoffman), who at a very early age was captured by the Pawnee and rought up as one of their own, until by chance he is brought back to the "civilized" world. The film vividly portrays the white man's inhumanity to the Indians in a very personalized way that is rare in American cinema. The narrative wanders a bit, and possibly there is too much coincidence to take seriously; nevertheless a very entertaining and moving film. Tuesday at the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:30, 9:00 and 11:30.

The Miracle of Morgan's Creek (1943) ++++
"An outrageous satirical farce, written and directed by Preston Sturges, about a small-town girl who gets drunk at an army party, marries a soldier whose name she thinks is Ratskywatsky, can't find him, and has terrible trouble getting someone else to marry her without admitting she's pregnant; finally becomes a heroine by presenting the nation with sextuplets. Prudes could console themselves with the thought that the film made quite a comment on the morals of the nation in time of war." Amherst Film Cooperative, Friday at 7:30 and 9:30 at Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

McQ ++
John Wayne fights the forces of evil in this police drama. Wayne plays a clean cop who turns in his badge and becomes a private eye militants instead of following the narcotics lead Wayne knows to be the key. This film will definitely win him a permanent place in the Harvard Lampoon Hall of Fame. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

Orpheus (1949) +++
"A strange poetic fantasy written and directed by Jean Cocteau, based on the myth of Orpheus and Eurydice, but with twists of his own. Its real meaning is obscured, but there is much pleasure to be gained from watching it purely as a piece of instinctively successful cinema using all the devices of the medium. Photographed by Nicolas Hayer, music by Georges Auric, with Jean Marais as Orpheus and Maria Casares as Death." At the Globe, Northampton, 7 and 10:10.

Papillon +++
Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman star in this epic adventure film, based on the memoirs of the late Henri Charriere, who at the age of 25 was sentenced to a life of hard labor in the French penal colony of Guiana. Unlike most protagonists in this age of the anti-hero, McQueen displays the virtues which enable him to overcome what appear to be insurmountable hardships and achieve freedom. Sometimes the flashbacks to Charriere's younger days in Paris appear obtuse; still the superb acting of McQueen and the sheer fascination with his struggle for freedom, save the film from mediocrity. Campus Cinemas.

Paper Chase +++
A drama exploring the rigors of a Harvard Law school student. Some excellent performances, especially John Houseman as a professor of contractual law. An interesting film, but the melodramatic finish leaves one wondering if the script writer didn't just run out of gas. Mountain Farms Mall.

Serpico ++
Al Pacino plays an honest cop who blows the whistle on police corruption in New York. A dramatically explosive film that documents Serpicos fight for his integrity and his life. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Sleeper ++++
Allen is the writer, director and star of this new film which finds him awakening in 2173 after being frozen for 200 years after an operation for an ulcer went amiss. This futuristic satire is full of the usual Allen one liners and sight gags, but with some Chaplinesque slapstick added. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Sleuth (1973) +++
This acrobatically cunning and intricately well directed film, starring Michael Caine and Laurence Olivier, has all the suspense any amateur Sherlock could ask for. The plot involves the plans of two masterminds who attempt to best one another at the others game. Superb acting. Thursday at 7 and 9:30 at the SUB.

Some Like it Hot (1959) ++++
Billy Wilders very funny film about two roaring twenties musicians who are on the Lam from a group of Chicago mobsters. Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon pose as unlikely members of an all-girl band in order to make their escape, but experience some difficulty in keeping up the pretense when they discover that Marilyn Monroe is also a member of the combo. A zany comedy with Marily giving one of her more memorable performances. Also starring George Raft and Joey Brown. Tuesday, 9:15 at Gamble Auditorium, Mount Holyoke.

The Sting ++++
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heros. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish, with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. It's an authentic look into the Thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Superdad +
"Fatuous Disney effort about all-American father who is spurred on to a togetherness campaign with his off-to-college daughter. He is a well-meaning boob, and Mama is wonderful. Uninspired, shopworn and superbad. Bob Crane and Barbara Rush. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Golda Meir resigns as Israeli government head

JERUSALEM (AP) — Premier Golda Meir announced yesterday she was resigning as head of the Israeli government.

The 75-year-old leader made the stunning announcement at a closed meeting of her Labor party executive, or governing council, Transport Minister Shimon Peres said. Then she walked out of the meeting.

Mrs. Meir told the party leadership she would not be premier of Israel's next cabinet, evidently because she was thwarted in the efforts she has been making for the past two months to put together a broad coalition government.

"This is my final decision," Mrs. Meir declared. Peres said "it would take a political miracle" to persuade Mrs. Meir to retain the premiership.

The surprise announcement came just two weeks after Defense Minister Moshe Dayan threw the Labor party into turmoil by refusing to join Israel's next cabinet.

Israel's state radio said Mrs. Meir would make her resignation formally to president Ephriam Katzir, the ceremonical head of state. The radio said she would probably meet Katzir Sunday night.

Mrs. Meir has led the Israeli government since 1969. Her refusal to form a new cabinet left the Labor party floundering without a clear successor, after dominating Israeli politics since the state was formed 25 years ago.

Peres said Mrs. Meir gave no detailed explanation of her walkout, but said she implied the reason was "the half-hearted reception" for her plans to form a minority government.

Neither the party nor ministers of the present caretaker cabinet indicated who might take over as premier. One of Mrs. Meir's aides speculated that Dayan might emerge as the new government leader.

Among the chief candidates for premier were Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir, Daputy Premier Yigal Allon and Foreign Minister Abba Eban.

"I have tried to serve to the best of my ability," the radio quoted Mrs. Meir as saying. In an inside report of the session where Mrs. Meir announced she was stepping down, the radio said she told her party colleagues, "It would have been better if I had resigned in August or September" — before the October Middle East war.

The Labor alignment, Israel's military leadership and Mrs. Meir's entire establishment have come under heavy public criticism for the lack of preparation for the war and early losses in the Arab onslaught.

But Mrs. Meir told the party, "I reject the claim that we have failed. We in the government have not failed and neither has anyone else," the radio quoted her as saying.

Party executives at the meeting said Mrs. Meir had announced a new minority cabinet — with Yitzhak Rabin, a former ambassador to Washington replacing Dayan as defense minister — and only later disclosed she would not continue as premier.

Gifford: 'Major discrepancy' in recent remarks by Quinn

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Massachusetts Common Cause chairman K. Dunn Gifford said Sunday that there is a "major discrepancy" in recent remarks made by state Attorney General Robert H. Quinn on the subject of his personal finances.

Quinn refuses to participate in a campaign monitoring project sponsored by Common Cause — yet said during a University of Massachusetts video taped program last week that he would be willing to make his personal finances public.

"I certainly want to go back to the Attorney General and clarify this apparent discrepancy," Gifford said.

"He told the student press at the University one thing; and then turned around and told Common Cause just about the opposite. We'll have to see whether he is or is not willing to release the requested information."

According to Gifford, 16 candidates for state constitutional offices, including Gov. Francis W. Sargent and Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael S. Dukakis have agreed to cooperate in reporting their campaign expenditures.

Christopher Sophinos, producer of WUMV's "Telepolitics" (UMass video production) of which Quinn was a guest last week, also said the discrepancy was "definite."

"I definitely have to say that he was positive in his response to a reporter's question about making public his personal finances," Sophinos said.

"After he answered 'sure', he didn't refute the fact that he would allow his finances looked at. He only raised the view that he couldn't see the purpose this would serve."

Quinn's actual response to the question of his willingness to disclose personal expenditures to the public was: "Sure, but what has that got to do with my ability to be Governor?"

"It isn't a question of whether I'm richer or poorer than the other fellow in dollars and cents. It's a question as to whether I'm richer or poorer in ideas and the ability to implement them."

Sophinos suggested that Quinn might have changed his stand on the issue in a manner which would be more accomodating to UMass students.

"It has been proven by Watergate that politicians don't always say what they feel — it just goes to show the public what a politician is capable of doing," he said.

"WUMV will be interviewing all the gubernatorial candidates this spring, and it is important that our reporters asking the questions do look for the discrepancies and point them out.

"And we do expect each of the candidates to respond to the questions as honestly as possible; it's

Grand jury report discusses executive clemency

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two subjects of the sealed grand jury report on President Nixon involve discussion of executive clemency and the raising of hush money, sources indicated Sunday.

The 50-page report was handed to U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica Friday by a grand jury that also indicted sevenformer Nixon aides and campaign officials for allegedly trying to block the investigation of the Watergate break-in.

It was learned that the 23-member grand jury which spent 20 months investigating the break-in and cover-up was determined to take some action based upon its findings concerning the President.

The panel finally voted to give a secret report to Sirica with a recommendation he pass it to the House impeachment inquiry. Special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski advised the jurors that the House was the proper forum for any action against the President.

Sirica could decide as early as Monday whether to follow the grand jury's recommendation.

The Washington Post and New York Times reported that the jurors concluded in the report that Nixon was involved in the conspiracy to cover-up.

There were reports that the panel also suggested the judge make its presentment public if he sends it to the House.

Sirica ordered all parties in the case to remain silent and little of the substance of the secret report could be learned.

The indictment indicated that the grand jury, which had access to White House tapes, accepted Dean's version of key events in the alleged cover-up and conspiracy, a version that says Nixon was more involved than he has so far admited.

Heath may resign soon

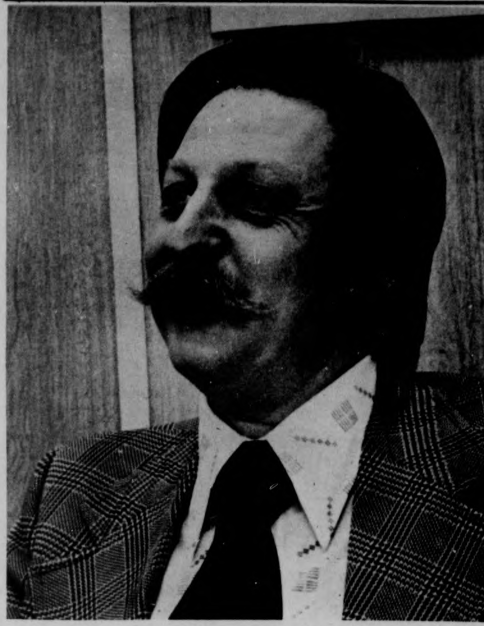
LONDON (AP) - Prime Minister Edward Heath has failed to win the support he needs from the Liberal party to stay in office and he will resign soon, a senior politician in Heath's Conservative party said Sunday night.

The source, who was informed about discussions Heath held with his cabinet, said Queen Elizabeth II is now expected to ask Harold Wilson, leader of the opposition Labor party, to form a government when Heath resigns.

Wilson returned from his farm outside London Sunday night to await a summons from the queen, perhaps as early as Monday. His Labor party won the most seats in Thursday's general election but fell short of a parliamentary majority.

See earlier story, Page 11.

WHERE ARE THEY? About 200 people waited in eager anticipation for a streaker extravaganza last Friday. A rumored 15 people were to flash from Whitmore to Goodell during the break between 12:05 and 12:20. However the hasty deed was called off when a police car was coincidentally parked in back of Herter Hall. The rumor had obviously been well spread because one student showed up with a portable videotape set. Photo and copy by Bill Foster



Dr. Robert Sutton

Music head discusses job so far

By JANIS BERGMAN

"Yet it wounded him still to think that he would never be but a shy guest at the feast of the world's culture."

-JAMES JOYCE, Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man

"I found things out that were pleasantly surprising."

That was one reason why Dr. Robert Sutton recently decided to accept the chairmanship of the University Music Department. Dr. Sutton had been a teacher at the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester, one of the oldest and most prestigious institutions of it's kind.

"I didn't think that it was a likely thing that I would come here." After more thought, however, Dr. Sutton found the post attractive, largely due to "a very positive first impression" of the faculty and administration here.

Dr. Sutton was one among several people approached for the position. When finally offered the job, Dr. Sutton asked for exposure to the student community here before making his decision.

A schedule was therefore arranged for Dr. Sutton to attend a series of rehersals, classes and performances. "This was the critical and decisive factor in my decision to accept the job," he said.

Having been at UMass six months now, Dr. Sutton says he is satisfied with the faculty, students and "supportive efforts of the administration."

Dr. Sutton's background affords him a genuine understanding of the needs and potentialities of the music department. He is now concentrating his efforts on strengthening graduate studies in the form of larger summer sessions as well as the development of a music program for doctoral candidates, a degree not offered by any of the six New England state schools.

"This department owes the university as much service as it can possibly give and I hope to be able to do more." This was Dr. Sutton's response to the problem of accomodating non-music majors with music appreciation courses.

In reference to a department specialty, Dr. Sutton expressed his desire to see "an even greater expansion in offerings in Afro-American music and jazz — one in which we can take great pride."

Dr. Sutton believes that the kind of student that the music department attracts is "highly motivated, having to spend considerable amounts of time in solitude — I suppose they do feel more like a part of the department than the university."

Changes in attitude sighted in Israel

By ROBERTA MARTONE

The Israeli-Arab war has at least brought about a definite change in attitude for most Israelis, said Amos Elon, a journalist from Israel, in a speech sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program last night.

According to Elon, the post-war "period of grace when it was fashionable to be a jew" in Israel, is over.

"We must face the changes and the disillusionments they bring with them", Elon said.

Some illusions Elon cited were: the feeling that Israel could deter the Arab aggression; that the Israeli status-quo could continue in a "diplomatic vacuum"; that, in case of war, the United States and Europe would view Israel with sympathy as in the past.

More optimistically, Elon said there was a "ray of light" from the support given by Jews in the US and Europe.

Next, Elon spoke of the predicament of the younger generation because of the Israeli victory in 1969. He also compared the previous Arab-Israeli fighting with the current war. He said that this war seemed to be the most brutal and senseless.

Yet, Elon stressed that "the basic humanity and sacredness of life has not been cheapened. The Roots of Judaism remain."

Elon also drew a comparison between Israel today and Czechoslovakia in 1938. He said, although there are obvious differences, there are also similarities between the two countries. He cited, as examples, a hostile minority and "familiar rhetoric", but said the comparison shouldn't be drawn too far.

More positively, Elon said he was hopeful because the Arabs are now saying they want peace, and are agreeing to attend a peace conference. Active peace negotiations by the US have also lifted his hopes.

Finally, Elon said there were "new voices in the Arab world", and quoted articles written by Arabs that were pro Israel.

Elon concluded, "We must now look for new modes of compromise. We must try and find new and imaginative avenues that will lead us out of this deadlock." He then opened the floor to questions.

Umies still struggling with parking policy

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

More and more University of Massachusetts students are having their day in court.

No, the crime rate is not on the rise. But ticketing and towing are certainly topping all other activities on campus.

The problem is the unpopular parking policy's present implementation. Many are obviously at odds with the UMass administration--when you consider the fact that over 18,000 ticket violations have been recorded in Hampshire County District Court during the past three months while Amherst Towing seems to be having a field day at the students' expense.

But the parking policy is not being challenged nearly so much as its enforcement--which some consider unethical.

This week the Collegian explored in a series of interviews with the student attorney, a student senate leader and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery whether the policy should continue to be enforced through the local court system or be dealt with by the University.

"The principle problem of the system at the moment is that the University is trying to enforce by club," says student attorney Richard Howland.

"If the system is desireable, it would work. Anything that would generate 18,000 tickets in three odd months can't be working all that well."

Howland said the University must solve the problem without going through the Hampshire County District Court system.

The University should adopt a self-enforcing system, but with all tow zone violations being strictly enforced, he said.

"But we need an operational system--one that we can use with reasonable assurance as a form of tax to implement our own goals. It's all part of the same package." he said.

"If your option for transit is personal, then we have a right to assess you and use the tax as an instrument of social policy.

"Transit and pollution are tied up, and there is nothing wrong to use one to reduce the other--because they are inextricably wound together."

David Booker, speaker of the UMass undergraduate sentate, urges that parking policy troubles "should be kept in the house," rather than being decided in court.

"Every time a student goes over to Northampton court, he gets a record. At an institution of higher education, I'd much rather see this type of thing kept in the house," Booker said.

"There should be a consciousness on this campus which would accept a fair parking proposal and live with it. If they think it's fair, they're going to live with it and not fight it. We don't really need strong penalties to enforce it."

Booker added that the manner in which the University formulated the parking policy was "questionable ethics."

"There was a totalbreak-down in student governance-it was drawn up in secrecy without the students' imput," he charged.

"And there's a strong question as to why those tactics were involved--it's too good to be incidental."

"We can't have a self-enforcing policy because it won't work," declares Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

"We can't depend upon good will to make it work, because unfortunately we just don't deal with good will anymore.

"What do you do for the guy who pays money to park in a convenience spot--and when he comes into the parking lot, his spot is taken?"

Bromery said that the strict enforcement of the parking policy stemmed from the feedback of the people who expressed their opinions on the matter.

It would be ideal to set up a system within the University as an alternative to the criminal law system, Bromery agreed, "but not feasible."

Streaking: What the dickens is it all about?

By MIKE HENAULT

Rumors, facts, and fabrications swung widly in all parts of campus this weekend. Twenty-five in Central. Seven with torches in streak-in at the Campus Pond Saturday night. It was too much to track down and becoming increasingly evident that everybody had their own streaking story and it was probably more fantastic than the one you just heard.

Just everybody at UMass has figured out that streaking has arrived.

Since the practice began last fall at the University of Florida streaking has spread northward with the warm weather.

Everywhere this reporter went last weekend people were talking about the newest cultural "fad" to hit this campus.

"What's the record so far?"

"252?"

"No, I heard 400 did it at North Carolina."

Reaction to streaking ranged from wild exhiliration on the part of some streakers to disqust on the faces of a few observers.

The most frequent responses to the sight of the naked runners stacked itself somewhere between neutrality and a pleasant smirk.

Speculation ultimately arises: why do people do it? For crystal ball gazing this reporter talked to several local acedemics and streakers to see what they thought about the developing situation.

"It's exhibitionism" says Psychology Professor Alan Lieberman, "But it's not too serious and non pathological."

Professor Mario DePillis, a social historian, said that streaking was of no real social significance.

"It's much the same as gold fish swallowing in the forties or panty raids in the fifties", Dr. DePillis said. Well, it's March, you know, and people like to be outdoors."

Peter Peterson 18, of John Adams (see story aside) considered by some the king of UMass streakers, gave his impressions of the newest thing students can do on this campus. "It's great," he said, you feel really free."

Psycologist Norman Simonson commented,"Well, it's more interesting than jogging."

Mary Jane Canavan, 20, who may have the distinction of being the first woman streaker at UMass., said 'I just wanted to do it. "Ms. Canavan thought there was really nothing behind the whole thing." "It's just for the sake of breaking a stupid law."

Stephen Nissenbaum, associate professor of American Cultural History said that people streak for different reasons. Nissenbaum, co-author of a recent book entitled Salem Possessed, claimed that streaking has taken a different direction. Commenting on the incident of the three "advertised" Southwest streakers Nissenbaum said," They originally began with the idea of surprise,. "They (streakers) wanted to begin with the idea of surprise,. "they (streakers) wanted to "freak people out," as the movement moves it seems to reflect the various hang ups of the respective communities."

In a comment about streaking Pete Peterson claimed that streaking had to be done in a group, "Otherwise it's perverted".

Some generalizations made about streakers don't seem to hold true. One was that females were usually sober when they went streaking and males got drunk or stoned before they decided to make the naked run. Although the Southwest group of streakers have no official rules or feelings on the subject, they claim they have been streaking straight.

Nissenbaum theorized further that streaking is a social act unlike skinny dipping as some streakers claim. "It's a personal statement", he added.

Closeup of a Streaker

"I read about it, I thought it was stupid". That's what Pete had to say about "streaking" before he tried it.

Peter Peterson (no joke), 18, resides in 204 John Adams and is in the process of starting a streakers club on campus.

Peter, along with two companions, gave a demonstration of their skills Friday night in the Southwest dormitory area. Before he, Bill Carroll and a friend who wished to remain nameless did, they had their intension announced over WMUA.

Then they 'struck'. Before an estimated crowd of three hundred people (with many more hanging from the windows of the triple tower area) Peter mounted the pyramid structures and waved to the cheering crowd like he had won the decathlon. He continued the process several times in the thirty degree weather despite the fact that he just recently got over a case of bronchitis.

In an interview later Peterson said, "It's definitely legitimate and it's growing". Peterson added, "every generation grows freer and freer". Mr. Peterson agreed that streaking is a fad, but said that it was important and showed that people were upset with "society" and wanted "a change."

Peterson, a pre-med major, says he really always wanted to be an actor.

SW coordinator

Trying to strengthen the "education experience"

Within the confines of a corner office in John Adams, Academic Affairs' Coordinator, Maurianne Adams, works on programs for the 5600 students in Southwest so they can have an alternative to University education.

The purpose of Adams' job is to turn a cold, concrete, urban area, into a "living and learning" environment. She, and the Policy Board of SW, which consists of SW heads of residence, students, faculty, and Center representatives, have two objectives. They must try to serve the life needs of the students. And, they must try to supplement what the University offers.

The five Centers and the Houses are the two right arms of the Academic Affairs Office. They carry out the goals by offering courses and colloquium during the school term as well as during inter-session. Enrollment in courses this semester is over 2,000 students.

Students, with the help of the Office, organize faculty, graduate students and other resource people to teach. Topics range from Theater and Art, to Urban Studies, Women's Studies, and Racial Understanding; making the program appealing to every student.

This semester, emphasis is on strengthening the "educational experience in the Houses." Melvill is developing an International Studies Program, James has the Environmental Science Program and Racial Understanding is in McKimmie House. A program in Urban and Community Studies is being considered for the towers.

The towers tend to be the most difficult to deal with because the students are not a strong unit. Most are first year students, and the turn-over each semester is greater than that in any other dorm. Therefore, Adams plans to develop a First Year Program in these dorms. The Program would answer questions dealing with living and learning problems in SW and the University.

Adams hopes that with student involvement, a strong, legitimate, academic program will develop in three to four years.

Project pulse

Umies polled on impeachment

On February 26, Project PULSE conducted an opinion survey of UMass undergraduates and graduates. The purpose of the survey was to collect student opinion data on the question of impeachment of Nixon and related political issues.

A random sample of UMass, Amherst, undergraduates and graduates was taken for use in the survey. 142 students were contacted.

A summary of major points from the collected data follow. A more detailed report is forthcoming.

1. 95 percent of those contacted considered themselves to be at least somewhat politically aware of national and international events.

2. 82 percent felt that Nixon has not been honest with the people in regard to Watergate, while 10 percent felt that he was somewhat dishonest. 70 percent felt that Nixon was personally involved in or had knowledge of the Watergate affair when it occurred, and 80 percent felt that he was responsible for or aware of the cover-up of the incident when the cover-up occured. Futhermore, 81 percent felt that his involvement warrants his impeachment or resignation.

3. To the question, "How severe do you think the damage would be to the nation if the president were to be impeached," 25 percent responded "moderately severe," 32 percent "slightly damaging," and 26 percent "insignificant damage." To the question "If Nixon should vacate his office, how do you feel about Gerald Ford becoming president," 39 percent said that Ford is acceptable, and 29 percent disapproved of the idea. Somewhat surprisingly, 71 percent felt that the question of Nixon's resignation or impeachment would not have arisen if it had not been for the Watergate affair.

4. 59 percent of those who were contacted did not feel that the Watergate scandal may have taken such prominence as a result of a power play on the part of the Democrats, while 22 percent did. 77 percent felt that political reporting in this country was at least somewhat biased, while 17 percent felt that it was not biased. 51 percent felt that the Watergate and related issues have very much caused the Republican party to lose its credibility with the public, and 39 percent felt that this was so only to an extent.

5. 82 percent said that they believed that political subterfuge (spying, etc.) is a common occurrence in government.

Whitmore changes now under way

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

The reorganization of Whitmore administration went into the talking stages at the beginning of this semester. Progress in this reorganization will be reported each week in the Collegian.

Steps being taken in the reorganization of the administrative structure at UMass were listed by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in a Collegian interview Friday. Bromery said he hopes planning stages will be completed by the end of this semester and that the new organizational set-up would be implemented this summer.

Steps listed include:

—1) Defining functions of the present administration.

—2) Defining functional areas which the administration should cover.

—3) Defining the relationships between functional areas.

—4) Discussion on alternatives for developing a framework for the reorganized administration.

Bromery said the next step would be to discuss the reorganization with individuals within the administration, faculty members and representatives of the Student Government Association and other student groups.

Tea Party for you

By JEAN MURRAY
Tea Party Member

The Tea Party is the only visable radical electoral politics to date in Amherst. The party originated in the winter of 1972 when Ken Kesey drew a post-acid crowd to Amherst College.

Kesey abandoned his apolitical "Beatles" peace philosophy and advocated that students peaceably control their own community life thru the new youth ballot. This turnabout astonished the crow, 2000 of whom drifted away in disappointment that electric Koolade was not served.

Kesey charied an informal convention of 1000 who chose an enthusistic committee to germinate a local party. The committee worked for months writing a scholarly draft platform and called a spring convention. No energy gathered and all save one of the original committee lost heart and abandoned the project.

The Tea Party has endured because its lucid statement of small-town political philosophy has inspired a few die-hards to stick it out in the Amherst doldrums. The party's present nature is simply (1) a basic statement of values centering on true self-government, (2) a large platform of specific planks proposing to realize self-government and the mellow life, (3) a small sometimes-active membership including one local party at Hampshire College, and (4) a much larger cheering section of students and disaffected townspeople of all ages and stations. Tea Party members are spokespeople for the re-education phase of radical electoral poltics. The party is not yet a political movement except as part of the national picture.

A member is one who: (1) shares Tea Party values, (2) takes action on the platform or his-her own plank, and (3) does not actively oppose any Tea Party plank. Because the Party has no power-structure members hold one vote in all decision-making processes.

Women voters to hold crime lecture

The Amherst League of Women Voters will hold an open meeting on Wednesday, March 13, at 8:00 p.m. in the Jr. H.S. Auditorium. Mr. J.H. Daingerfield Perry will speak on crime and corrections and present a slide show, "30,000,000 Rip-Off." A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Dain Perry was appointed Deputy Director of the Massachusetts Council on Crime and Correction in February, 1973. Currently President of the Boston Jaycees, Mr. Perry's involvement in prisons began in March, 1972 when Commissioner Boone asked the Jaycees to enter MCI Walpole just after the St. Patrick's Day riot.

He then formed a Correctional Reform Committee in the Boston Jaycees and worked in organizing a job market for parolees and setting up a Speakers Bureau on Massachusetts Correctional Reform.

A resident of Boston's South End, Mr. Perry attended King's College, Taunton, England, and the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland.

Kay Moran is in charge of the program. Refreshments will be served.

Kissinger talks with German leaders

BONN, Germany (AP) - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arrived here Sunday night, expecting a breakthrough in the deadlocked European security conference negotiations in Geneva.

After six months of virtual intransigence between East and West, both sides are now prepared to make concessions according to a senior American official in the Kissinger entourage.

Kissinger was to confer with Foreign Minister Walter Scheel and Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Besides the security conference, topics of discussion were expected to include European unity, the Atlantic alliance, and the possibility of a mutual reduction of American and Soviet troops in Europe.

The secretary of state flew to Bonn from Amman, Jordan, where Kissinger announced that the United States and Jordan had reached "complete identity of views on all subjects." He did not elaborate. Earlier he said that King Hussein would visit Washington on March 12.

Kissinger previously stopped in Damascus, where senior American officials said a "very wide gap" still separated Syria and Israel. Kissinger has been trying to get the two nations to agree to a troop disengagement pact for the Golan Heights.

The secretary's Bonn visit came just before two days of North Atlantic Council talks in Brussels. Scheel will preside over the discussions since it is the presidency of the key European decision-making body.

Two days before the Kissinger visit, Scheel and his French counterpart, Michel Jobert, failed to make any apparent progress in Bonn talks on the vital U.S.-European energy co-operation issue.

Jobert said Friday he and Scheel did not even discuss the French refusal to go along with the eight other Common Market members on energy cooperation with Washington.

Kissinger's plans to inform Bonn and the Brussels NATO council on his Middle East talks apparently serve a dual purpose, observers said.

The first concerns restoration of West European confidence in U.S. defense and security consultation after the European furor over Washington's failure to give advance word of a worldwide U.S. military standby alert ordered during the October war.

Bonn officials said the other aim is to help the Brussels foreign ministers decide Monday and Tuesday on the Common Market's future role in helping secure the peace in an area vital to Europe's trade and security interest.

The officials said they expected a joint European policy on trade, industrial and political cooperation with the Arabs, an aim made more urgent by an Arab offer of future oil supplies in return for industrialization help.

U.S. and the world

346 Killed in jet crash

PARIS (AP) — A packed Turkish jetliner exploded and slammed into a wooded slope north of Paris Sunday, spewing debris and bodies for miles. French authorities said all 346 aboard were killed, making it the worst civil air disaster in history.

"It exploded with a great roar," said a witness.

The trijet DC10 had taken off only five minutes earlier from Paris' Orly Airport after a stop on its flight from Istanbul to London when it crashed into the forest under sunny skies, rescue officials said.

Officials of Turkish Airlines said 334 passengers and 11 crew members were aboard the fat-bellied aircraft, which was reported loaded to capacity. But Aymar Archille-Found, secretary of state at the French Transportation Ministry, later told newsmen on the scene there were 335 passengers.

It was not immediately known whether any Americans were among them.

"I was looking at the plane as it came over the area," said a witness. "It was still climbing. Then it suddenly pointed downward and crashed with a heavy explosion."

French officials said there was no immediate explanation for the crash. The Turkish communications minister, Ferda Guley, said in Ankara that "considering the world situation" he was not ruling out sabotage.

"The fact that debris of bodies was found in a village more than 10 kilometers six miles from the accident tends to prove the explosion occurred in flight," said Archille-Found.

Another witness, who ran to the site right after the airliner crashed, said:

"Through the black smoke I saw blood, blood everywhere. Bits of bodies, scarred trees, shards of metal. It was horrible."

Pieces of the red-and-white plane jammed between trees. Cushions and other material from the interior hung draped over the stark winter branches. Parts of bodies were buried in the undergrowth.

Rescuers carried away bodies in blankets and paper bags. Firemen said that when the American-made plane broke up into small pieces, it flattened a part of the forest, a favorite picnic ground for Parisians.

Rescuers reported strollers in a field nine miles south of the main wreckage found seven bodies. Helicopters hovered over the area to look for the scattered bodies and debris.

The Turkish airline officials declined to reveal the identities or nationalities of passengers and crew.

A spokesman for the British airlines said about 200 were Britons. They were to have taken other flights to London but a strike of the British airways led them to converge on Paris from various points in Europe to take the Turkish het, the spokesman said.

The British rugby team, which played against France here Saturday, intended to travel on the plane but could not get bookings, airport sources said.

The highest previous known crash toll was 176, records show. That count was recorded twice: when a Soviet plane crashed near Moscow in October 1972, and when a Jordanian Boeing 707 went down at Kano, Nigeria, in January 1973.

The plane smashed to the ground shortly before noon in the Forest of Ermenonville 24 miles north of the French capital. It fell near a highway and three villages, officials reported, but the point of impace lay in an uninhabited spot and there were no reports of casualties on the ground.

It was the second crash of a Turkish Airlines plane in just over a month. A plane on an internal Turkish flight from Izmir to Instanbul crashed Jan. 26, killing 63 persons.

The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board in Washington announced it was sending a three-man team to France to observe the investigation into the crash.

Addict is exorcised

NEW YORK (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest fighting drugs in his East Harlem parish used exorcism to try to banish the evil addiction and he says the ritual brought some success — and a threat.

"It seemed nobody was doing what they should to fight drugs," said the Rev. Phil Treanor. "We thought maybe God could do something about it."

He held his first exorcism in May, 1972. Surronunded by other priests and nuns, Father Treanor called on God to oust the devils of dope and then threw a vial of blood on the door of a building that had been a hangout for dealers and addicts.

'Bodies hung from trees...'

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

MORTEFONTAINE, France (AP) - Bodies hung from trees. A red shirt, a yellow dress - death's leftovers blowing crazily in the wind over a charred forest graveyard.

On the ground, stumps, trees sliced off at the middle and burned black. At the base of them, like offerings in a gruesome ritual, more parts of bodies, more bits of clothing, more pieces of metal.

History's worst plane crash in a damp forest north of Paris went beyond statistics and into horror.

Firemen tucking remains into yellow plastic body bags turned and gulped in nausea.

A French cabinet minister authoritatively strode toward the devastated earth and then paled when he saw where the Turkish jetliner had crashed.

"Oh, Mother of God," moaned a policeman when told his unit would have to go into the trees after what was left of the bodies.

The plane sheared a 300-yard-long clearing in the Ermenonville Forest, gouging the soft terrain and leaving the ground smoking hours later.

FEO allocation off to rough start

WASHINGTON (AP) - In ordering gasoline withdrawn from stocks to increase February supplies, the Federal Energy Office was acting like a worried father taking money from his savings to feed the family until his raise comes through.

The FEO knows that can't go on forever, so the office expects to write fewer, and smaller emergency checks on its gasoline account as its allocation program shapes up.

In February, the allocation program got off to a rough start, plagued by unreliable data which nevertheless showed a lopsided distribution pattern.

To relieve the largest gasoline shortages, energy chief William E. Simon finally ordered some 7.8 million barrels of gasoline drawn from stocks aad distributed among 26 states and the District of Columbia.

That represented about 3.5 per cent of the nation's total gasoline stocks of some 221 million barrels.

But in fact, the draw-down was considerably more significant than it appeared.

Most of the gasoline stocks are not actually available for use because much of it is tied up all the time in pipelines, storage tanks, refineries and tank-trucks.

The FEO itself bases its planning on estimates by the National Petroleum Council - industry advisers to the government - that gasoline stocks cannot be reduced much below 195 million barrels without starting to disrupt the distribution system and create shortages.

By that reckoning, stocks of 221 million barrels really represent only about 26 million barrels of available gasoline, and subtracting 7.8 million barrels would take a big 30 per cent bite out of that gasoline-in-the-bank.

John C. Sawhill, deputy administrator of the FEO, said last Wednesday that the FEO may have to tap gasoline stocks again, especially if fuel demand goes up.

Fuel-saving measures have succeeded in cutting gasoline consumption as much as 13 or 14 per cent in recent weeks, but such restraint may not continue once spring weather arrives.

At the moment, gasoline stocks are about the same as they were last year but that offers little reassurance. Last year they werea far below normal, causing fears of shortages even without a cut-off of Arab oil.

Without Arab oil, U.S. refineries have been operating at only about 84 per cent of their capacity, so it will be a strain for them to meet this year's gasoline demand no matter how hard they try.

Last Jan. 21, answering questions for a Senate subcommittee, Sawhill said the FEO policy was to assume "that inventories will not be allowed to fall below the average levels of the last two years.

In other words, if the inventories cannot be kept healthy any other way, gasoline rationing may be imposed.

The energy crisis

Energy week

Crisis over, but gas prices up

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gasoline prices continued their upward climb with a bound as the new month began. And President Nixon downgraded the energy situation from a crisis to a serious problem.
